SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Navy to carry this act into effect and to decide whether each applicant, under this act, in his department is entitled to the benefit of this act. This act and the evidence in favor of each claimant's claim shall be liberally and favorably construed in favor of the applicant, and in cases of doubt the applicant shall be given the benefit of the doubt. If the official award of the medal of honor to the applicant, or the official notice to him thereof, shall appear to show that the medal of honor was awarded to the applicant for such an act as is required by the provisions of this act, it shall be deemed sufficient to entitle the applicant to such special pension without further investigation. Otherwise all official correspondence, orders, reports, recommendations, requests, and other evidence now on file in any public office or department shall be considered, and it shall be liberally construed and considered in favor of the applicant as aforesaid and without regard to technical requirements; but no evidence not now on file, as aforesaid, shall be admitted or considered. A certificate of service and of the act of heroism, gallantry, bravery, or intrepidity for which the medal of honor was awarded, and of enrollment under this act and of the right of the special pensioner to be entitled to and to receive the special pension herein granted, shall be furnished each person whose name shall be so entered on said roll. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall deliver to the Commissioner of Pensions a certified copy of each of such of said certificates as he may issue, as aforesaid, and the same shall be full and sufficient authority to the Commissioner of Pensions for the payment by him to the beneficiary named in each such certificate the special pension herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That each such surviving person whose name shall have been entered on said roll in accordance with this act shall be entitled to and shall receive and be paid by the Commissioner of Pensions in the Department of the Interior, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a special pension of $10 per month for life, payable quarterly yearly. The Commissioner of Pensions shall make all necessary rules and regulations for making payment of such special pensions to the beneficiaries thereof.

Such special pension shall begin on the day that such person shall file his application for enrollment on said roll in the office of the Secretary of War or of the Secretary of the Navy after the passage and approval of this act, and shall continue during the life of the beneficiary.

Such special pension shall not deprive any such special pensioner of any other pension or of any benefit, right, or privilege to which he is or may hereafter be entitled under any existing or subsequent law, but shall be in addition thereto.

The special pension allowed under this act shall not be subject to any attachment, execution, levy, tax, lien, or detention under any process whatever.

SEC. 4. That in case any person has been awarded two or more medals of honor, he shall not be entitled to and shall not receive more than one such special pension.

Rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby modified so that they shall conform hereto.

SEC. 6. That this act shall take effect immediately.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "liberally," strike out the words "and favorably."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] think that this bill ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will reserve his objection, I will ask to be heard for 12 minutes upon this bill.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be granted 12 minutes, so that I may be heard upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 12 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it seems like a remarkable statement that the United States is the only civilized country around the world that does not give a substantial recognition to its scanty array of medal of honor heroes. And this statement is still more remarkable when we consider that in our seven years' War for Independence, in our War of 1812, in our War with Mexico, and in the great Civil War it was the volunteer soldier who led the battle lines. There is still another deplorable condition in our scanty recognition of the men of blood and brawn who have done valorous deeds in war's horrid front. In all our wars from the birth of the Republic to this hour the Government of the United States has issued, all told, only 3,088 medals of honor, and given to no single medal winner any financial recognition or aid. This bill, if enacted into law, will be the most exacting in its requirements of any nation or empire around the world. This bill relates exclusively to those who have been awarded medals of honor and who have served in any war, whether in the Civil War, the Samoan disturbance, the Chinese insurrection, the Cuban insurrection, the Indian wars, the Philippine war, or the Spanish-American War.

All medals of honor heretofore awarded have been granted under a joint resolution of Congress approved July 12, 1862, and act of Congress March 3, 1863. A correct understanding of the present situation in relation to the existing medals of honor is necessary in order that the provisions of this bill may be entirely clear. It will be noticed that this bill makes no reference to those who may be hereafter awarded medals of honor. These will be adequately cared for in a bill now pending, prepared and introduced by Mr. HAY, of Virginia, the experienced and able chairman of the Military Committee—H. R. 5388. The provisions of the bill now under consideration are all medals granted and all benefits conferred must be in strict accord with basic laws, with the President's orders, with the rulings and regulations of the Secretaries of War and Navy. All heroic soldiers whose names shall be entered on the roll hereby established shall have performed deeds of valor at least equal to, if not greater than, those performed by wearers of the Iron Cross of Germany, the Cross of the Legion of Honor of France, or the Victoria Cross of England. To this end this bill requires that each person whose name shall be placed on the honor roll must have received a medal of honor for having in action involving actual conflict in battle distinguished himself conspicuously by gallantry or intrepidity, at the risk of his life, above and beyond the call of duty.

The words "in action" were requirements in both the basic laws which instituted the medal of honor. Gen. Schofield, commanding general of the Army, defined that medals of honor should be awarded for distinguished bravery "in action."

The Army Regulations of 1901 provided that medals of honor shall be awarded for most distinguished gallantry "in action." Subdivision 1 says "the service must have been performed 'in action.'" General Orders, No. 125, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant General's Office, December 11, 1902, say "the regulations of the President are based on the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, which authorized the President to present medals of honor to such as most distinguished themselves 'in action.'"

To the limited number of soldiers who have been awarded medals of honor under existing laws and who are not excluded by the rigid rules of this bill and who have attained the age of 65 years, it is proposed that they shall be given a special pension of $10 per month. All heroic history is crowded with instances where soldiers and sailors, for exceptionally heroic deeds, have received high promotions, and in some instances their blood has been ennobled and they have been given dukedoms and kingdoms. The very foundation of the title to all real estate in England was the feudal system, under which the lands of the nation were given to knightly soldiers for valorous deeds.

Take, for illustration, the law for the Legion of Honor in France, instituted by the great Napoleon May 19, 1802. National lands providing 200,000 francs of income were at first set apart for each of 15 cohorts of the order. Afterwards the revenues and property of King Louis Philippe, which had been restored to the State, were added to the reserves to pay the pensions of the wearers of this decoration. Each grand officer was given a pension of 5,000 francs, each commandant 2,000 francs, each officer 1,000 francs, each legionary 250 francs. The highest decorated officer was given a pension of $915 per year and the common soldier $50 per year. Please compare the vast number whom France has decorated in this and other orders and the vast amount she has paid them as pensions with the small number of medals of honor the United States has granted for all her wars up to date, with no special pensions whatever.

In 1810 the first class already exceeded by 19,000 the limits fixed by law. In 1843 the Legion of Honor counted 80 Knights of the Grand Cross, 196 grand officers, 803 commanders, 4,454 officers, and 43,884 knights. (Page 91, Burke.) On November 30, 1845, about 50,227 persons were in possession of the medal. The amount of pension then paid out was 5,975,000 francs.

CONFEDERATE STATES OF AMERICA.

The Confederate Congress authorized the bestowal of medals and badges of distinction "for courage and good conduct on the field of battle." The following is a copy of the act:

The Congress of the Confederate States of America do enact, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to bestow medals with proper devices upon such officers of the armies of the Confederate States as shall be conspicuous for courage and good conduct on the field of battle; and also to confer a badge of distinction upon one private or noncommissioned officer of each company after every signal victory it shall have assisted to achieve. (Approved, Oct. 13, 1862.)

This act of the Confederate Congress was published in an order from the adjutant and inspector general's office at Richmond, November 22, 1862.

Under these rules by General Order No. 31 of October 3, 1863, 12 pages of the official reports, pages 829 to 840, both inclusive, are occupied by the names of 699 Confederate soldiers who were placed on the Confederate roll of honor for gallant services in the Battle of Chickamauga. For like heroic services and gallant deeds the soldiers of the Union Army in that battle received, all told, nine medals of honor as shown by the official lists.

ENGLAND.

Among many military orders, decorations, pensions, and vast pecuniary rewards given by England to her soldier heroes the one most generally known is the Victoria Cross, which was instituted by Queen Victoria by royal warrant given at Buckingham Palace, January 29, 1856, wherein she provided that those who particularly signalized themselves should receive the decoration which should be highly prized and greatly sought after by the officers and men of her navy and military services, to be designated as the "Victoria Cross," and by the fourteenth section of her royal warrant provided that a special pension of £10 ($50) a year should be granted to the wearer of the cross from the date of the act by which the decoration was gained, and it was further ordered that an additional special pension of £5 ($25) should be granted for each extra clasp or bar which might be awarded for additional acts of bravery. It was also ordered that the special pension may be increased to £50 ($250) a year when the recipient is incapacitated by old age or ill health. The rules provide that if a man died in winning the Victoria Cross the decoration should be given to his relatives. See book of the Victoria Cross, A. L. Hayden, London, 1906. Also see Burke's Peerage, page 2589.

I will not burden the RECORD by allusion to the decorations given in England to the officers of the Royal Naval Reserve; the decorations for the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve; for the decorations of the Order of the Bath; to other medals, annuities, and gratuities for conspicuous gallantry in action.

HOW ABOUT GERMANY?

The award of the Iron Cross carries with it an allowance of 3 to 6 marks monthly. Wearers of the Iron Cross receive a small gratuity or pension if they have not arisen above noncommissioned rank. Two other military orders in Germany are awarded pensions for conspicuous service. Their recipients, if noncommissioned, receive under different conditions 71 cents, $1.43, and $2.14 monthly, in addition to any pensions for invalidity or other causes, which they also draw.

The Franco-Prussian War lasted seven months. See "The Franco-German War, Von Moltke," page 420. The German losses in battle throughout the war, killed or died soon after, were 17,547; died of wounds eventually, 10,707. Harper's Book of Facts, article "Franco-Prussian War," in note near close of article. The total German troops in the war were 1,124,000. About 40,000 were decorated in 1870–71. The German Empire was very appreciative of her soldiers.

Compare the short duration of the war, the small number of losses even after counting in all who "died soon after" the war, the comparatively small number of troops in the army, and the large number of decorations and rewards given by Germany with the long years of war, not only the Civil War, but all the wars of the United States, the many millions of her men engaged, the terrible losses by death, not counting those who died "soon after."

Even Spain, that current writers of history regard as a decadent nation, is more generous with her soldiers than the United States.

SPAIN.

The Cruz Laureada de San Fernando, similar to the Victoria Cross of England and the Iron Cross of Germany, is granted to officers and privates of the Spanish Army and Navy for exceptional bravery in action. When granted to a private it carries 75 pesetas—peseta equals 18 cents—per month for life. Thus the special pension with this decoration for a private is $13.50 per month. If granted to an officer, the pension carried varies with the rank of the officer. The Cross of St. Ferdinand is given to reward heroic acts in the campaign and on the field of battle. There exist five classes for rewarding distinguished heroic acts in the campaign and on the field of battle for soldiers, officers from ensign up, chief officers, and generals, and to all is assigned a life pension in addition. They also give the right to special honors and promotions. The Cross of Maria Christiana is given to reward distinguished acts in a campaign, and he who receives it receives the full pay of the position immediately above that in which he serves; that is to say, if he is a lieutenant, that of captain; if captain, that of major, and so forth. See letter of Spanish ambassador, dated at Washington, D. C., December 4, 1913.

AUSTRIA.

The military medal of honor, also called medal of valor or merit, was founded by Emperor Joseph II as a reward for subofficers and privates, and is divided into gold and silver medals, according to the respective degrees of merit and distinction. To the first is attached an increase of pay of 50 per cent. The medals may be worn even after the owners have quitted the military service, in which case the holders of the golden medal enjoy the additional amount of one-half pay connected with it.

ITALY.

A decoration, a gold and silver medal, was instituted March 26, 1833. A special pension is attached of 100 lire for the gold and 50 lire for the silver. Medals for 1,000 men who landed at Marsala with Garibaldi were given, in 1865, by the law of January 22, a life pension of £1,000 to wearers of this decoration, and this pension by law of January 26, 1879, was extended to others.

RUSSIA.

Russia has several military orders and decorations with pensions. In the Order of St. George the silver cross for subofficers and men is accompanied by an additional pay of one-third. In the Imperial Order of St. George of Russia the senior knights of the four classes enjoy considerable pensions—those of the first class, 700; those of the second, 400; of the third, 200; and of the fourth, 100 rubles yearly. A ruble is valued at 77 cents. (Page 289, vol. 2, Historical Account of Orders of Knighthood—Sir Scott Hanson.)

DENMARK.

The medal is divided into two classes, each of which enjoys a pension for life of 30 and 15 thalers (90s. and 45s., English currency). (Page 80, Burke.)

GRAND DUCHY OF OLDENBURG.

There are two Knights of the Grand Cross, with annual pensions of 500 gold thalers (£75); two grand commanders, with annual pensions of 400 gold thalers (£60); four commanders, with annual pensions of 300 gold thalers (£45); eight Knights of the Small Cross, with annual pensions of 200 thalers (£40). (Page 168, Burke.)

I am not going into the Orient to find more examples to fortify my contention. We did not borrow our civilization or our laws or our religion from the Orient. Upton says China is the only country in either Europe or Asia in which the profession of arms is not honored. In China special acts of bravery are rewarded by permission to wear the yellow jacket.

THE COST.

A careful examination of the official lists of medals of honor, issued by W. H. Taft, then Secretary of War, shows that from the time the medal of honor was instituted up to September 1, 1904, there had been issued, all told, to Regulars and Volunteers of the Army—

Medals of honor totaling	2,570
Add all Army medals of honor in supplemental list Sept. 1, 1904, to Dec. 31, 1906	21
Add all Army medals of honor in supplemental list of Jan. 1, 1907, to Dec 31, 1909, last possible list	10
Total of all Army medals of honor issued to date of last report	2,601
Add all Navy medals of honor for service in battle (p. 98, Report of Navy Department, record of medals of honor, 1862 to May, 1910)	487
Grand total of all medals of honor, Army and Navy, to date of last report	3,088

On page 64 of the Report of the Board of Officers it is shown that 864 medals of honor were awarded to officers and men of the Twenty-seventh Maine Infantry under circumstances which will clearly exclude them from being entered upon the honor roll. Also, 29 medals of honor were bestowed as a reward for escorting the remains of Abraham Lincoln from Washington to Springfield, Ill.

The total number of surviving soldiers who would be available for medals of honor and pensions under this bill is only 95. Hence, if every medal winner should live to the end of the first year, the total cost of the bill would be $11,400.

CARNEGIE HERO FUND.

March 12, 1904, Andrew Carnegie, living in peace and prosperity, and having accumulated vast wealth, set aside $5,000,000 of first collateral 5 per cent bonds of the United States Steel Corporation to establish a fund to reward those who in civil life should perform deeds more or less akin to those who proudly wear the United States medal of honor. To Mark Casto, for rescuing some passengers who were stranded during a fierce gale, a gold medal and $6,500 in cash was given by the Carnegie Commission. To Edgar Littlefield (p. 35), for the rescue of eight passengers, was awarded a gold medal and $6,000 in cash. To the widow of Albert C. Zeiner, on account of his heroism, was given a silver medal and $800 in cash to pay debts with and $45 a month during her life, or until she remarries. To Rodney A. Perry, aged 13, a schoolboy, for saving another boy from drowning, was awarded a bronze medal and $2,000 in cash. To Nathaniel Duncan, colored, aged 41, for rescuing a well digger from a cave-in in a well, was given a gold medal and $2,000 in cash toward the purchase of a farm. To Miss Lena B. Hunsaker, aged 17, a schoolgirl, for attempting to save two other schoolgirls from drowning, although unsuccessful, was given a bronze medal and $2,000 in cash. These awards are a few taken at random from a record of similar acts. The Carnegie Hero Fund Commission report shows that up to January 31, 1913, the commission had awarded to heroes and their dependents—

Including pension payments	$671,041.00
To fund for relief of sufferers from disasters	174,462.06
For special purposes	200,000.00
Total	1,045,503.06

Mr. Carnegie's admiration of heroes and their heroic deeds has been so great that since the creation of the Carnegie Hero Fund of America he has established similar funds from his personal resources in Great Britain and Ireland, France, Germany, Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden, Switzerland, Italy, Norway, and Denmark.

Please compare these special pensions and awards which Mr. Carnegie has given to the doers of heroic deeds with the special pensions that the United States has not given to her heroes who wear her medals of honor for the most illustrious deeds in all history.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended 5 minutes. I am much interested in this bill and the gentleman's able presentation of it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Patriotism is the noblest emotion of the human heart. It is that deep devotion to country that is willing to sacrifice everything, even the only life on earth, for the vindication of national honor or the safety of humane government. Heroism is the best beloved child of patriotism. And it is vital to the perpetuity of a Government by the people to maintain the highest standard of patriotic sentiment among the people. If the hereditary monarchs of the Old World, whose rule is upheld by professional soldiers trained to kill for hire, maintain an extravagant medal-of-honor class, how much more vital is it to this Republic, where all power and control is lodged in the people?

Let us place on the statute books of the Nation a permanent recognition of the heroic soldiers of the Republic, not only as an act of justice to the men of valorous deeds in the past, but as an inspiring incentive to the stalwart young men of future wars. Let us teach our young men, both by example and law, to be patriotic and unafraid. Never shall it be said of us as Thackeray said of Louis XIV of France:

To fight and to run was our fate;
Our fortune and fame had departed;
And so perished Louis the Great;
Old, lonely, and half broken hearted.
His coffin they pelted with mud,
His body they tried to lay hands on;
And so having buried King Louis,
They loyally served his great-grandson.

[Applause.]

I present herewith also a table which has been prepared showing the conditions of the presentation of medals of honor in every civilized country on the globe. The table is self-explanatory. It will be seen that it represents the pensions paid first by France, being the largest of any country in the world, next by England, next by Germany, next by Russia, next by Spain, and then in China, where they get only the yellow shirt, and next Mexico, and down to the United States, which is represented by a cipher. Then there are the requirements for the medal of honor, commencing with the most strict ones in this country and running down to China, which is the last. This bill will cost only about $10,000 in order to accomplish its purpose.

Requirements for medals of honor of leading nations of Europe.

To gain the Congressional Medal of Honor the Congress of the United States requires that her hero must have—

"In action, in actual conflict with an enemy, distinguished himself, conspicuously, by gallantry or intrepidity, at the risk of his life, above and beyond the call of duty." (See Acts of Congress and rulings thereunder by Secretary of War and board of officers.)

The Confederate States placed on her roll of honor "such officers as shall be conspicuous for courage and good conduct on the field of battle, and one private or noncommissioned officer of each company after every signal victory it shall have assisted to achieve." (Act of Confederate Congress, October 13, 1862.)

FRANCE.

The Legion of Honor: "In times of war distinguished acts shall furnish a title for all the grades." (Title, section 5, Constitution and Document of France.)

ENGLAND.

The Victoria Cross: "To be awarded to those officers or men who have served us in the presence of the enemy and shall have then performed some signal act of valor or devotion to their country." (Section 5, Royal Warrant of Queen Victoria, January 29, 1856.)

GERMANY.

The Iron Cross: "To distinguish the merit which shall in the war be displayed either in actual fight with the enemy or also in the field or at home." (Decree of Frederick William, March 10, 1813.)

RUSSIA.

Awards the St. George medal for acts of heroism. (Naval Attaché, United States Embassy, February 18, 1914.)

SPAIN.

The Cruz Laureada de San Fernando "is granted officers and privates for exceptional bravery in action." (Letter of American Consul in Spain, December 8, 1913.)

CHINA.

China is the only country (in Europe and Asia) in which the profession of arms is not honored. (Upton, p. 21.)

MEXICO.

Mexico has no military decoration corresponding with the Congressional Medal of Honor of the United States. (Mullholland.)

The Congress of the United States requires a far higher degree of valor to gain the Congressional Medal of Honor than is required of any other nation.

Gen. Logan at the Battle of Atlanta, on the 22d of July, 1864, after the left of our army was demoralized, after McPherson was killed, when he rallied the staggering battalions and saved the left of Sherman's army, would have been entitled to a medal of honor under this bill. So would Gen. Pat Cleburn in the terrible struggle at Franklin, Tenn., November 30, 1864, when with drawn sword he led that charging line of gleaming bayonets. I thank the House for the consideration it has given me, and I hope the bill will pass. [Applause.]

Rewards offered by leading nations of Europe.

FRANCE.

National lands providing 200,000 francs of income shall be appropriated for each cohort. (Title 1, section 3, Constitution and Documents of France.) Among other pecuniary provisions for the Legion of Honor the lands and property of King Louis Philippe were set over as an endowment for the order. "There shall be appropriated for each grand officer 5,000 francs; for each commandant, 2,000 francs; for every officer a thousand francs; for each legionary, 250 francs. (Title 1, section 7, Hospitals and Dwellings established in each cohort; title 1, section 9, Constitution and Documents.) Schools and colleges were established for their children. No ignoble punishment can be inflicted on a member of the order (Burke, p. 92). November 30, 1845, the pensions then paid were 5,975,000 francs. (Burke, p. 94.)

ENGLAND.

Each person who has received the Victoria Cross shall, from the date of the act by which the decoration was gained, be entitled to a special pension of £10 a year, and each bar additional shall carry with it an additional pension of £5 per annum. (Royal Warrant of Queen Victoria, section 14, January 29, 1856.) The annuity increased to £50 a year if the holder of the cross is aged or infirm. (Royal Decree, February 2, 1899.)

GERMANY.

Recipients of Militar Ehrenzeichen and Militar Verdienst-Kreus receive under different conditions (values in United States money), 71 cents, $1.43, and $2.14 monthly, in addition to other pensions. (Letter of Consul General, December 16, 1893.)

RUSSIA.

In the Imperial Order of St. George, the Senig knights enjoy considerable pensions; those of the first class, 700; those of the second, 400; of the third, 200; and of the fourth, 100 rubles yearly. (Volume 2, Sir Scott Hanson.)

SPAIN.

The special pension for Cruz Laureada de San Fernando is (values in United States money) $13.50 per month to a private. To an officer the pension varies with the rank. (Letter of Spanish Ambassador, Washington, D. C., December 4, 1913.)

CHINA.

In China special acts of bravery are rewarded by permission to wear yellow jacket. (Upton, p. 24.)

MEXICO.

A dog named Togo, a pet of one of the federal regiments, captured a burro laden with 3,000 cartridges, in a fight at Las Bocas. The dog was promoted to the rank of sergeant major. (Special telegram to Washington (D. C.) Post.)

United States Congress gives its heroes nothing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I had thought that probably this bill was one that ought to be considered at a time when it would be open to discussion and amendment, and after the very learned discussion by the gentleman from Ohio, I would like to have the opportunity to read what he has said. I suggest to him that he ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Of course the gentleman has the power to compel me to do that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I was not able to get near all the gentleman said.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Well, if there are any questions the gentleman desires to ask me I will be very glad to answer them.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to take the chances on reading what the gentleman said.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Well, the gentleman has the power; if he is going to object, he will have to do that.

Mr. MANN. Well, when the gentleman forces me to the point of saying whether I will or whether I will not, that is the question. The gentleman can do as he pleases about having the bill passed over.

Mr. SHERWOOD. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask permission to print the map in connection with my speech. It is full of very valuable statistics.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to print the map which he used a while ago.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he make application to the Joint Committee on Printing. The House and the Senate refuse to do that; that is a matter within the control of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. SHERWOOD. All right.

Mr. MANN. I believe the gentleman got permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONFEREE ON PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the appointment of Mr. LANGLEY as conferee on the five bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions in lieu of Mr. LANGHAM.

MARRIAGE OF HOMESTEAD ENTRYWOMAN WITH AN ALIEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11745) to provide for certificate of title of homestead entry by a female American citizen who has intermarried with an alien.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any female citizen of the United States who has filed, or shall hereafter file, a homestead entry upon public lands, and who thereafter has complied with all the conditions as to the acquisition of title to such entry prescribed by the public-land laws of the United States, shall, notwithstanding her intermarriage with an alien, be entitled to a certificate or patent to such entry equally as though she had remained unmarried or had married an American citizen.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

First. On page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the following words: "filed, or shall hereafter file, a homestead entry upon public lands" and substitute in lieu thereof "initiated a claim to a tract of public land under any of the laws applicable thereto."

Second. On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "entry" and substitute therefor the word "land"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. We have not got to that yet. The question is whether the House wants to consider this bill at the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear from the gentleman from Nebraska what this bill proposes.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to explain to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that the purpose of the bill is to relieve homesteaders from the drastic, disastrous effects of section 3 of the act of 1907, known as the expatriation act, which reads:

That any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband.

Now, I apprehend the purpose of this act and of this particular section should apply to American heiresses who would marry foreigners with titles; in other words, who would swap their wealth for the foreigner's title and move with the foreigner to his country, to his European home, and thus the wealth would be removed from the United States. It was not intended to apply to females possessed of moderate means, or no means, yet with independence, ambition, and courage enough to go through the ordeal of living up to the requirements of the homestead laws for five years, the minimum time required when the expatriation act was passed in 1907. Now, the effect of this section which I have just read, as applied by the Department of the Interior, is to make a female, an American citizen born in this country, who has taken a homestead and married a foreigner before she makes her final proof, forfeit her homestead because she has married a foreigner, notwithstanding the foreigner joins her and lives with her upon the claim and becomes a permanent citizen of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. This bill is for the purpose of permitting those women who have taken up a homestead to marry some foreigner before the final proof is made on the homestead; is that true?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. If the gentleman chooses to put it in that form; but I would express it in a form more just to the courageous female homesteaders.

Mr. FOSTER. In other words, she does not wait long enough before getting married to prove up on this homestead?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. They ought not be required to wait.

Mr. MANN. This bill shortens the engagements.

Mr. FOSTER. I knew the gentleman from Nebraska may have some good reasons for it——

Mr. KAINKAID of Nebraska. There are many excellent reasons for it.

Mr. FOSTER. But can the gentleman tell about how many cases have occurrred in the past?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The Secretary of the Interior here says:

Hardships have occurred in many cases, due to this state of the law, while there is no apparent reason why the entrywomen should not be allowed to perfect their claims and receive patents, notwithstanding their marriage with the alien, especially as they generally continue to reside in the United States.

We know all of them continue to reside in the United States except the heiresses, and they go abroad and take their husbands with them; and this latter is the evil the expatriation act was intended to remedy.

Mr. MANN. They do not get homestead entries.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not indicate how many cases there are.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. We asked for that. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], as a member of the Public Lands Committee who was painstaking in the consideration of the bill as chairman of the subcommittee, wrote the Secretary, who had previously indorsed it, to know how many cases there were, and the Secretary replied—I have a copy of his letter here, but I will not take time to read it—in effect that they had not attempted to ascertain the number of cases, but there were a goodly number of cases.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think that the Secretary did not say that he did not have time but that he did not have the data. That is what his letter says.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. That is the substance and effect.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the substance of the report.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. At any rate, the committee used diligence to ascertain the number. He says that there are a great many cases and a great many hardships occasioned by the law.

Mr. MANN. I would like to suggest to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] if there are not very many cases it is not very important. If there are very many, it is evidence of the need of such legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it might be just as important to a few.

Mr. MANN. I take it that if some enterprising girl makes an entry on the public domain with a view of getting a home, and then meets some man who has newly come over from abroad and falls in love with him, and wants to marry him and settle down on a homestead, we really ought to encourage that. That is the best way of making the incomer a good citizen.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I expect the gentleman from Illinois is right. I had about come to that conclusion myself. I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that I will offer no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments one at a time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the following words, "filed, or shall hereafter file, a homestead entry upon public lands," and substitute in lieu thereof "initiated a claim to a tract of public land under any of the laws applicable thereto."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "entry" and substitute therefor the word "land."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LICENSED OFFICERS IN MERCHANT MARINE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16392) to better regulate the serving of licensed officers in the merchant marine of the United States and to promote safety at sea:

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 4448 and 4449 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4448. That all officers licensed under the provisions of this title shall assist the inspectors in their examination of any vessels to which such licensed officers belong and shall point out all defects and imperfections known to them in the hull, equipments, boilers, or machinery of such vessel, and shall also make known to the inspectors at the earliest opportunity all accidents or occurrences producing serious injury to the vessel, her equipments, boilers, or machinery, and in default thereof the license of any such officer so neglecting or refusing shall be suspended or revoked.

"No inspector or supervising inspector receiving information from a licensed officer who is employed on any vessel as to defects in such vessel, or her equipments, boilers, or machinery, or that any provision of this title is being violated, shall impart the name of such licensed officer, or the source of his information, to any person other than his superiors in the Steamboat-Inspection Service. Any inspector or supervising inspector violating this provision shall be subject to dismissal from the service.

"SEC. 4449. That if any licensed officer shall, to the hindrance of commerce, wrongfully or unreasonably refuse to perform his official duties after having signed articles or while employed on any vessel as authorized by the terms of his certificate of license, or if any pilot or engineer shall refuse to admit into the pilot house or engine room any person whom the master or owner of the vessel may desire to place there for the purpose of learning the profession, his license shall be revoked or suspended upon the same proceedings as are provided in other cases of revocation or suspension of such license."

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "which," insert the word "such."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the report in this case gives no information. I see that the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], who made the report, is here and doubtless he has the information in his head which he did not incorporate in the report.

Mr. HARDY. The report is subject to that criticism.

Mr. MANN. I think so, or I would not have made it.

Mr. HARDY. And I will explain the purpose of the legislation if it is desired. The first section of the bill is the present law down to the end of the sixth line on page 2.

Mr. MANN. Down to the middle of the fourth line on page 2.

Mr. HARDY. Down to the seventh line on page 2.

Mr. MANN. There are some changes in the first paragraph.

Mr. HARDY. The first paragraph provides that the license may be suspended or revoked. The present law provides only that it may be revoked.

Mr. MANN. And also has the word "equipments" inserted before the word "boilers." But that is neither here nor there. What is the purpose of the legislation?

Mr. HARDY. Briefly, the purpose of the legislation is this: The law now requires certain officers licensed under the provision of this title to assist inspectors in examination of the vessels to which such licensed officers belong and to make report of any defect to the inspector, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. That is, the licensed officer belonging to the vessel is required to give this assistance and make this report under the existing law?

Mr. HARDY. Under the existing law.

Mr. MANN. Or under the existing regulation?

Mr. HARDY. It is under the existing statute. He is required to make known to the inspectors at the earliest opportunity all accidents or occurrences producing serious injury to the vessel, her equipments, boilers, or machinery, and defects, and so forth, and in default thereof the license of any such officer so neglecting or refusing shall be suspended or revoked. That is the present law. We were requested, and there seems to be very little, if any, objection to adding to that the provision that when the officer obeys his obligation and makes this report the report he makes shall not be imparted by the inspector to anybody except to his superior officer. In other words, an officer making a report of an accident or defect did not want to be discharged, possibly, for having made that report by the owner of the vessel.

Mr. MANN. That may be true; but suppose an officer reports a defect and there is a controversy as to whether the defect exists? What is the reason why the inspector may not ask the captain about it and tell him who says that there is a defect? This forbids any information given to anyone else in reference to a claimed defect.

Mr. HARDY. I take it that this provision would not at all forbid the disclosure of the complainant or party who gave the information in judicial proceedings or anything of that kind.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know. I am not speaking of judicial procedure. The inspector claims there is a defect, and the captain claims there is not——

Mr. HARDY. The fact is that when a complaint is made to the inspector the inspector goes and inspects the vessel.

Mr. MANN. I understand——

Mr. HARDY. But it sometimes happens that if the party gives the information and it is reported to the owner of the vessel, that the man giving information as to the defect is discharged.

Mr. MANN. I can see that that might happen; but, on the other hand, I can see it may be very onerous the other way. Here is a mate on a vessel who goes around with a Government inspector inspecting the vessel, and comes back, and there is a question of whether a defect exists or not. There may be a controversy as to that between the inspector and the captain—without quarreling, but getting at the facts. The inspector can not even say that he discussed the matter with the mate. If the mate has given him any information——

Mr. HARDY. I do not think that was the intention of the measure. It was intended that when the obligation rested upon the ship's officer, he went to the inspector to report defects in the vessel, carrying out his duty in that regard under the law, in order to protect the safety of that vessel, and that that should not be carried then to the owner of the vessel and reported to him as the report from this officer, possibly to the detriment of that officer.

To be plain about it, that was the very question that arose in some particular cases brought to our attention. The owner was anxious to find out who had reported certain defects to the inspection officers. There was no question about the report of the defects being true, but he wanted to know who had reported them. The motive of the owner was, or at least that seemed probable, that he might cause the party making the report to be dismissed. So that we consulted the Bureau of Navigation on this matter as to what they thought of the advisability of the passage of this bill, and the bill has the approval of the department. In addition to that, we consulted shipowners, and they practically conceded that it was right and in the interest of safety.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the mate might send word to the inspector that an accident has happened in some place. The captain says it has not happened. You can not tell the captain that the mate has reported that the accident has happened. What then?

Mr. HARDY. I do not know exactly, except that the inspector would inspect the vessel to determine its condition.

Mr. MANN. It is a good deal like boys in school. Sneaks are never popular, although sometimes they are serviceable. But, as a rule, if one boy were accused of doing something by another one, the other one could not hide under cover and make those charges without coming out into the open.

Mr. HARDY. In this case it is different. These officers are required by law to make their report or forfeit their license.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. HARDY. If you had a boy in school who was required——

Mr. MANN. All boys in school are required by the teacher to report anything wrong that the other boys do.

Mr. HARDY. I was not so required, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman did not do it, and I have no doubt the teacher often told him he should.

Mr. HARDY. At any rate, the department thinks it is very desirable that these persons required by law to make certain reports should be relieved as far as possible from any evil consequences to themselves.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Is it not a fact that licensed officers often have been discriminated against for making reports according to regulations, and not only lost their positions with their employers but were discriminated against by other steamship companies?

Mr. HARDY. I think that is true, and I have no doubt the purpose is to relieve them from that situation, to make it as safe as possible to the officer who does his duty.

Mr. MANN. There is discrimination practiced throughout the world. I do not see how you can follow up the report of the accident or anything of that kind unless you can show who made the report or the statement, if it is controverted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chariman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the answer to that statement is this: It is the duty of the inspector to inspect the vessel when she comes into port. The duty also is laid upon the officers of the vessel under section 4448, to—assist the inspectors in their examination of any vessels to which such licensed officers belong, and shall point out all defects and imperfections known to them in the hull, equipments, boilers, or machinery of such vessel, and shall also make known to the inspectors at the earliest opportunity all accidents or occurrences producing serious injury to the vessel, her equipments, boilers, or machinery, and in default thereof the license of any such officer so neglecting or refusing shall be suspended or revoked.

Now, the testimony before the committee was to the effect that officers were reluctant to impart this information, for the reason that if they did it would lead to their dismissal; and, hence, in the interest of better inspection, of safety to the vessels and their equipment, this protection is thrown around the officer; that if he discloses to the inspector the fact that the lifeboats are defective or that any other part of the equipment is defective, or that the vessel or her machinery has received some injury by collision, he shall be protected. The inspector can then go aboard and verify the statement. Now, when he does that, the whole question is open. There is no need for further protection to the officer.

Mr. MANN. There is no way of verifying the statement by going on board.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If there is any defect, it must be verified.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all. It says, "All accidents or occurrences producing serious injury to the vessel," and so forth. That may have occurred two or three months ago, and may have been completely cured.

Mr. ALEXANDER. In that event it would be unimportant entirely.

Mr. MANN. It might or might not be unimportant.

Mr. ALEXANDER. When the vessel comes into port and she has received some serious injury that affects her seaworthiness, the officer is now reluctant to inform the inspector of the fact. It is not some past defect but some present defect of which the inspector should have knowledge, and they should be protected in disclosing that information.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, although I do not think much of encouraging sneaks or practically anonymous communications reflecting on somebody else where you do not dare say who gave it to you.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. I think that can be taken care of by providing that the superiors in the inspection service shall have a right to demand the information and by providing for the taking away of a man's license for making a report that could not be proved.

Mr. MANN. It is condemning a man without a hearing. It is refusing to bring the witness before the accused, a thing which has been popular in many governments of the world, but never in a government of the people. It is making an accusation against a man and not telling him who made it. It is contrary to every sentiment of enlightened humanity.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think the gentleman is leveling a fair criticism here. If there is a defect in the machinery of the vessel, and the officer discloses it to the inspector, the inspector must go aboard and ascertain if the defect exists. It does not do any harm. If the officer says there are not enough lifeboats on board, the inspector must verify that statement. No prejudice can come to the shipowners. Suppose the vessel had received some serious injury in a collision. He can say that at a certain time, under certain circumstances, the vessel received a certain injury. The inspector must go aboard and verify that information. The captain can not be prejudiced. It simply makes the officer more diligent to disclose these matters, so that the inspector may go aboard and verify whether or not the statements made are true, in the interest of safety.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object; but the more the gentleman talks about it the more I am inclined to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I believe I did not ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is a House Calendar bill, and it does not need to be. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 9, after the word "which," by inserting the word "such."

Mr. HARDY. That is simply to give it proper grammatical construction.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARDY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ROSEBURG, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13180) to amend the act of March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stat., p. 872), so as to provide that in the construction of the public building at Roseburg, Oreg., provision shall be made for the accommodation therein of the United States post office, land office, forest service, weather bureau, and Indian agent.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the construction of the public building at Roseburg, Oreg., authorized by the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stat., p. 872), accommodations shall be provided therein for the United States post office, land office, forest service, weather bureau, and Indian agent.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out "office, land office, forest service, weather bureau, and Indian agent," and insert in lieu thereof "and other governmental offices."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objecton.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk says there is an error in the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that in the committee amendment to strike out certain language from the bill the word "office," where it first occurs in line 1, page 2, be stricken from the amendment, so that it will remain in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike the word "office" from the amendment, so that the word will remain in the bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the act of March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stat., p. 872), so as to provide that in the construction of the public building at Roseburg, Oreg., provision shall be made for the accommodation therein of the United States post office and other governmental offices."

RENEWAL OF LICENSES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16346) to amend section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America as amended by the act of Congress approved May 28, 1896, relating to the renewal of licenses.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of section 4131 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of Congress approved May 28, 1896, relating to the renewal of licenses, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That all licenses issued to such officers shall be for a term of five years, but the holder of a license may have the same renewed for another five years in the manner prescribed in the rules and regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors: Provided, however, That any officer holding a license, and who is engaged in a service which necessitates his continuous absence from the United States, may make application in writing for renewal and transmit the same to the board of local inspectors, with his certificate of citizenship, if naturalized, and a statement of the applicant, verified before a consul or other officer of the United States authorized to administer an oath, setting forth the reasons for not appearing in person; and upon receiving the same the board of local inspectors that originally issued such license shall renew the same and shall notify the applicant of such renewal: Provided further, That no license as master, mate, or pilot of any class of vessel shall be renewed without furnishing a satisfactory certificate of examination as to color blindness. And in all cases where the issue is the suspension or revocation of such licenses, whether before the local boards of inspectors (of steam vessels), as provided for in section 4450 of the Revised Statutes, or before the supervising inspector, as provided for in section 4452 of the Revised Statutes, the accused shall be allowed to appear by counsel and to testify in his own behalf. No master, mate, pilot, or engineer of steam vessels licensed under title 52 of the Revised Statutes, pages 4399–4500, shall be liable to draft in time of war, except for the performance of duties such as required by his license; and while performing such duties in the service of the United States every such master, mate, pilot, or engineer shall be entitled to the highest rate of wages paid in the merchant marine of the United States for similar services; and if killed or wounded while performing such duties under the United States, they, or their heirs, or their legal representatives, shall be entitled to all the privileges accorded to soldiers and sailors serving in the Army or Navy, under the pension laws of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], with reference to the language on page 2, lines 6 and 7, where it requires that an officer who has been licensed and who is absent from the United States and makes application for a renewal of his license, shall transmit with his application his certificate of naturalization if naturalized. Is that necessary? In transmitting a certificate of naturalization by mail it may be lost. Mail matter is sometimes lost. Is it not to be presumed that a man will have a certificate of naturalization if he has been already licensed once?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Capt. Wescott, who is president of the Masters, Mates, and Pilots Association of the Pacific, explained to the committee that that would be a reasonable requirement, in view of the fact that in the past so many men who were not citizens had obtained licenses fraudulently. I think he was in the employ of the Government several years ago to investigate these cases where licenses had been issued, and discovered many cases where they had been obtained fraudulently. It was at his suggestion that that provision was put in the bill to prevent fraud.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but here is a man who has obtained a license. They can make him produce his certificate of naturalization when he obtains his license. Then he goes over on the other side of the world, and while there he makes application for a renewal. By this bill you require him to transmit by mail a certificate, which, if lost, can not be replaced, and which is very easily lost in that way. The presumption certainly is that he has his naturalization papers if he has run the gantlet once.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know how it has happened, but there are many cases where licenses have been issued fraudulently.

Mr. MANN. There may be a few such cases.

Mr. ALEXANDER. He said there were a great many.

Mr. MANN. There can not be a great number, and they will soon run out, but here is something that would be a permanent nuisance. I take it that a large share of these officers are naturalized citizens.

Mr. ALEXANDER. They must be before they can legally receive licenses.

Mr. MANN. I mean that they are actually naturalized citizens. Now, you propose to require them to transmit papers which are valuable to them, which are liable to get lost when they get in the department here, by the way, when they have already gone through once. It is like making a man produce his naturalization papers every time he votes. They may do that once in a while, but it is certainly a nuisance, and is not countenanced in many places, although some people who were not citizens have voted.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of course it is quite a concession to officers abroad to permit them to have their licenses renewed without coming back to the board by which the licenses were originally issued, and is intended to avoid inconvenience to them.

Mr. MANN. It looks like a reasonable concession; and if we are going to make a reasonable concession, why not make a sensible one. It looks to me as though it was a horrible requirement to make a man send in his naturalization certificate when he gets a renewal of his license. To require him to produce it the first time is all right.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If he should lose the original, he could get a certified copy of it.

Mr. MANN. I believe it is not an easy thing to get.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Inasmuch as the masters and pilots suggested the provision, and in view of the fact that so many fraudulent licenses have been issued, the committee did not feel like striking it out.

Mr. MANN. You are going to put a great burden on innocent men because some men have committed a fraud—to require a man when he goes abroad to carry his naturalization certificate with him, whereas what he ought to do with it is to put it in a safety-deposit vault.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen will notice that an oath of citizenship is required to accompany the original naturalization papers. When this came before the committee I asked the man who appeared before the committee some questions, and he suggested that this was the original law which had been followed in the past and no particular complaints had been made about it. At that time it seemed to me that it was an unreasonable requirement to make a man send his naturalization papers along with his certificate. I think the idea or suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois that there is no necessity for it is correct, and that we ought to cut the requirement out and let him send in a sworn affidavit of when he was naturalized, and that ought to be sufficient. A man who says that he is a natural-born citizen does not have to send any proof along.

Mr. ALEXANDER. As I have said, this was the suggestion by the masters, mates, and pilots themselves; and in view of the fact that there are many licenses outstanding now that they have reason to believe are fraudulently issued, and as under the law no one is entitled to a license unless he is either a natural-born citizen of the United States, or a naturalized citizen, the committee did not feel like striking it out.

Mr. MANN. Why not require him to produce the certificate of his birth? The license officers can not tell whether he is a naturalized citizen or citizen by natural birth. There is just as much reason for producng a certificate of birth as there is for producing a naturalization certificate.

Mr. HARDY. There would be a difference in the two cases, would there not, for 90 per cent of the people do not have a certificate of birth?

Mr. MANN. Most everybody can get a certificate of birth.

Mr. HARDY. I could not.

Mr. MANN. I will certify that the gentleman has been born. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, in lines 6 and 7, the language "with his certificate of citizenship if naturalized."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that this bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 2, in lines 6 and 7, the language "with his certificate of citizenship if naturalized."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "with his certificate of citizenship if naturalized."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 18 ayes and 25 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FIRE-ALARM SYSTEM, GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 205, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to legally fix and determine the ownership of and title to the fire-alarm system and appliances, apparatus, and connections heretofore placed and installed in the Government buildings of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and to determine such other questions, as are provided for in the resolution.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this resolution be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to pass this resolution over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1698) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That where any person qualified to make entry under the provisions of the act of June 17, 1910, shall make application to enter under the provisions of sections 1 to 5 of said act, any unappropriated public land in the State of Idaho, which has not been designated as subject to entry under said act (provided said application is accompanied and supported by properly corroborated affidavit of the applicant, showing prima facie that the land applied for is of the character contemplated by the act of June 17, 1910), such application, together with the regular fees and commissions, shall be received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located, and suspended until examination of said land shall have been made by the United States Geological Survey; that during such suspension the land described in said application shall be segregated by the said register and receiver and not subject to entry until the case is disposed of; and if it shall be determined upon such examination that such land is of the character contemplated by the act of June 17, 1910, then such application shall be allowed; otherwise it shall be rejected subject to appeal: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall apply to the application of a qualified entryman to make additional entry of unappropriated land adjoining his unperfected homestead entry, the area of which, together with his original entry, shall not exceed 320 acres: Provided further, That immediately after filing such application with the register and receiver the applicant, or his attorney or agent, shall notify the United States Geological Survey of the filing of such application and inclose therewith a true copy of the corroborated affidavit filed in support of such application, which notice and affidavit shall form the basis for examination of the land by the Geological Survey.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That where any person qualified to make entry under the provisions of the act of February 19, 1909, and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, shall make application to enter under the provisions of said acts any unappropriated public land in any State affected thereby which has not been designated as subject to entry under the act (provided said application is accompanied and supported by properly corroborated affidavit of the applicant in duplicate, showing prima facie that the land applied for is of the character contemplated by said acts), such application, together with the regular fees and commissions, shall be received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located, and suspended until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of the Interior whether said land is actually of that character; that during such suspension the land described in said application shall be segregated by the said register and receiver and not subject to entry until the case is disposed of; and if it shall be determined that such land is of the character contemplated by the said acts, then such application shall be allowed; otherwise it shall be rejected, subject to appeal: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall apply to the application of a qualified entryman to make additional entry of unappropriated land adjoining his unperfected homestead entry, the area of which, together with his original entry, shall not exceed 320 acres."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Idaho what is intended to be accomplished by this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Under the enlarged-homestead act it is necessary that the land be first examined to determine whether or not it comes within the provisions of the law. The prospective entryman goes out, looks over the land, and if he is of the opinion that it comes within the provisions of the law he makes application to the Secretary of the Interior to have the same opened to entry. In the meantime he has no protection whatever in the event that it should come within the provisions of the law and is opened to entry. In other words, he frequently expends a good deal of time and money in going out upon the lands and examining them. An examination must be made in the meantime, and by the time the land is determined to be available for entry some other person may discover that it is open for entry and precede him to the land office and file upon it. In that way he is deprived of an opportunity of getting the land which he had previously located.

Mr. MANN. How could anyone precede him in the land office if he made application to the land office first?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Under the existing law the entryman or prospective entryman does not make application to the local land office; he simply sends it to the Secretary of the Interior and if, after examination, it is found to meet the requirements of the law, public notice is given that the land is to be open for entry, and the first one at the local land office will have the right to enter. It is simply intended to carry out the provisions of existing law with reference to protecting entrymen, by having a record made in the land office of the application; it simply provides that the application shall go through the local land office to the Interior Department, as do other applications for entry upon the public domain, and note shall be made on the plat books and records that this application is pending.

Mr. MANN. This amendatory bill does not purport to change the law about making the application?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; excepting——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says it does change the law?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Excepting it sends the application through the land office instead of direct to the Secretary of the Interior. It simply brings it to the notice of the local officers that a prospective entryman desires this land.

Mr. LENROOT. Is not the purpose of this bill to temporarily withdraw the land from other entry?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; the land described in the particular entry is to be withdrawn in order that the prospective entrymen may get protection in the event the land is declared open to entry by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the purpose of the bill—to give the applicant the preferential right to file?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What expense does he go to before he files his application?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Very frequently, perhaps, he has to pay out thirty or forty or fifty dollars to hire a team to drive out anywhere from 10 to 30 or 40 or 50 miles from where he resides.

Mr. MANN. If a second man does that, he will be out the same expense?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What second man?

Mr. MANN. Let us suppose there is one man who makes an application under this bill. He is protected. There is nothing on the land to show that anybody has made that application.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No.

Mr. MANN. Another man comes along looking for one of these snaps, if they are snaps, or liabilities, if they are liabilitsie, and he sends in his application, having gone to considerable expense. He can not tell that anybody else is ahead of him until he has gone to the land office, so that one of the two is bound to be out some money that he spends.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Of course when a man goes out to select a piece of land, he takes the trouble, as far as possible, to ascertain by inquiry at the local land office whether the land is open to entry.

Mr. MANN. He can not ascertain that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. He can ascertain it by looking at the plat.

Mr. MANN. Yes; if the land is near the land office, which it never is, he can go then and examine it, but that is not the way they do.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. He can write and find out.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I have written to any number of these people, and you do not get any information from them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is their duty to give information.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but they can not give it. They can tell whether a particular piece of land has been entered on, but they can not tell you in advance and they can not know what land has been entered on and what has not. The man does not know which piece he is going to select until he goes out and spends his money, according to the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Of course he can not determine that unless he has information from the local land office, but a plat is filed in the local land office showing every entry that is made, and a man can go there and look at the plat or he can write a letter and find out whether a particular piece of land is taken.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but he can not do that before he goes out and looks for land.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Why not? They are not foolish enough to go out into a section of the country without making some inquiry as to whether or not the land is available.

Mr. MANN. Then none of these people are badly off. The gentleman said they go to great expense.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Some of them do.

Mr. MANN. Going out and searching for a piece of land?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They do.

Mr. MANN. And he finds a particular piece which he thinks he would like, and he makes his application for that. He could not ascertain from the land office in advance in reference to that piece of land, because he does not know where it is.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. He can probably tell the township and possibly the section.

Mr. MANN. Is not the real purpose of this bill to give those people who now have homesteads the right to make prior applications for the purpose of enlarging their homesteads close to their homesteads?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Not at all. There are comparatively few of those, because in the localities where homesteads are already taken up there is not much of this land available. This is intended to apply to new entries away back in the hills, probably 30 to 50 miles from any habitation. It is simply intended to allow prospective entrymen to avail themselves of this law, which gives the right to go out there and get title to land that is absolutely worthless except for cultivation under the dry-farming methods.

Mr. MANN. As I understand this matter, it provides that when such a person—shall make application to enter under the provisions of said acts, any unappropriated public land in any State affected thereby—

And so forth.

The gentleman says that is designed to permit him to make an application, to be filed with the land office. If that be the case, does it not also specifically authorize him to make application for any unappropriated public land, whether it be surveyed or unsurveyed?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; it must be surveyed land under this law.

Mr. MANN. I know the present law applies only to surveyed land.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. He can not enter unsurveyed land in the land office, for there is no way of describing it.

Mr. MANN. He can describe it by metes and bounds.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Oh, there is no law under which he can enter unsurveyed land in the land office.

Mr. MANN. Not unless this law would permit him to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This is certainly not intended to do that; there is no such idea as that. No one can be injured by protecting the prospective entrymen when they incur these expenses with the hope of getting the piece of land that they desire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Idaho, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for an enlarged homestead and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto.'"

PUBLIC BUILDING SITE AT HUNTINGDON, TENN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15000) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to disregard section 33 of the public buildings act of March 4, 1913, as to site at Huntingdon, Tenn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to disregard that portion of section 33 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, which requires that the Federal building site selected at Huntingdon, Tenn., shall be bounded on at least two sides by streets.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, Huntingdon, as compared with some towns, is a small town; as with others, large; but it was extremely desirable that this public building be elected in Huntingdon on the public square—that is, so as to face the public square. Only $2,500 was appropriated for the site, and it was found impossible to get the site for that small amount of money on the corner which would comply with the act of 1913—by having the building bounded upon two streets—and the site agent recommended that this site be selected, not on a corner, but facing on the public square, 120 feet wide, with a 20-foot alley. Everything is satisfactory, and this has the unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTIONS 4888 AND 4889, REVISED STATUTES, RELATING TO PATENTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15220) to amend sections 4888 and 4889 of the Revised Statutes, relating to patents.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4888 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out from the last clause thereof the words "and attested by two witnesses," so that the section so amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 4888. Before any inventor or discoverer shall receive a patent for his invention or discovery, he shall make application therefor, in writing, to the Commissioner of Patents, and shall file in the Patent Office a written description of the same, and of the manner and process of making, constructing, compounding, and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it appertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make, construct, compound, and use the same; and in case of a machine, he shall explain the principle thereof, and the best mode in which he has contemplated applying that principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions; and he shall particularly point out and distinctly claim the part, improvement, or combination which he claims as his invention or discovery. The specification and claim shall be signed by the inventor."

SEC. 2. That section 4889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "and attested by two witnesses," so that the section so amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 4889. When the nature of the case admits of drawings, the applicant shall furnish one copy signed by the inventor or his attorney in fact, which shall be filed in the Patent Office; and a copy of the drawing to be furnished by the Patent Office, shall be attached to the patent as a part of the specification."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation of the bill. The bill has come up suddenly, and I desire some explanation of it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the gentleman's objection comes too late, but I will be glad to explain the bill to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I had reserved the right to object, and I would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The only amendment to the law is that it strikes out the provision which requires the application to be attested by two witnesses. The Committee on Patents considered the bill and advised with the Commissioner of Patents, and he said that it was an unnecessary burden on the applicant for the patent. Mr. OLDFIELD is present, who is chairman of the Committee on Patents, and may wish to make a statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not make any objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF PRINTED COPIES OF PATENTS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 257, authorizing the Commission of Patents to exchange printed copies of United States patents with the Dominion of Canada.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioner of Patents of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to exchange with the Dominion of Canada under such terms of contract as may by him be deemed practicable, printed copies of patents now in the United States Patent Office and hereafter issued by the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as far as I can gather from the report, the main reason given for this proposed exchange is that the danger of destruction to our Patent Office at this time by fire is "eminent." The reason I say "eminent" instead of "imminent" is because I am quoting from the report.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That is a misprint.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that is an error in proof reading in the Government Printing Office, which probably followed copy by mistake, or maybe that was the stenographer. However, the main reason given is that there is danger of destruction by fire of our records here.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that is a very good reason for sending our Patent Office copies of the records abroad?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Well, we think that a very good reason.

Mr. MANN. That we have no safe place to store them?

Mr. OLDFIELD. The Patent Office is not safe and has not been for a great many years.

Mr. MANN. The Capitol Building is not safe; no place is safe——

Mr. OLDFIELD. I see no reason why we should not have copies go to Canada, and then if there should be any destruction by fire we can get those copies; but I will state to the gentleman that this policy was pursued for a good many years until about 10 or 12 years ago, when for some reason or other it was discontinued.

Mr. MANN. Well, do I understand that this will cost the Government about $50,000 or not?

Mr. OLDFIELD. It will not cost the Government anything out of the current appropriation. We have 50 copies of each patent in the Patent Office, and all it would cost would be to have boys pull these copies out and send them to Canada.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the report says that while the request was made for copies covering 12 or 13 years—

While it involves no expense of money, it involves taking out our group of patents, about $50,000 worth of patents.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The department says $50,000 worth of patents; that means they are worth $50,000.

Mr. OLDFIELD. That means they cost that.

Mr. MANN. What do we get out of this in return?

Mr. OLDFIELD. We get the copies of the Canadian patents. That enables our Patent Office to make more complete searches than they can make now and at the same time preserve copies of our patents. It is very important for the Patent Office to be able to make the thorough searches, and we have copies of the Canadian patents.

Mr. MANN. That is, of the Canadian patents?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Now, how about the English, the German patents, the French patents, and the Japanese patents? Do we get copies of patents of all these other nations?

Mr. OLDFIELD. We have not so far.

Mr. MANN. Then it would not appreciably advance us in making searches simply because we had these few that are in Canada.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I think we have most of the copies of patents of other countries.

Mr. MANN. How do we get them?

Mr. OLDFIELD. I think there is an arrangement by which we get them.

Mr. MANN. If we have the authority to make such an arrangement, why do not we make it with Canada?

Mr. OLDFIELD. They were made in some sort of a patent conference; not exactly a treaty, but on that order.

Mr. MANN. It looked to me as if the main purpose of the commissioner was to advertise the fact that he wanted a new Patent Office, although I do not see that that has any close relationship with this proposition.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I am perfectly frank to say that I think they do need a new Patent Office. I agree with the commissioner in that.

Mr. MANN. I do not think much of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOCATORS OF OIL AND GAS ON PUBLIC DOMAIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15469) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect the locators in good faith of oil and gas lands who shall have effected an actual discovery of oil or gas on the public lands of the United States, or their successors in interest," approved March 2, 1911.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice and that it retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UNDERWOOD). The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any object in leaving this bill on the calendar. The gentleman has a Senate bill on the calendar covering the same purpose. It cumbers the calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely. But the gentleman knows the bill is identical, but I would like to have this bill retain its place so that we can substitute the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. You can not do so.

Mr. FERRIS. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Because you have the Senate bill on the calendar and you can not substitute the Senate bill for this.

Mr. FERRIS. We can call up the Senate bill instead and ask that this be substituted, then?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not want to substitute this by the Senate bill. Now, the Senate bill will be reached. We leave everything on the calendar until the calendar is so long that it takes a lot of time whenever it is considered here.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is right about this. The gentleman knows what is detaining this bill. There are some negotiations between the Secretary of the Interior and the Department of Justice, and I rather hope the gentleman will not disturb the present status at all until they get through negotiating.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to come up under the Senate bill and not leave this bill on the calendar. The same matter is covered in the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]?

Mr. FERRIS. I withdraw the objection if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is right about it.

Mr. MANN. It had better go off the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will go off the calendar.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 485) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. In each of the districts described in chapter 5 there shall be a court called a district court, for which there shall be appointed one judge, to be called a district judge, except that in the northern district of California, the southern district of California, the northern district of Illinois, the district of Maryland, the district of Minnesota, the district of Nebraska, the district of New Jersey, the eastern district of New York, the northern and southern districts of Ohio, the district of Oregon, the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, and the western district of Washington, there shall be an additional district judge in each, and in the southern district of New York three additional district judges: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of the district judge for the district of Maryland, senior in commission, such vacancy shall not be filled, and thereafter there shall be but one district judge in said district: Provided further, That there shall be one judge for the eastern and western districts of South Carolina, one judge for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, and one judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi: Provided further, That the district judge for the middle district of Alabama shall continue as heretofore to be a district judge for the northern district thereof. Every district judge shall reside in the district or one of the districts for which he is appointed, and for offending against this provision shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, this is a bill, as I understand, to create a new judge for the southern district of California?

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask some gentleman a question in regard to this bill, if I may. I see the bill, which is for the reenactment of section 1 of the judiciary title, fixes the number of district judges in each of the districts, and provides, among other things, for an additional judge in the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania. This is a Senate bill. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House on June 17, 1913. That was before we had enacted a law providing for an additional district judge in the eastern district of Pennsylvania. Although the Committee on the Judiciary certainly knew enough about that bill for the Philadelphia judge, they did not remember it when they reported this bill out from the committee. And the enactment of this bill would cut out, if we had the power to cut him out, the new judge that we have just provided for in Philadelphia.

Mr. LOGUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, if I have the floor.

Mr. LOGUE. The necessity which called for the appointment of the additional judge in the eastern district has passed, inasmuch as the judge there died.

Mr. MANN. The judge has since died?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Then that would obviate this question.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California to let this bill go over until the next meeting.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice until the next meeting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF THE BOTANIC GARDEN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12796) to provide for the removal of the Botanic Garden to Rock Creek Park and for its transfer to the control of the Department of Agriculture.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a national arboretum and botanical garden in Rock Creek Park the Botanic Garden is hereby transferred from the direction and control of the Joint Committee on the Library to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture, and he is authorized to remove to Rock Creek Park or otherwise dispose of the plants, structures, and all that pertains to the Botanic Garden in its present location as he may deem proper.

SEC. 2. That so much of Rock Creek Park, not in excess of 400 acres, as may be needed for the purposes of an arboretum and botanic garden, not including the National Zoological Park, is hereby transferred from the joint direction and control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army to the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 3. That the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library and the chairman of the House Committee on the Library and the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia shall select and cause to be surveyed that portion of Rock Creek Park, not in excess of 400 acres, herein set apart for a botanic garden and arboretum.

SEC. 4. That all unexpended appropriations in relation to the Botanic Garden which shall be available at the time this act takes effect shall be available for expenditure for the transfer of the Botanic Garden to the new site and for other purposes incident to its removal and maintenance.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws not consistent with or that are repugnant to this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GARNER. I ask that the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. HOWARD. I will withhold my objection.

Mr. MANN. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOWARD. For the simple reason, Mr. Speaker, that this involves the expenditure of a large sum of money, and the person who is in charge of this bill is not present. I think he should be present before I can consent to vote upon this question as to the removal of this Botanic Garden, which is one of the old landmarks of Washington. I would want a good and sufficient reason why this garden should be removed out here to Rock Creek Park. When our constituents come here to see the city of Washington and view its beauties, unless they can hire an automobile and ride out here to this bon ton Rock Creek Park they can never see the Botanic Garden and its beauties, and until a good and sufficient reason can be given to me for the removal of this park and a full explanation of the purpose for which they want to spend this money I shall object to it. However, I will withhold my objection for a moment, so that the gentleman can make a statement.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is chairman of the Committee on the Library, and the Joint Committee on the Library of the House and Senate has control of this subject. If there is objection to the consideration of the bill now, it may be passed over, but will the gentleman permit me to make a very brief statement?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It has been thought for a good many years that the Botanic Garden would have to be moved, but no one desired to move it while old Mr. Smith, the superintendent of the garden was alive. He died not very long ago. Since his death a new superintendent was appointed, and he has died recently. He also desired that the garden should not be moved.

The dedication of the Grant monument at this end of the Botanic Garden, at the foot of the Capitol, will practically and absolutely require the removal of the garden. At least it will destroy the garden as it is there now; there will not be anything left of the garden to speak of.

A lot of gentlemen interested in such matters—and I have been interested in it myself personally for several years—discussed the matter some time ago and formed the opinion that the wisest and most sensible thing to do would be to turn the Botanic Garden over to the Department of Agriculture, which could make use of the garden without extra expense, so that it would be some benefit to the people of the country by way of experimentation through the Department of Agriculture.

We have out at the north end of Rock Creek Park quite a piece of land which is not developed at all. More or less of it is open, and more or less of it is covered with timber. If it is opened it will be readily accessible to street car lines. The thought of the Department of Agriculture, including Dr. Galloway and those connected with him, was that if they could have the use of this ground out there for the Botanic Garden without interferring with the place that is there, they could use the vacant spaces in the way of planting and experimenting without any extra expense to the Government, and not only have a Botanic Garden worth many times the one that is down here for exhibition purposes, but also one that would be of great value to the Government in the way of planting trees which take many years to mature.

Now, the Botanic Garden here is practically gone, and this Grant Monument will be dedicated, I think, this fall or next summer. It seems to me it is this fall.

Mr. HOWARD. Next October.

Mr. MANN. Yes; this fall; and Mr. SLAYDEN has been very anxious, indeed, to get this bill through, in the hope that the Department of Agriculture might have an opportunity this fall to remove from the present Botanic Garden down here those trees and shrubs and plants which are of value to be kept, because otherwise they will be destroyed down here.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman sufficiently to say to my friend from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] that it is the general concensus of opinion of those who have investigated it—I have not done so myself—that unless this bill is passed and some arrangement is made for the Botanic Garden, we will have none at all next year, comparatively speaking. I am myself very fond of the Botanic Garden and as much interested, I believe, as anybody. My good wife, who goes down there and selects plants to send down home once a year, thought it would not be well to go out to Rock Creek Park and select them. But it will be either to select them there or not at all.

Mr. MANN. I believe it is safe to say that I have been at the Botanic Garden more frequently than anybody else in Congress. Gardening is the one recreation and fad that I have. I think I know every plant in the Botanic Garden. They speak "Good morning" to me when I go down there. They know me. But this Botanic Garden, as it stands, is almost a farce, compared with what it should be and compared with botanic gardens maintained by other nations. We can make a botanic garden out here in Rock Creek Park without any greater expense than it now costs under the Department of Agriculture, and have one that is not only magnificent in many respects, but one of great value from the experimental point of view.

We have abroad a number of men—Mr. Myers is one—who are constantly engaged in obtaining new plants and new shrubs and new trees—new trees at various times, including fruit trees—which they bring over here for use in this country, but we have now no place where we can properly, under governmental control, plant trees which we officially know about, which require years to mature.

Mr. HOWARD. Do they not use a certain portion of Potomac Park for that purpose now?

Mr. MANN. No; they have an agricultural experiment station at Arlington.

Mr. HOWARD. No; on this side of the river. I see there are nurseries there, of different trees, ornamental and shade trees.

Mr. MANN. That is under the charge of the officer in control of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, and that is where the trees and shrubs come from that go into the parks here. That place is of no particular value otherwise. The trees are taken up from time to time.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not desire of my own motion to oppose the passage of a good measure, but I know there is a great difference of opinion among certain Members of the House with whom I have talked about the removal of the Botanic Garden. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that something ought to be done relative to the unveiling of the monument to Gen. Grant. In the first place—I am saying this on my own responsibility only—I think it was poor judgment to put the monument to this great general down here in this secluded place, to start with.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did what I could to prevent it, and at one time got a majority vote in the House against it.

Mr. HOWARD. If there was a general in the Union Army who ought to have the most prominent place vacant in the city of Washington for the placing of his monument, it was Gen. Grant; but they have picked out the most secluded spot in Washington on which to erect this magnificent monument to his memory and achievements. But that is all cut out of the garden, as I understand it. Now, this thing has been shrouded in mystery, so far as I am concerned. I can not get any information, and I am like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in my liking for and interest in the Botanic Garden. I go down there at every opportunity I have, and some of those plants and flowers are getting to say "Good morning" to me. I like to go down there. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object to the consideration of this bill, but I ask that it go over.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will let it pass.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is it not true that all the parks and public grounds of this town are made more inaccessible to the ordinary citizen than in almost any other city of this country? That is to say, the common, ordinary citizen has to go to greater expense in order to visit them.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know. Washington is abundantly provided with parks of a certain sort.

Mr. DONOVAN. What chance has the public to take advantage of Potomac Park without the use of automobiles?

Mr. HOWARD. Very little, unless a man owns an automobile.

Mr. DONOVAN. To put the Botanic Garden several miles away will mean a considerable expense to the ordinary citizen who wants to visit it.

Mr. HOWARD. That is the very reason, while I do not want to object to the bill and have it stricken from the calendar, I do want to have it go over.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. DONOVAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia one question more. Does the gentleman from Georgia think that he ought to vote to remove this garden from the ordinary citizen?

Mr. HOWARD. I do not, and that is exactly why I am inclined to interpose this objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] both know, I am sure, that the Botanic Garden can not remain down here and perform its functions. It is already proposed, and there is already authority given, to remove the fence around it. That would have been done before this, except that they are keeping the fence there until the monument is unveiled; because if it should be removed before that time there would not be anything left of the Botanic Garden after the unveiling. There will not be much left anyhow.

There have been three propositions made in reference to the Botanic Garden. One is to buy ground for a new garden. I do not think the Government wants at this time to buy several hundred acres for the Botanic Garden.

Another proposition has been to turn the Botanic Garden over to the superintendent of public buildings and grounds of Washington. That official is now Maj. Hart, a very competent official, and it has been proposed to select a place for the garden in Potomac Park. I think that has not met with favor by very many people.

The third proposition has been to turn the Botanic Garden over to the Department of Agriculture, which has all the facilities for carrying on the garden work, and to use land at present unused, which would be beautified and made use of without much expense.

Mr. HOWARD. What is it proposed to do with this space down here after this garden is removed?

Mr. MANN. It is a part of the Mall. It will be covered with grass, just like the rest of the Mall between the Capitol and the Washington Monument. I assume that is what will be done with it. It is certain that it will not be a Botanic Garden.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have just come into the Hall. Is this the Botanic Garden bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection while I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], chairman of the committee which has this bill in charge, is absent——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to it being passed over.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects to passing the bill over without prejudice. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. That objection removes the bill from the calendar, does it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRY OF OIL LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 60) to provide for agricultural entry of oil lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States in the State of Wyoming which have been withdrawn or classified as oil lands or are valuable for oil shall be subject to appropriate entry under the homestead laws by actual settlers only, the desert-land law, to selection by the State of Wyoming under grants made by Congress and under section 4 of the act approved August 18, 1894, known as the Cary Act, and to withdrawal under the act approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and to disposition in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior under the law providing for the sale of isolated or disconnected tracts of public lands whenever such entry, selection, or withdrawal shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title, with a reservation to the United States of the oil and gas in such lands and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. But no desert entry made under the provisions of this act shall contain more than 160 acres: Provided, That those who have initiated nonmineral entries, selections, or locations in good faith prior to the passage of this act on lands withdrawn or classified as oil lands may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which said entries were made, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act.

SEC. 2. That any person desiring to make entry under the homestead laws or the desert land law, and the State of Wyoming desiring to make selection under section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, known as the Carey Act, or under grants made by Congress, and the Secretary of the Interior in withdrawing under the reclamation act lands classified as oil lands or valuable for oil, with a view of securing or passing title to the same in accordance with the provisions of said acts, shall state in the application for entry, selection, or notice of withdrawal that the same is made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

SEC. 3. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which entry, selection, or location is made and of this act the applicant shall be entitled to a patent or certification to the lands entered or selected, with a reservation to the United States of all the oil or gas in the lands no patented or certified, together with the right in the United States or persons authorized by it to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; but before any person shall be entitled to enter upon the lands patented or certified for the purpose of prospecting, mining, or removing oil or gas therefrom he shall furnish, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, a bond or undertaking as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on said lands by reason of such prospecting for and removal of oil or gas. The reserved oil and gas deposits in lands patented or certified under this act shall not be subject to exploration or entry other than by the United States, except as hereafter authorized by Congress.

Strike out all the above and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That lands withdrawn or classified as phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals, or which are valuable for those deposits, shall be subject to appropriation, location, selection, entry, or purchase, if otherwise available, under the nonmineral land laws of the United States, whenever such location, selection, entry, or purchase shall be made with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the deposits on account of which the lands were withdrawn or classified or reported as valuable, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; but no desert entry made under the provisions of this act shall contain more than 160 acres: Provided, That all applications to locate, select, enter, or purchase under this section shall state that the same are made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

"SEC. 2. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the location, selection, entry, or purchase is made, the locator, selector, entryman, or purchaser shall be entitled to a patent to the land located, selected, entered, or purchased, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of the deposits on account of which the lands so patented were withdrawn or classified or reported as valuable, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, such deposits to be subject to disposal by the United States only as shall be hereafter expressly directed by law. Any person qualified to acquire the reserved deposits may enter upon said lands with a view of prospecting for the same upon the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of a bond or undertaking to be filed with him as security for the payment of all damages to the crops and improvements on such lands by reason of such prospecting, the measure of any such damage to be fixed by agreement of parties or by a court of competent jurisdiction. Any person who has acquired from the United States the title to or the right to mine and remove the reserved deposits, should the United States dispose of the mineral deposits in lands, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining and removal of the minerals therefrom, and mine and remove such minerals, upon payment of damages caused thereby to the owner of the land, or upon giving a good and sufficient bond or undertaking therefor in an action instituted in any competent court to ascertain and fix said damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to deny or abridge the right to present and have prompt consideration of applications to locate, select, enter, or purchase, under the land laws of the United States, lands which have been withdrawn or classified as phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic mineral lands, with a view of disproving such classification and securing patent without reservation, nor shall persons who have located, selected, entered, or purchased lands subsequently withdrawn, or classified as valuable for said mineral deposits, be debarred from the privilege of showing, at any time before final entry, purchase, or approval of selection or location, that the lands entered, selected, or located are in fact nonmineral in character.

"SEC. 3. That any person who has, in good faith, located, selected, entered, or purchased, or any person who shall hereafter locate, select, enter, or purchase, under the nonmineral land laws of the United States, any lands which are subsequently withdrawn, classified, or reported as being valuable for phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals, may, upon application therefor, and making satisfactory proof of compliance with the laws under which such lands are claimed, receive a patent therefor, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all deposits on account of which the lands were withdrawn, classified, or reported as being valuable, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. It is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the Committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent the title was amended to read: "An act to provide for agricultural entry of lands withdrawn, classified, or reported as containing phosphate, nitrate, potash, oil, gas, or asphaltic minerals."

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was laid on the table.

LEASING PRIVILEGES FOR HOTELS, YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1694) to amend an act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act to set apart certain tracts of land in the State of California as forest reservation."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to grant leases for periods of not exceeding 20 years, at annual rentals, and under terms and conditions to be determined by him, to any person, corporation, or company he may authorize to transact business in the Yosemite National Park, for separate tracts of land, not exceeding 20 acres each, at such places, not to exceed 10 in number, to any person, corporation, or company in said park, as the comfort and convenience of visitors may require, for the construction and maintenance of substantial hotel buildings and buildings for the protection of motor cars, stages, stock and equipment, etc. Such leases may, at the option of the Secretary of the Interior, contain appropriate provisions for the appraisement, at the expiration of the lease, of the value of such hotel and other buildings (or portions thereof) as may be constructed by the lessees, respectively, and the payment of the same to the lessees in case a new lease be made to persons other than said lessees, such payments to be made by such new lessees, respectively.

That any person or corporation or company holding a lease or leases within said park for the purposes above described is hereby authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to execute mortgages upon his or its rights and properties, including his or its contract or contracts with the Secretary of the Interior; such mortgages shall be executed in duplicate and delivered to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval, and upon his approval thereof he shall retain one of said duplicates and file the same for record in his office.

Any mortgage, lien, or encumbrance created under the provisions hereof shall be subject to the rights of the Government to compel the enforcement of the terms of the lease or contract of the mortgagor, and any purchaser under a foreclosure of such encumbrance shall take subject to all the conditions assumed by the original lessee or contractor.

All provisions of existing law in relation to said park not in conflict herewith are hereby continued in full force and effect.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEASE OR SALE OF LIMESTONE DEPOSITS—TUSCARORA NATION OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14196) authorizing the Tuscarora Nation of New York Indians to lease or sell the limestone deposits upon their reservation.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Tuscarora Nation of New York Indians, by their chiefs in council assembled, are hereby authorized and empowered to lease or sell for the benefit of the nation all or a part of the limestone deposits upon their reservation in one or more suitable tracts: Provided, That before such lease or sale shall be made notice of intention to lease or sell, giving a general description of the lands upon which said limestone deposits are located, shall be published in two papers, one issued in the county of Niagara, State of New York, and one issued in the city of Buffalo, county of Erie, State of New York, once a week for three consecutive weeks; said notice shall state the time and place when sealed bids shall be received for the mentioned tracts, and such lease or sale shall be to the highest responsible bidder: Provided further, That before any lease or sale shall be made the terms of the proposed contract shall be fully explained to the entire nation and shall be approved by a majority of the votes of the whole people of voting age, but before any lease or sale shall become effective it shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval as to the sufficiency of the amount of the consideration and terms of payment, and if approved by him, the chiefs are hereby authorized and empowered to enter into such lease or sale. All moneys paid upon any lease or sale made as herein provided shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall distribute the same among the adult persons, and thereafter to the minor persons as they attain their majority, entitled to participate in the distribution of the consideration, without any fee, expense, or charge against the nation or any of its people.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. Reserving the right to object, I will be glad to know the wish of the Indians owning the tract of land upon which this deposit is located.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are 360 Indians and about 250 acres of land. The limestone is about 6 feet thick and of excellent quality. It is near a railroad, and also within a few miles there is a demand for it in the various smelting industries. There was a delegation of these Indian chiefs came before our committee last winter and earnestly urged the passage of this bill. It was recommended by Mr. Adams during the last administration and by Mr. Jones during the present administration. We have used the exact language in the bill that was drawn by Mr. Adams, except that we have provided that the sale shall be published in two papers in the State of New York, one in the county of Niagara and one in the city of Buffalo; and we have further provided that before any sale shall be made the terms of the same shall be approved by a majority of the Indians, and further provided that the money shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, and that he shall see that it is distributed among the members of the tribe. Those are the safeguards of the bill, and, with that exception, we followed all the language of the Secretary of the Interior in both administrations.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the committee considered the question of the demand for the limestone sufficient to know whether there will be any competition? Will there be any competitive bids for it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have not. That is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian chiefs. These Indians are voters in that State. They are intelligent men. They are not men that could be misled into making a bad bargain.

Mr. FOWLER. Has authority heretofore been given them to dispose of their real estate?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By this act, and as I have stated.

Mr. FOWLER. I mean other than by this act. Have they been permitted to dispose of their real estate as white men or other citizens?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have treaty rights that they have heretofore exercised. This is the last property owned in common, and was reserved because of its supposed great value.

Mr. FOWLER. I have no doubt it is very valuable, because limestone will always be valuable. It is one of the best fertilizers known to the farmer.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the country is entitled to use the material, and are not the Indians entitled to whatever it will bring?

Mr. FOWLER. I am not ready to cross that bridge yet, because I have not reached it. Yet I am trying to get to it so that I may know whether it is the proper thing to do. I am aware of the fact that limestone is a valuable deposit, and if this is the only piece of land they own in common and they have been permitted to dispose of all the rest of their lands, like other citizens of the United States, there may be some good reason for permitting them to dispose of this limestone deposit. But I would like to know whether their rights are fully protected and if they have sufficient information concerning the value of it and that it will not be sold until adequate consideration is paid.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that this reservation will amply protect the Indians:

Provided further, That before any lease or sale shall be made the terms of the proposed contract shall be fully explained to the entire nation and shall be approved by a majority of the votes of the whole people of voting age, but before any lease or sale shall become effective it shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval as to the sufficiency of the amount of the consideration and terms of payment, and if approved by him, the chiefs are hereby authorized and empowered to enter into such lease or sale. All moneys paid upon any lease or sale made as herein provided shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall distribute the same among the adult persons, and thereafter to the minor persons as they attain their majority, entitled to participate in the distribution of the consideration, without any fee, expense, or charge against the nation or any of its people.

Mr. FOWLER. As I understand the gentleman, these Indians exercise the rights of citizenship.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] knows about this situation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand it, the only purpose of the bill is to legalize what it seems can not be done by the Indians. Not that the Indians are not competent to act for themselves, and there is some question whether legislation is necessary at all, but I notice that the Secretary of the Interior cites a number of authorities, and is of the opinion that it is necessary to have an act of Congress authorizing it. These Indians are perfectly competent; they are men of intelligence, speak English and own property, transact their own business, and have not been wards of the Government for many years.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman recollect how long?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; but a great many years. I think there is some old cloud or claim on this land that, if the Indians abandon it for tribal purposes, may be asserted, and it is owing to that fact that the land has not been divided among the Indians in severalty, as it might have been done and probably ought to have been done. It is one of the New York tribes that still maintains the land ownership in common.

Mr. FOWLER. Do they hold all their farm lands in common?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand that they do, but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think they have an agreement among themselves that each one has a certain tract of land——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I was not here when this bill was reported——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And I will further state to the gentleman from Illinois that before this sale can be made the parties leasing the limestone quarry must be assured of getting a title so that they can put in railroads. It takes quite a plant to handle limestone, as the gentleman is quite well aware, and they will not expend this money until they are assured they will get a good title.

Mr. FOWLER. From the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota there seems to be some question whether a title can be secured.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; because of some old treaty between the United States Government and the Indians years ago that if these Indians should have been removed to some other part of the United States they would forfeit their rights, but they had an absolute right given to them under the treaty, this old title.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to get some information——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Who pays for the advertising fees if this goes through?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Indians insist that they should not pay for it, and therefore the last lines in the bill, lines 18 and 19, say, "without fee, expense, or charge against the nation or any of its people."

I will say to the gentleman I think there is a lump-sum appropriation in all of these Indian appropriation bills that can be used for such purposes as would be set forth here—that is, the sale of land and lease of land and distribution of tribal funds, and this would be a tribal fund.

Mr. MANN. I doubt whether there is such an appropriation; but why should the Government of the United States pay for advertising the Indian lands for sale up here in New York?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I presume they have already the machinery with which to do that.

Mr. MANN. They have not the machinery ready to pay advertising bills. Why should we pay for the advertising?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a very pertinent question; but the department suggested it, and we wanted to get the matter settled.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; the department has not suggested anything of this sort that I have been able to find.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was the Indians, possibly.

Mr. MANN. That would not make any difference if they had.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not remember whether it was at the suggestion of the Indian chiefs who were before the committee or when we had the heads of the department before us.

Mr. MANN. Under the terms of this bill the whole sum realized is to be divided, I suppose, per capita—although the bill does not say that—among these 360 Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. How many are minors and how many are adults?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This does not state——

Mr. MANN. I see it does not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But I presume about one-third would be minors, or possibly one-half.

Mr. MANN. Well, what becomes of the money that belongs to the minors?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be withheld. It would be under the control of the department, the same as other Indian funds. It would be subject to the same rules and regulations that control the distribution of all Indian funds. This fund would certainly be under the same rules and regulations.

Mr. MANN. For instance, here is a baby, say a year old, which is entitled to his or her share of this fund. Under the terms of the bill the Government is to hold that money without interest for such length of time as to enable that infant to grow up and become an adult?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It will be held in trust.

Mr. MANN. Without interest?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I presume so.

Mr. MANN. That would be grossly unfair to the minor children.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This does not provide for interest——

Mr. MANN. I do not see any reason why the Government should hold the money. I do not see any reason why the Government should pay interest on the money, and I do not see any reason why, if we do not pay interest, we should hold the money from 1 to 20 years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that the courts of New York, these people being citizens, would at once appoint guardians for these children?

Mr. MANN. Very likely that would not do any good, because under the terms of this bill it is not to be paid the minors until they attain their majority. I am speaking now of the language of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know that my suggestion would have any weight, but my thought is that in the procedure in our State with the Indian funds the Government usually pledges itself to pay 4 or 5 per cent interest and then redeposits the money, and in that case the Government does not lose anything and the Indians do get the interest.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly patent that the Government ought not to take the money of minor children after the sale of property and keep it for 20 years and the child receive no interest on it. Such a bill ought to be considered by the proper committee and this bill is not in proper shape at all, and I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I objected, Mr. Speaker, a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

SALE OF LANDS, KLAMATH RIVER INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10848) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892 (27 Stat. L., pp. 52, 53).

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of the act entitled "An act to provide for the disposition and sale of lands known as the Klamath River Indian Reservation," approved June 17, 1892, reading: "Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians now residing on said lands and their children," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read:

"Provided further, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said lands shall constitute a fund to be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the maintenance and education of the Indians and their children now residing on said lands, and for the construction of roads, trails, and other improvements, and for other purposes, for their benefit."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think I objected to this bill once before.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is the second time the bill has been placed on the calendar. Under the rule we are permitted to place a bill on the calendar a second time.

Mr. MANN. If the department wants to spend this money which it has in building roads and trails, why should not the department give some information to the Congress?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The information we have is this, that this river is a short river and runs into the sea, possibly 25 or 30 miles from where this reservation is. Twenty-five miles of that river is in a canyon, and it is impossible for the Indians to get from the sea where the shipping point is to their homes on the river, unless they climb over very rough mountain trails, and this is designed so that they can get wagons in there and take produce out, and get the supplies in that are given them by the Government and that they purchase on the seacoast.

Mr. MANN. I discussed this matter with the gentleman once before, and stated then that the bill did not contemplate wagon roads, and it does not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Wagon roads or trails. I have a letter here.

Mr. MANN. If it is the letter that is printed, I have that myself. I do not see why the department, which has a very wide latitude of authority, anyway, should not occasionally take Congress into its confidence, instead of asking for a blanket authority to do certain things.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This seems to be a very necessary thing for the use of these Indians, and the most essential thing in a mountainous country like this is means of ingress and egress, so that they can get in their supplies and take out what they have to sell.

Mr. MANN. In rough, mountainous country a department of this Government can waste or use $25,000 more quickly than in any other way it can be disposed of, and with less results. I have no doubt they would like to do it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the Indians are asking for this. They have to get to the sea now by boats through the canyon.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the Indians would prefer to have their money.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By going down the river they can get out to the sea, but they have to climb over the mountains to get back. They can not get back because of the swiftness of the stream. They can get to the sea from the reservation.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman any more information than that contained in the report?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not.

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the objection.

Mr. RAKER. Would the gentleman consent to passing it over without prejudice, and then if we do not get a sufficient report upon the matter he can then object?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to passing it over without prejudice.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE OF TIMBER ON UNALLOTTED LANDS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10834) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 855).

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill that we discussed at some length, I think, before.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is the bill that my friend from Minnesota, Mr. STEENERSON, is interested in.

Mr. MANN. This is the bill that the gentleman from Minnesota desired to amend, and the committee declined to accept his amendment, for a minimum price.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There has been no further action taken by the committee since the matter was before the House before. What amendment is it the gentleman proposes?

Mr. MANN. I do not propose any amendment. The amendment was proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], and the committee said it did not wish to accept that amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Possibly the gentleman would be willing to change his amendment to some extent.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I understand the committee has not had any meeting to consider the bill since that time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have not.

Mr. STEENERSON. The amendment I suggested at that time was embodied in a bill which I introduced, but as far as I am concerned I am not suggesting any amendment whatever and am perfectly satisfied now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is satisfied with the state that the bill is in now?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; so far as it concerns my State. I understand the department regulations governing the cutting of timber provide for advertising and appraisement, which are pretty nearly the same safeguards, though not quite so strict, as those contained in the bill which I introduced.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the gentleman is satisfied with them.

Mr. MANN. Do the department regulations fix the minimum price at which the timber in the Red Lake district can be sold?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; but it is appraised under the regulation and can not be sold for less than the appraised value. I should be very glad to have my suggestions adopted, but I understand the committee has not acted upon them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish there was some way I could think of by which I could defeat this bill entirely; but as the same proposition is in one of the numerous amendments added to the Indian appropriation bill, and as I suppose the conferees in some way will disregard my wishes, if not the wishes of the House, and get it into the law, for the present I shall object.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield for a moment, I would like to explain.

Mr. MANN. I withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is in error about the amendment being a part of the Indian appropriation bill. I will say that the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate granted a hearing on the proposition, and after hearing the case decided to insert it in the Indian appropriation bill because of the waste that is going on up there, the timber being burned up and wasted; but after the matter got onto the Senate floor some gentleman did not care to let it go through by unanimous consent, and the point of order was made, without anyone objecting to it, and so, by unanimous consent, practically, it was left out of the Indian appropriation bill. It is hoped that the department representing the Indians will be able to work out a plan that will meet the views of all Senators and Representatives taking an interest in this matter, so that it can receive consideration at the next session of Congress and be acted upon then. There is no desire on my part to press the matter now, for unless a measure satisfactory to the other House of Congress can be framed we would not be making progress by sending over the present bill; and it is not now a part of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I thank the gentleman for the information. I was thinking for the moment that it was an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was cut off.

Mr. MANN. I do not think this is a very good time to sell timber.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ALLOTMENTS TO INDIANS ON MORONGO RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10505) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cause allotments to be made to Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the Morongo Indian Reservation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

BRANCH HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 494) to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, Cal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to establish a branch hydrographic office at Los Angeles, in the State of California, the same to be conducted under the provisions of the law applicable to the Hydrographic Office in the Navy Department.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to secure sufficient accommodations in said city of Los Angeles for said hydrographic office, and to provide the same with the necessary furniture, apparatus, supplies, and services allowed existing branch hydrographic offices, at a cost not exceeding $9,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for these purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would be very glad to hear any reason why this is necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to establish at Los Angeles, Cal., a branch hydrographic office. If there is a necessity for a branch hydrographic office anywhere, I think that necessity exists at Los Angeles to-day. Every large city on the Atlantic coast—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, and Savannah—has a branch hydrographic office. On the Pacific coast, Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco are the only cities that are favored. South of San Francisco there is no hydrographic office, although it is 600 miles to the Mexican line and 3,200 miles to Panama.

Now, the port of Los Angeles is a fast growing one in a maritime way. The increase in imports and exports and in general harbor business has been several hundredfold in the last few years. In the year 1913 alone there arrived at Los Angeles Harbor something over 2,800 vessels, and the indications are that 1914 will show a total of 3,300. All these vessels have masters who want information, and who have information to give, and if there was a branch hydrographic office there the masters could give information concerning the hindrances and obstructions to navigation which they have encountered or observed on their way to that harbor and obtain the charts and other information from the Government office that other mariners and the Government have secured from various sources.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill altogether meritorious, because it provides Los Angeles, a city of over 500,000 people, with such aids to navigation as will assist in building up a great maritime business through its great harbor.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say what the tonnage was last year which entered and departed from the Los Angeles port?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, if I had a few moments I could, for I have it all tabulated and here at hand. Los Angeles Harbor is said to be the largest lumber-receiving harbor in the world. It is also a very large oil-shipping harbor, and, exclusive of both lumber and oil, the business of Los Angeles Harbor has increased 2,250 per cent in the last 10 years.

The increase has been so tremendous, the volume of commerce is now so large, and the future promises such a magnificent total as to warrant an intelligence office of this kind.

Mr. MANN. I will make a proposition to the gentleman. I represent a harbor that has entered and cleared each year more than 5,000,000 tons. It has no hydrographic office and gets along very well without one. If the gentleman could show me that his harbor enters and clears combined $5,000,000 a year, I will not make objection to his bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, Los Angeles does not pretend to approach Chicago in population or business, but it has hopes.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the harbor at Chicago. I am speaking of the harbor of South Chicago.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. It is all one thing.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It is not all one thing.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. It is a part of the city of Chicago. But whether we approach that city in size or not, I believe our harbor is of sufficient size now and holds out for the future enough of promise to make the establishing of such an information bureau as this bill proposes a very proper and necessary act.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the business of the harbor will be largely increased because of the Panama Canal, and that more commerce will be carried to and from that port than ever before?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Unquestionably, if the canal amounts to anything, and we all think it will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is it not necessary to spend a great deal of money on it on that account?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. The Government has expended about $6,000,000 on the harbor at Los Angeles, and the city of Los Angeles has expended about $6,000,000 more. The people of Los Angeles spent their own money because they believed they could build a great commercial harbor there, and they are succeeding. The opening of the Panama Canal will bring a tremendous increase of vessels and trade. I do not know that the ratio of increase will be as great as it was in the last few years, but the total tonnage entered and cleared at Los Angeles Harbor in 1920 will surprise the most optimistic. Our city keeps growing, our commerce keeps growing, and this hydrographic office is one of the aids to navigation which a great harbor and a great city really demand, if such is required anywhere in the United States. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and is asked for by the people of Los Angeles. My recollection is that it was brought to the attention of Senator WORKS, of California, who introduced this bill, by the maritime and mercantile interests of Los Angeles.

Mr. MANN. How far is the city of Los Angeles from the port?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. The city reaches the port. The harbor is within the city.

Mr. MANN. How far is Los Angeles from the port?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. The center of the city is about 22 miles from the harbor. But Los Angeles, believing in the development of the harbor, reached out an arm, and with the consent of two smaller towns on the harbor, took them and the harbor into the city. It had the money, and was ready to spend it on the harbor of refuge and of commerce. It promised to spend $10,000,000 in improving the harbor. It has expended $6,000,000; the balance will be ready when called for, and millions more when needed. Los Angeles has proven its courage, and the results are greater than it claimed.

Mr. MANN. I have every regard for the city of Los Angeles. I believe it is a great city, and that this will be a great port. I helped locate the harbor up there since coming here. I do not believe they need the hydrographic office, and while the babies out there may be crying for it, they do not know what it is. The gentleman speaks of what it is going to be. I have no doubt it is very large now, but the Congress sits long enough to provide for a thing after "it is" instead of for "what it is going to be."

Mr. STEPHENS of California. If the gentleman will permit, I think that 2,800 vessels coming into a port annually, if no larger number ever came, will warrant this office.

Mr. MANN. The Government furnishes hydrographic charts to anyone who wishes to buy them. They do not furnish any of them free. There is a Hydrographic Office here in Washington. If I want a chart, do I go up there and get it? Certainly not. I send the money and get it by mail. They have a list of these charts, and there is no difficulty in any vessel getting all the charts it wants without trouble. But, of course, these offices furnish a nice place for some naval officer on shore. And he does good service, too.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. It will not take many men to fill all the places there are in an office of this kind. I think one officer and two clerks, or possibly one clerk, is all that will be required.

A hydrographic office not only provides the charts which are printed here in Washington, but it also provides a weekly publication and a daily publication, and posts on the blackboard every day certain information that comes from Washington, and comes from mariners that drop into the office from hour to hour as they arrive in port. It does seem to me that this is of sufficient importance to be permitted to pass at this time by unanimous consent. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows perfectly well that I shall object, because he knows that the bill really ought not to pass, although he has had a very good chance to make a strong plea for it. I object.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Does the gentleman object to this bill going over without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. That is another question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. This bill can be put on again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to its being passed over without prejudice. The bill is stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next one.

FRAUDULENT ENLISTMENT IN THE MILITARY SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8479) to repeal section 3 of article 110 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted July 27, 1892.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of article 110 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same hereby is, repealed.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, and shall apply to all pending prosecutions and existing causes of prosecutions.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the words "of article 110."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to repeal section 3 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, enacted July 27, 1892."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

RELIEF OF HOMESTEADERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16099) to amend the act of June 23, 1910, entitled "An act providing that entrymen for homesteads within the reclamation projects may assign their entries upon satisfactory proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation for five years, the same as though said entry had been made under the original homestead act."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 23, 1910 (Public, 243, 36 Stats., p. 592), entitled "An act providing that entrymen for homesteads within reclamation projects may assign their entries upon satisfactory proof of residence, improvement, and cultivation for five years, the same as though said entry had been made under the original homestead act," is hereby amended by adding the following proviso:

"Provided, That any assignments made between June 23, 1910, and December 1, 1913, of all or portions of homestead entries upon which the assignors have submitted satisfactory final proof and the assignees purchased with the belief that the assignments were valid, are hereby confirmed, notwithstanding the original entries were conformed to farm units and the portions assigned canceled or eliminated from the entries prior to the dates of assignment: Provided further, That all entries so assigned shall be subject to the limitations, terms, and conditions of the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, and all of said assignees whose entries are hereby confirmed shall, as a condition to receiving patent, make the proof heretofore required of assignees: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to any lands canceled and eliminated from any such entry and which have been embraced in any valid settlement or homestead entry of another."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a question or two.

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. This bill is identical, with the exception of the change of a date, with the bill that was heretofore reported to the House and placed upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar twice and objected to on each occasion?

Mr. RAKER. It is not.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman state what the difference is?

Mr. RAKER. The particular difference is that we changed the date, and the language to which objection was made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was stricken out of the bill. Mr. MONDELL was seen, and a letter was written to him, and I think it is now satisfactory to him.

Mr. LENROOT. What other change is there?

Mr. RAKER. The other change is as to the sale before final proof. This is in the identical form of the act of June 23, 1910, allowing assignments. There were a few in the various reclamation projects where the department required conformation to the farm unit, where the parties did not understand the situation and went on to make and did make final proof and then sold their claims. The assignee is the one that is now being jeopardized by not having the right to obtain his patent. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] will notice that we strike out of the bill that part of it relating to the assignment before final proof.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman point that out?

Mr. MANN. I can give the gentleman the exact information, which ought to have been conveyed in the report, but which was not. In line 11 of page 2, after the word "assignment," the other bill carried this language, "require confirmation of final proof."

Mr. RAKER. That was stricken out. We thought it would make no difference, and it would prevent any possibility of complication.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it cuts any figure at all. The bill is open to the same objection as the other bill.

Mr. RAKER. The original homesteader has his land remaining, but it is the assignee who has paid his money and gone on the place who is now in jeopardy, because the order was made for conforming, and no conforming was had. The innocent purchaser ought to be protected. The report shows that only a few of this kind are involved, and the report favorably recommends the enactment of this bill to protect the homestead assignee.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the gentleman what the purpose was in changing the date?

Mr. RAKER. To conform to the law on that subject.

Mr. LENROOT. One date was January 1, 1914, and the other is December 1, 1913.

Mr. RAKER. Well, we thought there might be a few involved in there, and we went back to the 1st of December.

Mr. LENROOT. That was just a difference of 30 days?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. What difference would that make?

Mr. RAKER. There might be some in there that were not provided for.

Mr. LENROOT. The original bill was January 1, 1914, was it not? Why did the committee make it 30 days' difference instead of the whole year?

Mr. RAKER. It begins on the 1st of December so that there will be no question as to the time.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman think that explains it?

Mr. RAKER. It is the only explanation that seems to be necessary.

Mr. MADDEN. How many people would the difference of date let in?

Mr. RAKER. It might not let in any.

Mr. LENROOT. Was not the real purpose to get the bill as different as possible from the bill that had been objected to and yet accomplish the same thing?

Mr. RAKER. No. I will answer the gentleman clearly. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] went over the matter carefully, and the only objection he made, or the reason he gave for his objection, was that it permitted an assignment before final proof.

And to avoid any possibility of an assignment before final proof the bill was reintroduced, was submitted to the department for their report and an investigation as to the number of entries affected, letters received from these projects, and the committee then reported the bill favorably.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, one or two questions upon the merits. In the last report made by the gentleman this language is used:

> The act is for the relief of purchasers and not of entrymen.

And immediately following is a letter to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], which is printed in the report, in which the position is taken that the act is for the relief not of the purchasers but of the entrymen.

Mr. RAKER. A man would be an entryman under the assignment. He has to conform with the law, and that is undoubtedly the view they took of it.

Mr. LENROOT. No; let me read the language:

> These are only a few of the cases here—

After naming some of the cases—

> These are only a few of the cases here that I could mention, and in not one of the cases in the vicinity of Fairview is the land held by speculators, and the benefit would go to the man who filed on 160 acres—

That is not the assignee.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. It says:

> And is entitled to the land that he filed on in good faith.

Mr. RAKER. That is true, and I will answer that in this way: He has filed on 160 acres. After having filed, I say you ought to protect both, namely, the man who made the filing, that he might legitimately sell 80 acres of the 160, and that then the assignee might obtain a good title by complying with the law of June 23, 1910, which gives them opportunity to transfer up to that time.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the gentleman did not mean what he said earlier in the report—that it was for the relief of purchasers and not for the relief of entrymen.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I do. Primarily and principally the bill is for the benefit of the assignee, but one could readily see that if a man did have his 160 acres there would be no question that the relief would be given to his assignee. It would give him a better opportunity to have sold or to sell a part of his claim.

Mr. LENROOT. This relates only to the past and not to the future, so this could not give him a better opportunity to sell, could it?

Mr. RAKER. No; nothing in the future, because the time is specified.

Mr. LENROOT. Then what was the force of the gentleman's remark that this would give him a better opportunity?

Mr. RAKER. A better opportunity to do what?

Mr. LENROOT. To sell.

Mr. RAKER. No; not to permit him in the future——

Mr. LENROOT. But would this bill affect the sale at all?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely it does not affect the sale, because the sale must have been made between June 23, 1910, and December 1, 1913.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I understood.

Mr. RAKER. That is clear from the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I understood.

Mr. RAKER. And the provisions ought to be complied with.

Mr. LENROOT. I understood the gentleman to say these conditions would give him a better opportunity to sell.

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not think so—not the original homesteaders. It would give the assignee a better chance to sell or dispose of his rights.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; it certainly would.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman one question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] referred to a letter addressed to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] furnish a copy of this letter to be inserted in this report?

Mr. RAKER. He did not.

Mr. MANN. Where did the copy come from?

Mr. RAKER. It came from these people who are directly interested and the author of the letter.

Mr. MANN. I should think it was a discourtesy to a Member of Congress to insert a copy of a letter written to him if he did not give the authority to insert it.

Mr. RAKER. This letter here, so far as I know and am concerned, came to the members of the committee and was before the committee in the regular and usual course, and directed to a gentleman of the committee, and, as a part of that record, was inserted in this report.

Mr. MANN. This letter that appears here is not directed to the committee at all. It is directed to "Hon. Mr. MONDELL, Washington, D. C." I have not talked with him about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

UNITED STATES FISH HATCHERY, JEFFERSON COUNTY, KY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14950) to authorize the city of Louisville, Ky., to open a parkway to the United States fish station and hatchery in Jefferson County, Ky.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, as several Members know, this bill has already been enacted into law.

Mr. MANN. No; not yet. It has gone into the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BRYAN. It has been enacted, so far as the sundry civil bill has gone. I do not suppose anyone wants to take up time with it now.

Mr. MANN. All the gentleman needs to do is to object to it.

Mr. BRYAN. I object, because it has already been included in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I was about to call the attention of the House to the fact that it had been inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be stricken from the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

TRANSPORTATION OF CRUDE PETROLEUM.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 16055) to amend section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4474 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided further, That when crude petroleum of a flash point not less than 150° F., is carried in the double-bottom fuel tanks of steamers using the same for fuel, the crude petroleum carried in such tanks in excess of the necessities of the voyage may be discharged at terminal ports when no passengers are on board the ship. Crude petroleum carried and discharged under these conditions will not be considered stores or cargo within the contemplation of section 4472, Revised Statutes of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the author of the bill, or some one for him, to tell us what effect this will have on the revenues.

Mr. KAHN. I will explain to the gentleman. It will have no effect at all on the revenues. The purpose of the legislation is this: At the present time oil is being used very largely as fuel for seagoing vessels on the Pacific coast. Under section 4474 and also 4472 of the Revised Statutes oil can only be carried under certain circumstances. Vessels sailing out of the Pacific coast ports carry a large quantity of oil for ballast in excess of the amount actually required for fuel when they go to the Hawaiian Islands or when they go to Alaska, and they generally bring back a considerably heavier cargo than when they go out. That enables them to carry less ballast on the return trip. In order to get rid of some of the oil that is used for ballast they want the privilege of being allowed to store it at the terminal points. The Department of Commerce has had the matter under consideration and is thoroughly in favor of it. At the present time the shipowners do that very thing, but it is in violation of law. They have been fined for doing it, and the department has invariably remitted the fine. The revenue is not at all affected.

Mr. MADDEN. Do they carry this oil for fuel purposes?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. In addition to the amount required for fuel they carry some for ballast?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but on a return voyage they never can tell what amount they may require. So that if they have an excess they want to be permitted to take it off the vessel at the terminal points.

Mr. MADDEN. If they have more than they need for fuel purposes and they are going to reload the ship on its return voyage with oil sufficient to propel the ship, what is the necessity for taking it off the ship?

Mr. KAHN. It is only when they have an excess of oil that they take it off. If they only have enough to carry the ship for the round trip, they do not want to take it off; it is only when they have an excess of fuel.

Mr. BRYAN. They may not have enough ballast. It is only when they have an excess of fuel. The real purpose of the oil they carry back and forth is freight.

Mr. KAHN. No; not as freight. It is required as fuel. It is not considered as freight. Section 4472 provides how oil shall be carried as freight, and this is carried as fuel.

Mr. MADDEN. These ships are equipped to carry oil without danger?

Mr. KAHN. Absolutely.

Mr. MADDEN. In order to dispose of the oil they have in excess of the needs of the ship, they want permission to store it in tanks at American terminals?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. As I say, they have been doing it, and in some cases they have been fined, but the fines have invariably been remitted.

Mr. MADDEN. And the gentleman can say that the carriage of this oil on the ships from which it is proposed to take it and store it on shore is not a menace to the life or limb of those who take passage on such steamers?

Mr. KAHN. The Supervising Inspector General of the Steamboat Inspection Service appeared before the committee and stated positively that there was no danger of any kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RECLAMATION HOMESTEAD ENTRIES—FLATHEAD PROJECT, MONTANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12249) to extend the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, authorizing assignment of reclamation homestead entries, and of the act of August 9, 1912, authorizing the issuance of patents on reclamation of homestead entries to lands in Flathead project, Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 592), authorizing the assignment under certain conditions of homesteads within reclamation projects, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 265), authorizing, under certain conditions, the issuance of patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes, be, and the same hereby are, extended and made applicable to lands within the Flathead irrigation project, in the former Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., but such lands shall otherwise be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), as amended by the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 448): Provided, That the lien reserved to the United States on the land patented, as provided for in section 2 of said act of August 9, 1912, shall include all sums due or to become due to the United States on account of the Indian price of such lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I will confess that I have read the bill and the report, and I do not get a very clear idea of what the bill proposes to do.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this same bill passed the Senate June 30 and is now on the Speaker's table. May we not have unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for this?

Mr. MANN. You have not run the first gantlet yet. What does the bill do? I have read the bill and report, and it is a little involved.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, Congress has provided for the assignment of homestead entries of all reclamation projects except that of the Flatheads in Montana. That was opened under a special act, and the law does not apply to that project. The department asks that the general law be extended to the Flathead project.

Mr. MANN. Well, I knew all that.

Mr. RAKER. The act of June 23, 1910, permits the assignment of entries when they are required to conform to the amount fixed by the Secretary of the Interior that will be sufficient to support a family. Second, the act of August 9, 1912, Twenty-seventh Statutes at Large, page 265, amended the act on other reclamation projects, permitting the party to make final proof upon certain conditions, reserving the right in the patent that the Government had the first lien, and they must pay all the expenses to the Government, and reserving it in that condition. That applies to all general reclamation projects, 32 in number. But the Flathead Reservation was a special bill for that particular district. Now, the only thing asked here is that the act of June 23, 1910, permitting assignments on all other reclamation projects be extended to that, and that the act of August 9, 1912, relative to the final proof, be extended to that project, so that they will be practically on the same footing.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my friend from California [Mr. RAKER] is always very clear and lucid in his statements, and I do not question that he is now; but I still do not know what is to be accomplished by this bill, and I do not believe that anybody in the House who heard the statement does. What is the situation now on the Flathead Indian reclamation project, and what will it be if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. EVANS. The situation is this: A lot of men have made homestead entries out there. The land is being reclaimed under the reclamation project. At the end of five years they will not be able to assign their homesteads, when they have perfected all of their titles, and will not be able to do so until they get full title from the Government, and they can not get full title from the Government until 10 or 20 years, as payments fall due, and as in all other projects they allow homesteaders to assign and in this project they do not, we ask that this be put upon the same footing as the other.

Mr. MANN. How did a provision of that sort happen to get into the law?

Mr. EVANS. It was passed by the gentleman himself and by others.

Mr. MANN. Is there such a provision in the law?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the present law.

Mr. MANN. On the Flathead Indian reclamation project?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; on all other projects.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has stated what was the case on the Flathead Indian Reservation, which is not true as to any other, and the gentleman from Arizona now says that that is true of all.

Mr. EVANS. The report from the Secretary of the Interior says that such conditions do exist.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say that no title can be made on the Flathead reclamation for 10 years after a man enters the land?

Mr. EVANS. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. Was that provided for by law?

Mr. EVANS. That is provided under the reclamation law.

Mr. MANN. The reclamation law does not apply to the Flathead Indian project?

Mr. EVANS. It does; and the special act provided that the lands should be reclaimed as other reclamation lands; and we are reclaiming them, and have spent one million and a half dollars on it.

Mr. MANN. If the general irrigation law applies to the Flathead Indian reclamation project, what does the gentleman want to do by this bill?

Mr. EVANS. That the Secretary of the Interior holds the right to assign does not apply here, and he asks that it be made the same as other projects.

Mr. RAKER. The Flathead Indian Reservation was adopted by special act, and was opened up by a special act in relation to irrigation, cultivation, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Was that an Indian Committee bill?

Mr. RAKER. Indian lands; and other individuals, white men, went there and filed upon it.

Mr. MANN. Was it by special act, or was it an item in an Indian appropriation act?

Mr. EVANS. It was by special act.

Mr. RAKER. I think it was special act. This bill intends to extend to this particular special tract of land the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910, relative to the assignment of homesteads. Second, it extends the provisions of the act of August 9, 1912, permitting them to make final proof within three years, to obtain a patent within three years, whereas under the law as it exists now on that particular project it is the same as generally existed before this act of 1912, which, in effect, does not permit men to obtain patents until all the payments have been completed on the lands.

Mr. MANN. Where did the money come from for this Flathead project—out of the Indian funds or out of the General Treasury, advanced for the Indians?

Mr. RAKER. Out of the General Treasury, advanced as in other cases, and it is being repaid out of the land.

Mr. MANN. After this bill passes and the reclamation project bill passes which is now pending, will that leave us, in this case, in a situation where we have advanced money for 20 years and get it back without any interest whatever?

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer that question and to answer another. First, if this bill passes, it leaves the Flathead Indian reclamation on the same footing as irrigation projects now are elsewhere in the United States. Then if the general reclamation bill passes it would apply to only the general reclamation project, unless it is made special to this project.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS. Mr Speaker, as I understand the matter, there is on the Speaker's table this identical bill from the Senate. I therefore move that the Senate bill be taken up and substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill, identical in language with this, be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Is the Senate bill there?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think the gentleman means to substitute it, but to ask, unanimous consent that it be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Yes. Let the Senate bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

An act (S. 4441) to extend the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 592), authorizing assignment of reclamation homestead entries, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 265), authorizing the issuance of patents on reclamation homestead entries, to lands in the Flathead irrigation project, Montana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 592), authorizing the assignment under certain conditions of homesteads within reclamation projects, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 265), authorizing under certain conditions the issuance of patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes, be, and the same are hereby, extended and made applicable to lands within the Flathead irrigation project, in the former Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., but such lands shall otherwise be subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 302), as amended by the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 448): Provided, That the lien reserved to the United States on the land patented, as provided for in section 2 of said act of August 9, 1912, shall include all sums due or to become due to the United States on account of the Indian price of such land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering the Senate bill just read in lieu of the House bill of similar tenor? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill of similar tenor, the one just under consideration, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 4938. An act providing for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases; and

H. R. 16192. An act to authorize the issuance of patent to Rachel E. Dangerfield Boast for the southeast quarter of section 21 and the northeast quarter of section 28, township 1 south, range 57 west of the sixth principal meridian.

RELIEF OF FIRE SUFFERERS IN SALEM, MASS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of House joint resolution 293, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That for the relief of the sufferers from the recent conflagration in Salem, Mass., there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That all expenditures under this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands a second.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is evident there is not a quorum in the city to-day, and therefore I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry before the motion is put.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. If the House adjourns now after a second has been ordered, is this the continuing business on suspension day?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. There is plenty of time to figure that out.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. There are on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, which we are right up against now, three or four uncontested bills——

The SPEAKER. But it has been ascertained there is no quorum.

Mr. ADAMSON. Has that announcement been made authoritatively?

The SPEAKER. The announcement was made authoritatively. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 35.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-seven gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. A call of the House is ordered, the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. One hundred and eighty-nine Members have answered to their names, not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand it requires 215——

The SPEAKER. It requires 218.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think it evident there is not a quorum in town to-day. I do not desire to have the House adjourn if we could get a quorum, but I think it is clear we can not get one, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. Forty-one gentlemen have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, how is it that 41 is a sufficient number, when the Chair has just ruled that 218 was a quorum. Forty-one is not one-fifth——

The SPEAKER. The Speaker tried to explain that thing to the gentleman the other day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Try it again.

The SPEAKER. It takes one-fifth of a quorum to order tellers. That is 44. But it does not take one-fifth of a quorum to order the yeas and nays. It takes one-fifth of those present. The roll was called a minute ago, and there are only 188 Members answering to their names. Forty-one is more than one-fifth of 188, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called; and there were—yeas 114, nays 71, answered "present" 1, not voting 247, as follows:

AMENDMENT OF ANTITRUST LAW.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have received a great many telegrams from labor organizations with reference to the Clayton bill, and I have here a sample of the telegrams, which I ask may be read.

I also have a telegram from the Employers' Association of the State of Washington with reference to the same matter. It expresses the sentiment of a great many letters and telegrams that I am receiving on the same subject. I hope it will not be considered that either side of the question is in a conspiracy with reference to this proposed legislation. I ask that these two telegrams may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the telegrams.

The Secretary read the telegrams, as follows:

[Telegram.]

SEATTLE, WASH., July 6, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Clayton bill, with its important features of class legislation, is now in the hands of the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is reasonable to assume that our years of experience in industrial relations fit us to express ourselves on the above measure. We have carefully considered its sections Nos. 7 and 18. Section 7, guaranteeing to labor unions immunity from the antitrust law, will, in our judgment, aggravate industrial strife instead of allaying it. As representatives in the Senate of the interests of our State we urge upon you to exert your efforts toward striking out the above sections.

THE EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION OF WASHINGTON,
G. N. SKINNER,
J. V. PATERSON,
W. J. GRAMBS.

[Telegram.]

SPOKANE, WASH., July 6, 1914.

Hon WESLEY JONES, Washington, D. C.:

Central Labor Council urges you to vote for the passage of the labor sections of the Clayton bill, H. R. 15657, as it passed the House of Representatives, and that the law be passed at this session.

J. R. MORFORD, Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I notice in numerous instances in the bill—it may almost be said in a majority—that the amount appropriated by the other House is increased, and that, too, without the creation of additional officers or any enlargement of the public service. I should like to ask what is the explanation of that? Were the House appropriations less than the estimates? Is there danger that the public service would be crippled if the amounts specified by the other House were allowed to remain without increase, or what is the explanation?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Ohio that the House reduced the appropriations in this bill about $17,000,000 under the estimates made by the executive departments. After those reductions had been made in the House bill the heads of departments, seeing what had been done, appeared before the Senate Committee on Appropriations and pointed out the difficulties which would ensue if they were not treated more liberally in some respects; and the Senate committee have reported to increase the appropriations somewhat; but still I think the appropriations are about $14,000,000 under the estimates.

Mr. BURTON. So that there is an increase of about $3,000,000 in the bill as reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. An increase by the Senate committee over what was allowed by the other House; but it must be borne in mind that the House had cut the estimates $17,000,000, and the increases made by the Senate committee seemed to be absolutely necessary, as pointed out by the heads of the departments. We feel that if we have erred at all, we have cut the estimates too short now. We have been as economical as possible, and have rejected many requests which have been urged upon the committee by the different departments.

Mr. BURTON. Could the Senator from Virginia state in what branches of the public service or of public expenditure these cuts of $17,000,000 were made? Is that true of all branches, or of what branches?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is true as to pretty much every branch. The cuts have been made throughout the different departments.

Mr. BURTON. Were the appropriations for the public buildings diminished below the estimates?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know that they were cut. Appropriations for public buildings are made under authorizations of law and for amounts which the Supervising Architect's Office or the Secretary of the Treasury reported would be absolutely necessary for present use. I am not prepared to say that any of those appropriations were cut.

Mr. BURTON. Were any of the appropriations for river and harbor improvements diminished below the estimates?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think they were; I do not recall an instance in which one such appropriation was diminished. This bill as to the river and harbor appropriations contains only those covering continuing contracts for that work, and I think we appropriated exactly what was estimated for.

Mr. BURTON. Are there any appropriations the amount of which is such as would decrease salaries?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There are very few decreases of salaries. The clamor is for the increase of salaries, as the Senator well knows. The Secretary of the Interior, for instance, was before the Committee on Appropriations, and stated that he did not believe there was a man in the Department of the Interior who was not asking for an increase of salary. We have made very few increases, but we have not made reductions.

Mr. BURTON. Are there any cases in which no appropriations are made for existing offices?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Well, I do not recall one, though there may be one or two; but there has been very little denial of appropriations that were given under existing law.

Mr. BURTON. As a general fact, as I understand it, the House of Representatives diminished the appropriations $17,000,000 below the estimates from the executive department?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. BURTON. And the Senate committee has increased the appropriations in the bill three million or three and a half million dollars?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. A little over $3,000,000 increase has been made. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. I ask on what page the bill is now being read?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill, a little in advance of reaching it in the reading, with regard to an item which is found on page 56. What was the argument which led to the reduction of the appropriation of $200,000 for the Industrial Relations Commission to $50,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, there was a very general feeling in committee that no good was being derived corresponding to that appropriation. I can not go into the details to justify what we did, but it was done simply to get the matter into conference, and to try to get at some better reasons than were before us for the appropriation. We were not satisfied that the public was getting a benefit equivalent to the amount appropriated. The law which created the commission is rather vague and uncertain, and the work done by the commission does not seem to have been commensurately advantageous to the public.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I think if the commission is a failure the law creating it ought to be repealed. It is as certain as the noonday sun that $50,000 will not be a sufficient amount to accomplish anything, and, if appropriated, it will be just that much absolutely lost.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, for myself I will say that unless I could get information that I do not now possess I should be glad to see the commission eliminated altogether. At the same time, I do not feel like going that far. I preferred, and the committee preferred, simply to make an amendment that would put the matter into conference, where it could have further consideration. I am without any information justifying the existence of the commission, so far as I am personally concerned. Fifty thousand dollars was the amount appropriated last year, and we were indisposed to increase it without more knowledge than we had.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask if the commission itself had a hearing as to the necessity of the larger appropriation?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No; we had no communication from the commission.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I think it somewhat remarkable that the only decrease that is proposed in this bill is as to the appropriation for the Commission on Industrial Relations, which is dealing, and dealing in a very effective way, with the labor problem, in which so very many people in this country are interested. The hearings recently had at Philadelphia—my attention has been particularly called to them—have brought to light a vast fund of information that ought to be in the possession of the people of this country.

From what I have observed of the operations of this commission its work has been of the highest value to the people of this country, especially the people who work with their hands for a living, and I should regret very much to see any effort made now to cripple that commission in the work which it has so auspiciously commenced. I think this reduction is a great mistake, and I, for one, shall protest against it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KERN. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I hope Senators will let us proceed with the amendments in regular order. We have not yet reached the amendment that is being discussed, but are very near it. It will have to be gone over when it is reached, and if Senators will wait until the item comes up it can then be discussed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, while I am on my feet—I will not occupy very much time—I want to ask the Senator from Indiana a question, which is in line with his remarks. Why could not the work that is performed by this independent commission be assigned to the trade commission which we are proposing to establish by a bill that is pending as the unfinished business? Will not that commission have to deal with the very questions that the Commission on Iudustrial Relations are now considering?

Mr. KERN. I should think not.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why could they not be merged? It seems to me that we are getting commissions galore. We will have more commissioners of various types and kinds by and by than we will have Members of the House and Senate.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should think it would be quite impossible for the proposed trade commission to engage in the extensive work that is being done by the Commission on Industrial Relations. If Senators will take the trouble to read the testimony elicited in the Philadelphia hearings alone, I think they will agree that this appropriation should rather be increased than decreased, to the end that the sort of information they are getting should be obtained and diffused throughout the country.

Mr. BRISTOW. Are they not covering the same ground that ought to be covered by the Department of Labor and the trade commission which is to take the place of a bureau in the Department of Commerce? Are they not covering the same ground that these two departmental or governmental agencies should cover and deal with? Is it not multiplying the agencies to perform a work that is very important—we all agree as to that?

Mr. KERN. I think not. I think their work is entirely separate. In the first place——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me right there?

Mr. KERN. Not just now. The Department of Labor ever since its organization has been constantly hampered by a lack of appropriations. There has been a disposition to cut the appropriations for that department and to build up other departments at the expense of that department; in fact, it has not been treated as a department at all, so far as the appropriations are concerned, but is still regarded as a bureau. It has been hampered at every step it has undertaken to make in its work in behalf of the laboring interests of the country. The proposed trade commission will occupy a separate field entirely. The Commission on Industrial Relations has been organized as a sort of adjunct to the Department of Labor, with a view of showing and developing the industrial conditions. It is engaged in making investigations that are of the highest value, and I can only repeat what I said a moment ago, that if the Members of the Senate will take the report, which has not yet been published, of the testimony taken at Philadelphia—take the testimony of Dr. Nehring, of the University of Pennsylvania, alone—I think they will agree that this appropriation ought to be continued.

It seems to me, at any rate, that the committee and the Senate should inform themselves as to the character and scope of the work already done, and that the members of this commission should at least have been given a hearing with a view of determining the adequacy of this appropriation. I have no personal acquaintance with any man who is a member of the commission, but my attention has been called recently to the great work that commission is doing, and I think that a few of the appropriations for post-office buildings at crossroads, which are provided for in this bill, might be cut out in order to keep this appropriation at the amount provided by the House, to the end that this work should not be crippled or stopped.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I do not want to be understood as objecting to the work that is being done, but it seems to me that the work ought to be done through the regular agencies of the Government, which are created, as I suppose, for that purpose. If the Department of Labor has been handicapped for lack of funds, we ought to give it the funds, so that it can do the work that comes within its scope of operations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope Senators will let the reading of the bill proceed. We will reach this amendment in a very few moments, and it can then be discussed; but it will lead inevitably to confusion if we take up the amendments out of order. If we may proceed with the bill, as we reach the amendments, Senators can make known their wishes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if my colleague on the committee will permit me, I should like to reply to one suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], which, I think, he himself will want to amend. I wish to say that the Department of Labor has not been scrimped nor neglected by the Committee on Appropriations. We have increased one item from $25,000 to over $169,000 in one year. The committee has provided various liberal appropriations to cover the separation of the Department of Labor from the Department of Commerce.

In this particular instance we have provided liberally for the Commission on Industrial Relations. They had $50,000 last year. In the pending bill the House appropriated the sum of $200,000 for this year, but the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate thought they wanted further information. They bring the matter before the Senate, and the Senate can acquiesce or not, and then the item can go to conference for such correction as further information may suggest. I repeat, however, that, so far as I know, there is no disposition on the part of the committee or of any member of the committee in any way to cripple the Department of Labor or any division or bureau under it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that the committee have dealt as liberally with the Department of Labor as with any other department of the Government. If the Senator from Indiana will look at the appropriations made in the legislative bill and in this bill, I think he will agree that that is true.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is the amendment of the committee relative to the Commission on Industrial Relations now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I sympathize so fully with the view of the committee in cutting this appropriation that I merely wanted to say a word in support of it.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department," on page 39, line 7, after the word "violations," to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $200,000; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 25, after the word "Custodians," to strike out "1, $2,000, 1, $1,800" and insert "2, at $2,000 each"; on page 42, in line 2, after "$1,600," to strike out "1, $1,400, 1, $1,200" and insert "2, at $1,400 each"; and in line 3, after the words "in all," to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$8,400," so as to make the clause read:

Custody of dies, rolls, and plates: For custody of dies, rolls, and plates used at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for printing Government securities: Custodians, 2, at $2,000 each; distributors of stock—1, $1,600, 2, at $1,400 each; in all, $8,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Customs service," on page 44, after line 13, to insert:

Kansas City customs-collection district: A customs-collection district is hereby created, to be known as the district of Kansas City, with district headquarters at Kansas City, Mo., in which Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo., shall be ports of entry, said district to comprise such territory as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury should be embraced therein.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 20, to insert:

Tampa customs-collection district: A customs-collection district is hereby created, to be known as the district of Tampa, to include all of the counties of Hillsborough, Polk, Lee, De Soto, Manatee, Pinellas, Osceola, Lake, Pasco, Hernando, Citrus, and Sumter, with district headquarters at Tampa, in which Tampa (including Port Tampa), Punta Gorda, and Boca Grande shall be ports of entry.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask about that item. Does that mean that a collector of customs is to be stationed at Tampa?

Mr. BRYAN. It creates an additional district.

Mr. BURTON. It means the creation of an additional district?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. It is carved out of the district which now has its headquarters at Jacksonville?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. What is included in the district having headquarters at Jacksonville—the whole of the State of Florida?

Mr. BRYAN. The whole of the State.

Mr. BURTON. And no part of any other State?

Mr. BRYAN. No; except a small part of Georgia. I will say to the Senator that the whole of the State is included. Tampa is the twelfth port in the United States. It collects nearly $2,000,000 of customs revenue.

Mr. BURTON. There are two ways in which this could be managed; one by transferring the general or main office from Jacksonville to Tampa, and the other by creating a new district at Tampa. I do not feel disposed to antagonize this item, but it seems to me that it is creating a district much smaller than the average districts over the United States. Is not that the case?

Mr. BRYAN. That is true, Mr. President; yet after that is done this district will be the twelfth district in the United States.

Mr. BURTON. What will be the rank of Jacksonville with Tampa detached?

Mr. BRYAN. Jacksonville does not collect much customs. It is the headquarters of the State.

Mr. BURTON. Then why should not the headquarters be transferred from Jacksonville to Tampa?

Mr. BRYAN. Because Jacksonville is the distributing point, and it is more accessible.

Mr. BURTON. There are many distributing points.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator that Key West collects $600,000 of customs revenue. It is more accessible to Jacksonville, notwithstanding the distance is greater than it is to Tampa. The situation there is almost intolerable.

Mr. BURTON. Where?

Mr. BRYAN. In the whole State. Under this order of President Taft it was claimed that a saving of $119,000 would be effected, and yet the decrease in the collections at Key West alone has been more than that amount. Men will not do business by mail in the cigar industry. That is the whole of it. They want a collector there to whom they can go. I feel and believe that there ought to be a collection district at Key West also; but the committee was willing to go this far, and it corrected an evil to some extent.

I will say to the Senator from Ohio that there was a committee from the Tampa Board of Trade before a subcommittee of the Committee on Finance a few days ago. The members of the subcommittee are here, and they can point out to the Senator with more impartiality than I can the injustice and the injury that is being done to that portion, and that is being done in the collection of revenue for the Government.

Mr. BURTON. But under this reorganization order—and I am slow to believe that it causes a decrease of revenue anywhere—important districts were consolidated. For instance, my own State, with its approximately 5,000,000 of population, is not the whole of a customs district. The city of Erie, in Pennsylvania, is joined. I think neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor President Taft can be accused of any partiality or discrimination, because his own city of Cincinnati was made subordinate to Cleveland, so that all their correspondence with the head office must be with Cleveland. The positions of surveyor of customs at Cincinnati and Dayton and Columbus were abolished. Now it is proposed to have two customs districts in Florida, with an agitation for a third at Key West; and I must submit that it seems to me altogether out of proportion.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I said nothing about the order of President Taft being intended to work an injury upon any port, or that it was not made with the best of intentions. However that may be, I can point out to the Senator a number of districts that are barely self-sustaining. Some of them are not self-sustaining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 45, line 5, after the word "pharmacists," to strike out "$629,858" and insert "$729,858," so as to make the clause read:

For pay, allowance, and commutation of quarters for commissioned medical officers and pharmacists, $729,858.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 9, after the words "(attendants, etc.,)," to strike out "$477,606" and insert "$527,606," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of all other employees (attendants, etc.,), $527,606.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 22, after the words "special heads," to strike out "$245,000" and insert "$256,000," so as to make the clause read:

For maintenance of marine hospitals, including subsistence, and for all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under special heads, $256,000: Provided, That there may be admitted into said hospitals for study persons with infectious or other diseases affecting the public health, and not to exceed 10 cases in any one hospital at one time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 8, after the words "In all," to strike out "$1,856,964" and insert "$2,017,964," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $2,017,964, which shall include the amount necessary for the medical inspection of aliens, as required by section 17 of the act approved February 20, 1907.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 48, after line 19, to insert:

That portion of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, making appropriation to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, relating to small parks, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SMALL PARKS.

"For the condemnation of small park areas at the intersections of streets outside the limits of the original city of Washington, to be acquired from such areas shown on the map on file showing areas surrounded by streets in the office of the engineer commissioner, in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $25,000: Provided, That such condemnation shall be under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided further, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in any such proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said parks plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding thereunder, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, which, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia. The public parks so acquired shall become a part of the park system of the District of Columbia and be under the control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what change that makes in the existing law?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The only change, as I understand, is that it requires the little triangles to be surrounded by streets. The law as now on the statute books does not contain that language, in line 5, "showing areas surrounded by streets."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Those words are inserted?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They are inserted, and they constitute the only change made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No change is made in the manner of assessing?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. None at all. That is the only change.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, why is that limitation made? Why should these small parks be surrounded by streets? Then, another question: Why should we say "outside the limits of the original city of Washington"? It seems to me that the appropriations for parks could not be better made than to take these little triangles within the old city of Washington, where the congested population is and where there are no parks.

If you go outside of the city, there are large parks and large recreation grounds; but in the congested part of the city, in through here, the children have no place to play in the hot weather. These triangles are now occupied by junk piles in many instances. It seems to me they ought to be cleaned off and made into parks, instead of spending so much money on Rock Creek Park and other places outside of the original city limits.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I think, offered this amendment, and I have sent for him. He understands it better than I do.

I will say that, so far as I am concerned, if it had been an original question I think I should have been opposed to it altogether. I do not think it will be very beneficial. There is only $25,000 appropriated, and that is in existing law. This amendment that is put in the bill is in the nature of a restriction. I think those little triangles will be chiefly beneficial to the immediately adjacent property owners, and I think it is more in the interest of individuals than of the public. It did not commend itself to me at all, because I did not believe any material benefit was going to accrue to the public. Therefore anything that restricted it commended itself to me, and I was very willing to have it go in, because it was in restriction of what I considered a law not advantageous to the public.

The Senator from New Hampshire is now present, and he can give a better explanation of this amendment than I can.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand the Senator to contend that these triangular parks are of no use to the public?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Oh, some of them are very useful, but I suspected that behind this little $25,000 appropriation there was a tendency to get benefits for individual landowners. The one immediately in question here, I think, is right at the Kenesaw apartment house.

Mr. BRISTOW. If this $25,000 is to purchase some little tract of land somewhere to benefit an apartment house, I should like to make a point of order against it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will not say that; but I say I entertained a suspicion of that kind because certain persons were very anxious to have it incorporated. I am without any information, except that personally I was unfavorable to the whole matter, and this amendment was restrictive, and therefore I was very glad to see it go in the bill. The Senator from New Hampshire, however, may be able to give an explanation that will put a very different light upon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this amendment does not change the existing law; the $25,000 is already appropriated in another act; but it changes the procedure to this extent:

When the triangle upon which the Kenesaw apartment house now stands, being immediately in the vicinity of Rock Creek Park, was vacant I presented a bill providing that that triangle should be acquired by the Government, with a view to keeping open the entrance to the park at that point. That bill, as I remember it, passed the Senate and failed in the other body, and shortly after the Kenesaw apartment house was constructed on the triangle. There is now a little point running out south of that apartment house which it is proposed to acquire by condemnation, making the Government pay one-half the expense of acquiring it.

It is safe to say that up to this time there is not a reservation, small or large, in the city, including triangles, that is not surrounded by streets. In this case, if that triangle should be acquired, it would not be surrounded by streets. It would simply enable the Kenesaw apartment house to build out on ground they now own, some 30 or 40 feet, running south, and then have this tract of land that we would have acquired, the Government paying one-half of the expense, largely for the advantage of the apartment house. The triangle as it now stands is not surrounded by streets, and this amendment simply changes the present law to the extent of providing that no triangle shall be acquired that is not surrounded by streets. I think it is entirely a just thing.

Mr. BRISTOW. I see the purpose of it, and I am in thorough accord with it. I do not think the property holders who have property adjacent to these little triangles ought to have the Government buy and maintain these parks for their private benefit.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is precisely what will happen unless this amendment is agreed to, and I hope it will be. It does not involve any expenditure at all on the part of anybody.

Mr. BRISTOW. What I wanted to bring to the attention of the Senate was the desirability of making parks out of these triangles, such as you will see along New Jersey Avenue, that are now a disgrace to the city because of the condition in which they are kept. I want to see them cleaned off and laid out into parks for the benefit of the children in those congested parts of the city, and I think it ought to be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. It ought to be done; and that great triangle where the Kenesaw apartment house now stands ought to have been preserved for the purposes of a park. It was a beautiful triangle, overlooking the park, and we never ought to have allowed an apartment house to be constructed on it. I did the very best I could to prevent it, but did not succeed in getting the proposed legislation enacted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This amendment will simply prevent making one of these little parks an annex to some private property?

Mr. GALLINGER. Largely so, although it will be open to the public; and the amendment provides that hereafter those triangles or other small pieces of property that are acquired for parks shall be surrounded by streets.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Is it the purpose of this amendment to purchase part of that triangle?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, not at all; just the contrary. The owner wants to retain his right in that property. He does not want to be dispossessed.

Mr. NORRIS. My attention was attracted to some other matter, and I did not follow the statement of the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to my friend from Nebraska that this amendment prevents the commissioners from condemning that property and causing the Government to pay one-half of the expense.

Mr. NORRIS. Was there any law under which they could have condemned it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, I think so.

Mr. NORRIS. And was there an appropriation made for that purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the provision for small parks gives them the right to select such places as they may see fit to condemn for that purpose, up to the amount of $25,000.

Mr. NORRIS. In the case of the particular triangle about which the Senator is talking, is a part of it now owned by the public?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is owned by a private party or parties.

Mr. NORRIS. The private owner comes clear out to the end of the triangle?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the private owner does. There is an apartment house on the other end of it.

Mr. NORRIS. I was under the impression that a part of it is already in private ownership.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish I had the map here. I should like to show it to the Senator. But it is explainable in just this way. The apartment house owns a tract here and they have a little land that they have not occupied. Then the triangle runs out to a sharp point. The proposition is for the Government to condemn this land which is held by private parties, the Government paying one-half the cost, and making a reservation that will be largely a playground or something else for this great apartment house. It is true that children can occupy it also.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not the proposition in this particular item? This is to prevent that?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it is to prevent it. I have here a map that I will show to the Senator. That in blue [indicating] is the part they want to have condemned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 54, line 21, before the word "every," to strike out "lawful for" and insert "the duty of," so as to read:

It shall be the duty of every common carrier by railroad whose property is being valued under the act of March 1, 1913, to transport free of charge the engineers, field parties, and other employees of the United States who are actually engaged in making surveys and other examination of the physical property of said carrier necessary to execute said act, from point to point on said railroad as may be reasonably required by them in the actual discharge of their duties; and also, without charge, to move from point to point and store at such points as may be reasonably required the cars of the United States which are being used to house and maintain said employees; and also to carry free of charge the supplies necessary to maintain said employees and the other property of the United States actually used on said railroad in said work of valuation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that seems to me to be a somewhat remarkable amendment. The original provision as passed by the House was that—

It shall be lawful for every common carrier by railroad whose property is being valued under the act of March 1, 1913, to transport free of charge the engineers, field parties, and other employees of the United States who are actually engaged in making surveys and other examination of the physical property of said carrier necessary to execute said act, from point to point on said railroad as may be reasonably required by them in the actual discharge of their duties; and also—

The provision continues——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that the Interstate Commerce Commissioners appeared before us in person and asked for that change. The railroad companies were perfectly willing to carry the employees and to do this hauling without charge to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but the Interstate Commerce Commissioners apparently preferred not to receive it in that way. The railroads were willing to do it, and the Interstate Commerce Commission asked that it be made obligatory. It is perfectly satisfactory to the transportation companies and it was asked for by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt of that, but I object to that character of legislation. It seems to me that beyond any question Congress has not the power to compel a railroad company to carry the employees of the Government free of charge, and that is what, in terms, this proposed amendment does. It makes it the duty of every common carrier to carry these particular employees of the Government free of charge. We can exempt the carriers from the inhibition of the law so as to permit them to do it, as the House provision does, but we certainly have not any power to compel them to do it. We have no more power to compel a railroad company to carry employees of the Government free of charge than we have the right to compel them to pay money to the Government out of their treasury except as a tax to enable the Government to pay other expenses.

I think it is legislation which ought not to be passed, even though the Interstate Commerce Commission may ask for it and even though the railroad companies may assent to it. I do not like to see this sort of legislation written into the statutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think any harm will be done by it. I know a good deal might be said about the validity of a law imposing this obligation on them in connection with the public service which inures to their benefit as well as the benefit of the public; but I do not think it is necessary to go into a discussion of that question now. I think the best interests of the parties concerned will be promoted by the amendment which the committee proposes. It is agreeable to the transportation companies, and it is asked for by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I can not agree with the chairman of the committee. Even though the Interstate Commerce Commission may want it and the railroads be entirely willing that they should have it, that we should write into the statute books of the United States a provision that compels these common carriers to render this service to the Government free of charge, is upon its face a naked act of confiscation. It can not be anything else, and after the circumstances have passed away it will be a precedent for something else. We have not any power to do it, and we ought not to write such a provision into the statutes of the country. I do not know whether a point of order will lie against the amendment, but I will submit the question to the Chair. I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the point of order raised simply against the amendment proposed by the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to discuss it now. I am as much opposed to the House provision as to the amendment proposed by the committee. I think it is wrong even to permit the common carriers of the country to transport the officers of the Government engaged in this very important work free. I am opposed to it because it has an effect upon these officers that can not be avoided by any care upon their part. The Government of the United States ought to pay for the transportation of its servants when they are engaged in this work.

I mention this now because at the proper time I intend to move to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that I agree with the Senator from Iowa, except that this is a House provision, and rather than put the employees who travel under obligation to the railroads, making it lawful, we adopted the recommendation of the commission to make it their duty to carry them, so that they would not be under obligation to the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. The House provision is that it shall be lawful for the railroads to do it.

Mr. OVERMAN. So we put them under obligation to do it. Our idea was to make it their duty to do it, if it is done at all. I agree with the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be more opposed to the House provision than to the Senate committee amendment, but I am opposed to both. I think the United States can afford to pay the reasonable fare for its employees engaged in the public service. The very spirit of our laws forbidding free transportation condemns this effort on the part of the Government to make an exception in this case. I shall move to strike out the entire paragraph when the amendments of the committee are disposed of.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The bill is now being considered for action on the amendments of the committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Only for committee amendments.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Commission on Industrial Relations," on page 56, line 23, after the word "act," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the inquiries and investigations authorized by the act of August 23, 1912, entitled "An act to create a Commission on Industrial Relations," and to provide the expenses of such inquiries and investigations as are enumerated in section 2 of said act, $50,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether anybody appeared before the committee to show reason why this amendment should be made cutting down the appropriation to $50,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. A Senator appeared before the committee and objected to the appropriation. No member of the commission appeared before the committee, but the appropriation last year, as I recollect it, was $50,000, and we knew of no reason why it should be increased to $200,000. Objection was made to it, and the committee reduced it to the same amount which was appropriated last year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator know why the provision was originally put at $200,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was done in the House, and I do not know why. My idea was that when the bill gets into conference, if they could give a good reason for it, the amount could be increased. We had no information and we did not take time to summon people to have a hearing about it, because, as every Senator knows, there is a great emergency now for getting these appropriations through. We hurried the bill through the committee and did not make the investigation which probably would have been wise if we had had the time to do it. We knew of no reason why an appropriation which was $50,000 last year should be increased to $200,000 this year, and we reduced it to the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did the House have hearings upon this item? I presume they did.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia rose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Georgia is more familiar with the item and can answer.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The chairman of the commission appeared before the House committee and asked for that sum to complete the work. I believe he asked for $250,000. I am very much opposed myself to the large appropriation of $200,000. I think the commission is really doing work that ought to be done by the departments. The commission was created before the Labor Department was established. We had then the Labor Bureau. Now we have changed the Labor Bureau into a Labor Department, where there are experts engaged in doing a good deal of this same kind of work, and I think they are doing it a great deal better than the commission can do it. There is a good deal of duplication going on. I came in contact with duplication on their part in connection with the work done by the commission directed to investigate the question of vocational education. An appropriation of $15,000 was given to that commission to study the problem of vocational education and report a bill to Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the commission made a report?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Which commission?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Industrial Commission.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know. I have just been inquiring for it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have been trying to ascertain from other sources, and I can not learn of any reports from them. I thought probably the Senator from Georgia knew.

Mr. KERN. If the Senator will allow me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator. I should like to get some information.

Mr. KERN. I think Senators forget that this commission has just been organized.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; not at all.

Mr. KERN. The commission completed its organization within the last 10 months. It has been at work systematically perhaps during the past 6 months. It has no means, I understand, for the publication of its hearings. I have procured a typewritten copy of the hearings which they had at Philadelphia.

Mr. President, this commission has just commenced work. Fifty thousand dollars was originally appropriated for its organization. It has just now fairly commenced work. As I said a while ago, it is doing good work. Now, the proposition is to cut down the appropriation, so that the work may be discontinued.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is the character of the work they are doing?

Mr. KERN. If Senators will read the hearings that have recently been held——

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. KERN. They are doing statistical work.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to know the character of work they are doing.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And what good work they have done about anything.

Mr. KERN. They have not had time to develop an investigation of anything.

Mr. OVERMAN. What kind of work would they do? On what subject?

Mr. KERN. On all such subjects as the standards of living, the cost of living, and all subjects in which the working people of the country are vitally interested.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is being done by two or three other departments.

Mr. KERN. By whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. By both the Census Office and by the Labor Department.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. And by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Department of Commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN. And the Department of Commerce. There are four departments doing the same work they do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. If the members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations that reported this bill feel as they seem to feel toward this commission, there is only one thing to do, and that is to repeal the act creating it. I myself think the commission is initiating splendid work, but it is apparent to my mind that with $50,000 all it can do is to hold men there upon salaries without any means by which to earn their salaries. This appropriation of $50,000 will just about pay the overhead charges.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think there ought to be $50,000 overhead charges there? The commissioners are allowed to receive only $10 a day when they are actually at work. There ought not to be any overhead charges.

Mr. BORAH. The $10 a day is an overhead charge.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho if he knows whether the commission is preparing an investigation into child labor in this country?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know just exactly what kind of work in that respect it has undertaken to do, but I can imagine that it could create a good deal of opposition if it did that.

Mr. OVERMAN. We gave the Children's Bureau $100,000, and then we increased the appropriation to $168,000 to do the very same work they are doing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, this Commission on Industrial Relations is doing the same class of work that was done by a similar commission many years ago. There is not any doubt that the work of that commission was very valuable, but it was not followed up by Congress. Their completed work is now to be found in the Library, consisting of some 19 volumes. If the work of the existing Commission on Industrial Relations shall result in no more than that of the original commission did, it will not be of any great value, but if the commission does the work that we hope and expect it to do and practical use shall be made of it it will be of incalculable value to the country. They are to investigate the relations of capital to labor. They are to investigate the subject of child labor. They are to investigate many things which concern industrial relations in this country.

Now, if it will follow that up with concrete recommendations to Congress which Congress shall act upon, if it will solve or measurably solve any one of the half dozen great industrial questions that are before this country to-day, it will have justified its existence if it costs the Government of the United States a million dollars to carry on the work. If it shall help us measurably to solve the difficulties that exist between capital and labor, that alone will justify its existence.

One of two things ought to be done with reference to this commission. Either it ought to be abolished upon the theory that it is going to accomplish no good or it ought to be continued and given an adequate appropriation so that it may do its work well.

I would not like to vote for cutting this appropriation from $200,000 to $50,000 after the House has fixed it at $200,000 apparently upon a full investigation, and the Senate committee has cut it to $50,000 upon suspicion without any investigation whatever. I think it ought to be left either at the original amount of $200,000 or we should eliminate it altogether.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator puts that a little too strong. There was a hearing before the House committee, and it made a very unsatisfactory showing to me. We did not add to the hearing by summoning these parties before us, but the work seemed to be most latitudinarian. It is a very vague and indefinite service that they are contemplating, and it is duplicating the work that is being done by other departments. We could find nothing in the hearing that seemed to justify this appropriation.

I will say very frankly, while we made the same appropriation we did last year my individual opinion is that it would be a good thing to abolish it. But we are preparing the way for a further consideration of the commission, either to abolish it or to give it a better supply. I see no good in the work they are doing; it is a duplication of the work that other departments are now doing.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not know what the appropriation for the support of the industrial commission should be. No one has communicated with me with respect to this appropriation, and hence I am without information of a reliable nature. If $50,000 is adequate to meet the necessities of the industrial commission in the prosecution of its work, then no more should be appropriated. That goes with the saying. If more is needed, then more should be appropriated, and that goes for the mere saying.

So far as the work done up to this date by the commission itself is concerned, I am not sufficiently advised to speak with confidence. This, however, I do know, that the commission was created only about a year ago.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The commission was created some two years ago, but it was not organized, as the Senator says, until about a year ago. It has only had about a year or less than a year of active operation.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Indiana said a moment ago that it was organized and began work about 10 months ago.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will state that the act creating the commission was approved August 23, 1912.

Mr. STONE. That is when the act was passed. The commissioners were——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Just one second. The commissioners were appointed and confirmed some time in the spring or summer of 1913.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was going to say to the Senator that this commission was appointed by President Wilson——

Mr. STONE. They were appointed by President Wilson, and he did not come into office until March 4, 1913.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And, of course, these commissioners could not have been confirmed until after March 4, 1913. My recollection is that they were confirmed very little over a year ago.

Mr. STONE. And I recall very well, Mr. President, that after the nominations were sent to the Senate by President Wilson and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, of which my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] is the honored chairman, they were held in his committee for a number of weeks, I had almost said for as long as two months. It was quite a long while before that committee deemed it advisable in their judgment to report the nominations to the Senate. So, as I have stated, this commission was not actually created until sometime during the summer of last year.

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. KERN. I am informed that the appointments of the commissioners were confirmed on September 19, 1913.

Mr. STONE. That is less than a year ago.

Mr. KERN. And it was a considerable time after that before they were organized.

Mr. STONE. It is much less than a year since the appointments were sent in and approved by the Senate; and after the Senate confirmed the appointments the commission had to meet and organize.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The commission organized on the 24th of October, 1913.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Virginia states that the commission formally organized on the 24th of October last. Here we are now in the early days of July. So the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] was correct when he stated that the commission had not been organized exceeding 10 months. It has been organized, in fact, less than 10 months.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I desire also, with the Senator's permission, to remind him that the real work of the commission was not commenced until long after that time, because, after that, they had to organize the working force. My recollection is that they were not ready to commence work until about the first of the year. I think it was some time in February, if I recollect aright.

Mr. STONE. That must have been true. When the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] says that the commission was organized at the end of October, that means that the formal organization of the commission itself was had at that time; but the force to be employed, the work to be laid out and undertaken, of necessity came at later dates.

Mr. President, it is hardly fair, I submit, to arraign this commission, directly or by implication, with having accomplished but little, with not having made a showing that would attract attention within a period of six or eight months after it was formally organized and prepared for work. That is both unreasonable and unfair.

Mr. President, I confess I know little of the work so far done by this commission. I have had no consultations with anybody connected with the commission with reference to its work. I am, however, informed that it is the general purpose of this body to prosecute certain inquiries along important lines, which, if wisely prosecuted, will develop facts and furnish information of great value, which may perhaps be made the basis of useful legislation. Even though no legislation comes of it, the information gathered and the report may suggest and open the way for accomplishing good results through administrative action. For example, this commission might appoint a man thoroughly qualified to take up and prosecute a given industry, an industry typical of the class in which controversies most frequently arise between employers and employees, such as the ready-made clothing industry, in which we know that a great many conflicts come—intense, desperate conflicts—between employers and employees. Such a man could thoroughly examine into all that. We have here on the floor of the Senate time and again discussed industrial conflicts connected with that very industry—that of ready-made clothing—and we have heard Senators inquire as to the cause of them; who was to blame for them, and no intelligent answer was ever given. There was lack of information respecting the causes lying at the base of these disturbances. If we could be intelligently informed as to the causes that ordinarily lead to such disturbances, if we could have a hearing from both sides in a time of industrial peace, hear candid statements from intelligent employers and intelligent employees, and the hearing conducted by a man thoroughly qualified to go into that kind of work and to make that kind of inquiry, we should get some important facts and some valuable suggestions that would be of great use to the public authorities in settling or preventing such unfortunate and costly controversies, and thus great good might be accomplished. It was with that idea that the law creating this commission was enacted.

Mr. President, I do not know that these beneficial results can be accomplished, but they are worth striving for. I do know that if we could, through the work of this commission or in any other way, secure information upon which we might base a general policy of composing these controversies when they arise, and more especially to prevent them when they are threatened—if we could do that, I say, it would be of inestimable value to the whole country. I do not know whether we can or not, but a few thousand dollars expended in an intelligent and earnest effort to ascertain the great basic facts underlying these periodical conflicts would be well expended, and the facts gathered might be of inestimable value to the legislative and administrative departments of the Government.

I do not know whether $50,000 is enough for this work. Nobody has told me that it was or was not. We are told here this morning that members of the Commission on Industrial Relations went before the House Committee on Appropriations and made statements there as to the needs of the commission, and that that committee, which is not overliberal in appropriations, thought it advisable to fix this appropriation at $200,000. I do not want to appropriate more than is needed. Possibly what my friend from Virginia has said is all right. He says he does not know much about it; I have not heard anyone here to-day who does. The Senator from Virginia said that he should like to have the item go to the committee of conference that that committee might discuss the subject and thrash it out. That may be all right; I do not know. Personally, I would be glad if this item could be taken up at a later date—it can, of course, be taken up again when the bill reaches the Senate—and in the meantime I shall undertake to make some inquiries with regard to the work which has been done by the commission and what it proposes to do, so that some information worth while may possibly be laid before us. I am sure $50,000 is not enough.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senate should know whether or not there is a conflict between the work of this commission and any other department of the Government, for I do not think the work ought to be duplicated.

I am not acquainted with the personnel of this commission; I do not know anything about the character or capacity of the men and women who are engaged in this great undertaking. I am sure they are all they should be, but I do know that if the plans shall be carried out and the work done which was designed to be done by the law creating the commission, great good will result. It is intended to make better men and better women which, after all, is the greatest asset of any country. The greatness of the Republic does not consist in its great banks, railroads, manufacturing enterprises, and other sources of material wealth, but rather in the moral qualities and intellectual acquirements of its men and women.

This commission was created less than a year ago. The law requires that it shall make a report once a year and that its labors shall be completed within three years from the enactment of the law. Let us see what it was created to do:

SEC. 4. That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

Mr. President, the work to be done by this commission, as has been so well said, will be of incalculable benefit to the whole country. That it should be hampered or its good work hindered or prevented by a failure to provide sufficient funds for the investigations which are to be made I think would be a great mistake. The Senate should do one of two things—it should give them the material with which to work or it should abolish the commission outright.

I do not know of any subject that can engage the attention of man more commendable or one which addresses itself more to my heart and judgment than that which tends to ameliorate the condition of the laboring people of this country—the toilers upon whose tired backs the whole superstructure of commerce and of industry rests. I submit, Mr. President, that in the face of the confessed ignorance on the part of the Senate as to what this commission are doing it is not wise, it is not prudent, to hamper them with an insufficient appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have not yet received a report from this commission. Officially we have not been notified as to what they are doing. If we read the bill creating the commission, and read, also, the bill subsequently providing for the Department of Labor, I think we will find that the large majority of the duties assigned to this commission in 1912 now belong to the Department of Labor.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Then does not the Senator think it is better to abolish this commission than to continue it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do not. The commission has done eight months of work, and I think it should be permitted to close up the work it is doing; but I do not think it should be encouraged to spread out its work into fields better covered by the departments. A considerable portion of the work that it contemplates doing falls under the work of the Department of Commerce. A large part of it belongs to the Department of Labor. My attention was attracted to the work of the commission when we were engaged in preparing the bill and having hearings upon the subject of vocational education. I found that the commission had so spread out the scope of its contemplated investigations that there was practically nothing in industrial lines, reaching even into vocational education, that it had not contemplated investigating. I think that a mistake.

The Senator from Utah mentioned child labor as a problem for the commission to investigate. I think that would be a mistake. We have our Children's Bureau. It is well organized. In it there are experts who have been engaged since its organization in doing the work, and who will continue to do it. I do not believe it is possible for a temporary commission, organized as this one is organized, to obtain the experts or to do anything like the efficient work that will be done on the same lines by a department where men are trained for the work. I am sure there are to-day in the Department of Labor men who have been there for years, first with the Commissioner of Labor and now in the Department of Labor, who have information, who have experience, who know how to investigate many of the problems that the bill creating this commission might permit it to investigate, and who would do it very much better than anybody who can be found by the commission to help it.

My view of the matter is this: We could give them $50,000 and encourage them to curtail the scope of their investigations, to specialize in something that is not already being done better in the Department of Commerce or the Agricultural Department or the Department of Labor. Their field extends over both agriculture and labor. I do not think they have undertaken to interfere with agriculture. I am sure they can make no researches in agriculture that will be comparable to the work done by the Agricultural Department; and my own observation of their hearings, and of some who have been before them, has led me to believe, after conference with experts in the Department of Labor, that they are scarcely as well provided with assistance in making examinations as they would be if they had the benefit of the trained experts in the Department of Labor.

If we feel from an examination of their first report, which must come to us by the 1st of October, that their appropriation should be increased, it can be done. We can add to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, does the law creating the commission require them to report by October next?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It requires them to report every year; and as they were confirmed in September and organized the 1st of October, they will have to make a first report by the 1st of October.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that we certainly will have the report at the beginning of the next session of Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At the beginning of the next session. I think they ought to wind up their work without spending $200,000. I think the commission ought to cut out of their work a good deal of the breadth of investigation that the bill creating the commission would authorize.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator seems to find fault with the breadth of the work which has been undertaken by the commission. As I read this act, it seems to me that they were given a very wide field to cover; and if they are to carry out the purposes for which the commission were originally organized I can readily see that they will have need for a great deal of money.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there could be a million dollars easily spent and five years taken. There could be $2,000,000 spent. There could be almost a limitless sum spent within what is covered by the bill creating the commission. It has almost no limit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the commission have not assumed to do anything that the law did not authorize them to do, have they?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not said that they did, although I will confess that I think they almost stretched their responsibility when they took up the subject of vocational education. That was going a little further than they were required to go, although I will not say that this language is not broad enough to authorize them to take up any problem connected with agriculture, agricultural schools, farm demonstration work, and so forth. Anything in the line of fitting agricultural labor to do its work better might possibly fall within the scope of the bill creating the commission, although I can not concede that it extends to education.

What I mean is this: I think the bill is bad, to be frank about it. I think the bill tendered to this commission a breadth of work which could not be properly done by a commission. It requires the continuous work of a department, and it really belongs to existing departments; and in order to be done successfully it must be done by men who are selected for permanent employment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no disposition whatever to cripple the work of this commission if it does confine its activities within proper channels. I recall the fact, and we all recall it, that a few years ago we had a so-called industrial commission. That commission spent a great deal of money, and the results of its inquiries were printed in 19 large volumes. I recall the fact that in our debates here we sometimes referred to some material that was found in volume 17, as I remember; but I think it would be a wild fancy for any Member of this body even to suppose that those volumes had all been perused by any living man or woman.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They would scarcely be accepted in anybody's library.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The shelf space would not be conceded to them as a gift.

Mr. GALLINGER. I know that I could not give mine away. In view of that fact—and I have frequently thought of it—I think we are a little careless in creating these commissions, in giving them so much leeway that they can enter almost any and every field of human activity, and necessarily trench upon the work of the established departments, which, as the Senator properly says, have experts in all these matters.

So, while I am loath to take any action that would seem to be hostile to the work of this commission, I feel sure that it will be wise for Congress in some way to curtail their operations if they are reaching out into all the fields that the Senator from Georgia suggests they are disposed to enter. We are spending so much money in the duplication of work even in the departments that I have often wondered that some wise man, here or elsewhere, did not take up that subject with a view of correcting it. If the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor are charged with work similar to that of this industrial commission, it is very evident that the activities of the commission ought to be limited to a proper field.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I have had in view was that we could give them an appropriation of $50,000, which might be a suggestion to them to pick out some special lines, and to seek carefully to avoid duplicating what is being done in the departments. Then, when we meet next December, if we find that the special lines toward which they are turning their attention are not being duplicated in the departments, and they need still further money to complete those lines of work, we might add a further appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have obtained a copy of the hearings of the House Committee on Appropriations on this bill, and it contains the statement of the chairman of the Commission on Industrial Relations with reference to this matter. I have not had time to read it over thoroughly, but I have had an opportunity of glancing through it, and I think a reading of it by Members of the Senate would be quite illuminating.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the Senator ought to read it to the Senate; otherwise it will not be read.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I intend, Mr. President, to read some parts of it.

In the first place, it appears that over $100,000 has been already appropriated for the use of this commission. It does not appear that it has been unwisely or injudiciously expended. Mr. Walsh, the chairman of the commission, in outlining the work of the commission, at page 493 of the hearings, says:

> At the first meeting the lines of the investigations were attempted to be laid out, and they included four—a division of public agencies, a division of private agencies, a division of industrial conditions, and a division of legal agencies. There were four heads of those divisions appointed to make a report to the next meeting of the commission and to outline the course that the work ought to take. You gentlemen may understand, in the formation of this commission, the difficulty that there would be in the commission getting together, as it were. It was formed with three members representing labor unions and selected by the labor organizations, three members representing employers, and three members representing the general public.

I may stop there to say that I know some of the members of this commission personally, and I know them to be men admirably fitted for the discharge of these duties. The commission is made up of three representatives of the employing class, and they are all men of broad information and broad attainments; of three members of labor organizations, who are among the best-informed men in the labor organizations of the country; and of three members, also capable and efficient, who were appointed as representing the general public.

Mr. Walsh continues:

> Each member of the commission made suggestions to these heads of division, and they came back for another meeting. Now, as you may well understand, that program involved a good deal of work. The public agencies involve those which are required under the law to inquire into the subjects of safety, sanitation, and hygiene, and the work involved a study of what had been already done and what is being done in that respect by public agencies and by private agencies, such as the National Council of Safety and others, that cooperate with public agencies.

Then he goes on and discusses at some length that phase of their study. Further on, at page 494, he says:

> It involved a study of the methods of wage payments; that is, in the organized and the unorganized industries all questions of profit sharing, etc. It also involved a study of all questions of efficiency other than that involved in efficiency systems.

I call the attention of the Senators who may be interested in the subject to the character of the work which this commission has been doing:

> It involved a study of the regularity or irregularity of employment; a study of seasonal, floating, and casual labor; a study of employment agencies, public and private, and the laws governing them in the various States. It involved a study of the public agencies and the laws governing them; and of the private agencies, and of the operation of those agencies. It required a study of the question of fluctuating employment, which involved the regularizing of employment, and of the efforts being made in the various industries throughout the United States to regularize it. It involved the question of the feasibility of the passage of minimum-wage laws, which included a study of those laws that might already be in effect, as well as those that were in process of passage, or that were in charge of committees throughout the country. It involved also a study of woman and child labor generally.

It will be seen that these men are studying questions of grave and immediate importance; questions that are engaging the attention not only of Congress but of the legislatures all through the country; questions that must be settled in some satisfactory way in the reasonably near future, or our whole industrial system will be in danger of breaking down.

> It included what might be called a diversion of industrial conflict, and a study of those conditions to ascertain the methods of industrial warfare; that is, as to how those disturbances are policed, and the operation of the militia and the operation of the police toward them.

I will not stop to read all Mr. Walsh says, but I will ask to insert in the RECORD without reading some other portions of his testimony.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Among other things, they made a study of the problem of unemployment, which is one of the most serious questions confronting this country, and particularly at the present time, under this administration, where it is taking a most acute form. They have endeavored to arrive at the causes of that condition. That, of course, in a great city like New York alone would involve a vast amount of labor and time.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] said that he did not see how it was possible for this commission to carry out the work outlined by this law within any reasonable time. Mr. Walsh, in answer to a question of that same character put by Mr. SHERLEY, said:

> That is the way it would strike any person of ordinary judgment engaged in trying to carry out large projects. In the first place, you will notice that we are studying relations and not conditions. We have taken, or I have taken, the report on the formation of the Royal Industrial Commission of Great Britain in 1894, and that is the very best commission on a broad subject of this kind that there is extant in the world, and we had others translated and presented to us—

The Royal Commission of Great Britain, which was appointed in 1894, is a good example of the immense good that can be accomplished by a commission of this character. It was owing to their work that the trades-dispute act was passed and various other legislation in Great Britain. That commission completed its labors in three years. It cost Great Britain $350,000, and yet people who are familiar with its work say that no money was ever better spent. Their work was over a comparatively small area as compared with the work of our own industrial commission—

If we should undertake to make an extensive investigation of any of those subjects that I have read to you there, I could expend that entire appropriation on any one of them, and it would extend beyond the life of this commission, undoubtedly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I would ask that the interstate trade commission bill be substituted for that bill as the unfinished business. The understanding between the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], of the Committee on Commerce, and myself was that the trade commission bill should be only temporarily displaced, and that at the close of the consideration of the river and harbor bill last evening he would ask that that bill be temporarily laid aside. Through an inadvertence that was not done. I ask unanimous consent that the trade commission bill be restored as the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that there has been no purpose on my part to supplant the trade commission bill, but that was the effect of the ruling of the Chair on my motion to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill. However, the trade commission bill had been temporarily laid aside. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that he consent that the Senator from Virginia may proceed with the sundry civil appropriation bill and that this matter be held in abeyance until the consideration of that bill is finished. I shall not, I assure the Senator, try to supplant his bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I was about to state that upon the trade commission bill being restored as the unfinished business it is my purpose to ask that it be temporarily laid aside in order to accommodate the Senator from Virginia who has charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is now under consideration. What is it that the Senator from North Carolina suggests?

Mr. SIMMONS. I suggest that we temporarily lay the unfinished business aside and let the Senator from Virginia proceed with the sundry civil appropriation bill, and when that has been concluded the Senator from Nevada can make his motion, and I will not resist it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, yesterday the trade commission bill after considerable difficulty was laid over until to-day. It was temporarily laid aside in order that I might have the opportunity to prepare some observations to which I intended to give expression. In view of that, although it was at some sacrifice to my personal comfort, I am prepared to discuss one phase of that bill, and I would very much prefer to do it now. It is a legal question, pure and simple. I think I can get through in a reasonable length of time. I came here expecting to go ahead. While I do not want to discommode the rest of the Senate, at the same time if I am to say anything on this phase of the bill I would prefer doing it at this time.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I hope very much the Senator from Missouri will postpone his remarks and let this appropriation bill be completed. Every Senator understands that the sundry civil appropriation bill carries $111,000,000 that will be urgently needed the 15th of the month. The Government can not proceed with its business without these appropriations. If the Senator will forego the presentation of his views until we get through with the sundry civil bill I am sure it will be promotive of the general good.

Mr. REED. I would not allow my personal convenience to interfere with a matter of that kind.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I appreciate that. I was sure the Senator would realize the necessity of giving the right of way to this appropriation bill.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15613, the trade commission bill, so that it will be the unfinished business; and after that is done I shall ask that it be laid temporarily aside for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ayes have it, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 15613.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move, then, that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that there is no such motion.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think the matter can be easily solved. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 17041.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I had substantially completed what I wanted to say upon this proposed amendment, but I will ask the permission of the Senate to insert in the RECORD two or three additional extracts from the testimony of Mr. Walsh before the House committee on the subject which I have been discussing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

We have to study the question of what is the relation of safety, sanitation, and hygiene to the industrial relations between employer and employee. A shirt factory burned down in New York and many people were burned to death. Following that there was a strike. The incidents of the strike were lost sight of altogether in the publicity given to the suggestions of the leaders of the shirt workers. A strike might be based upon the proposition, for instance, that the toilet arrangements were such in places that they were deleterious to health and anything else of that kind. It is a constant source of industrial unrest. We are supposed to find out the cause of the industrial unrest and to suggest remedies.

We are required to look into the matter of collective bargaining. I will try to illustrate it by one phase that involves whether or not men are left in a position to do collective bargaining, if it be true, for instance, that an automobile factory may put in such improvements as will throw 1,000 machinists out of work. The question of unemployment is a very significant one for us to understand when we come to study collective bargaining. Where did the unemployed come from? How did they happen to be unemployed? Is collective bargaining a good thing? If so, why are not others dealing under it? Now, that you mention, criticism, of course, was unfortunate. I want to say that you would be surprised how many minds are on this commission—the labor people, the unemployed, and the business people—and the constant question is being asked in Congress and elsewhere, "What is the commission doing?" Now, the investigators of the commission were being sent to New York prior to the time of this publication for the purpose of finding out, if possible, about that matter. We did not make that statement. It had been published, however, over and over that there were 350,000 unemployed in the city of New York, as given by the charities association. Our investigators were going down there to study the question as to where these people came from, regardless of their number, because every one on the commission agreed that the best time to make that study was in the winter, when the unemployed mass in large cities.

* * * * * * *

We have been in constant conference, Mr. FITZGERALD, since the day I met with you before. We have had Prof. McCarthy and Prof. Commons, who are on the commission, specially detailed on that work, and they have figured out that if this appropriation were made as it is asked and we did the work we have already outlined—and we have it quite definitely outlined—we could get up as good a report as could be made, constituted as we are, at the end of one year and eight months. It would not be that the work was covered, but that we would be able to say: "This is what we will have to have; this is the machinery we think the Government ought to have permanently to do this work." It might lead up to something like the conciliatory board which you already have; and unless we go into intensive investigations, which Congress did not intend and which might overlap other work, I think we will perform the work in one year and eight months. We are just approaching the work of holding our public hearings, and naturally we are sending out investigators in advance, and that is where the largest expense is going to be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Walsh's statement will, I think, very clearly demonstrate the wisdom of adhering to the House appropriation of $200,000.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to ask for the insertion of a few lines which he does not insert, and which I wish to have follow that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to insert the following language on page 510 of the House hearings:

Mr. WALSH. We have at the present time 54 people working for us in one capacity or another. That number may be a little less or a little more.

Mr. MONDELL. How many of them are in the field?

Mr. WALSH. Fourteen, which includes those I have mentioned as advisors to our commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not know the purpose the Senator has in view in reading that, unless it be to show that the commission is employing a very large number of assistants.

Mr. WARREN. The question was raised as to how many were employed, and I wished to have that statement appear.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt they are all well employed. I think this commission is in good hands, and that the work is being properly conducted. It is required under the law to complete its labors within three years. That is not sufficient time, because a year elapsed before it began the work at all. I think ultimately we will have to extend it another year so as to give it a full three years' period. That was the time which the royal commission of England took for similar work, a work not as extensive in character as this, but along similar lines covering the area of Great Britain, small as compared with the great area of the United States. Yet they took three years, and, as I said a moment ago, spent over $350,000.

The work of this commission is of the most important character. They are obliged to complete it within a very short time, and in that time they ought not to be crippled for want of funds.

I hope that the House appropriation of $200,000 will remain in the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Utah sent for the House hearings and has given us some information about the necessity for this appropriation, even though it is not as exact as I would like to have it. Some partial excerpts from the act creating this commission have been read here on the floor, but they do not give a complete idea of the duties which are imposed on the commission. Therefore I will ask that public act No. 300, being the act approved August 23, 1912, establishing this commission, be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public—No. 300.]

An act (H. R. 21094) to create a Commission on Industrial Relations.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created to be called the Commission on Industrial Relations. Said commission shall be composed of nine persons, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not less than three of whom shall be employers of labor and not less than three of whom shall be representatives of organized labor. The Department of Commerce and Labor is authorized to cooperate with said commission in any manner and to whatever extent the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may approve.

SEC. 2. That the members of this commission shall be paid actual traveling and other necessary expenses and in addition a compensation of $10 per diem while actually engaged on the work of the commission and while going to or returning from such work. The commission is authorized as a whole, or by subcommittees of the commission, duly appointed, to hold sittings and public hearings anywhere in the United States, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses and to compel testimony, and to employ such secretaries, experts, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes for which such commission is created, and to rent such offices, to purchase such books, stationery, and other supplies, and to have such printing and binding done, as may be necessary to carry out the purposes for which such commission is created, and to authorize its members or its employees to travel in or outside the United States on the business of the commission.

SEC. 3. That said commission may report to the Congress its findings and recommendations and submit the testimony taken from time to time, and shall make a final report accompanied by the testimony not previously submitted not later than three years after the date of the approval of this act, at which time the term of this commission shall expire, unless it shall previously have made final report, and in the latter case the term of the commission shall expire with the making of its final report; and the commission shall make at least one report to the Congress within the first year of its appointment and a second report within the second year of its appointment.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913: Provided, That no portion of this money shall be paid except upon the order of said commission, signed by the chairman thereof: Provided, That the commission may expend not to exceed $5,000 per annum for the employment of experts at such rate of compensation as may be fixed by the commission; but no other person employed hereunder by the commission except stenographers temporarily employed for the purpose of taking testimony shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of $3,000 per annum.

Approved, August 23, 1912.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The personnel of the commission I find on page 289 of the Congressional Directory. It appears that the chairman of the commission is Mr. Frank P. Walsh, of Missouri; and Mr. John R. Commons, of Wisconsin; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, of New York; Frederic A. Delano, of Illinois; Harris Weinstock, of California; S. Thruston Ballard, of Kentucky; John B. Lennon, of Illinois; James O'Connell, of the District of Columbia; and Austin B. Garretson, of Iowa, are the other members of the commission. The managing expert is W. Jett Lauck, of Virginia. The executive secretary is R. P. Ritter, of Missouri. The office of the commission is in the Southern Building in the city of Washington.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Utah that the duties imposed upon the commission by Congress will not be performed within three years, and whether they can ever be satisfactorily performed or not is a question about which I am skeptical. I do not know much about this commission, though I have seen from time to time references in the press to hearings that have been held, some in the city of New York, and the statements of parties who appeared before it.

The problems which the commission is asked to investigate and to report upon are problems which will be with the human race as long as the human race exists, and whatever may be the ability or the capacity of the individuals who compose the commission, three of whom represent the employers, three the employees, and three the public at large, if that is the proper expression and if that public at large can be differentiated from the other two kinds of people who compose the commission. They are supposed to come to a finding upon a series of questions contained in the act which I have put in the RECORD, and which will be of some service to Congress and to the country in the solution of these problems.

Mr. GALLINGER. Provided they agree.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I say they are supposed to come to a finding. Of course, to come to a finding, I assume they must have at least a majority of the commission; and if the commission consists of nine members, it would take five out of the nine to agree upon a finding and report to Congress. If the other four should be opposed to the finding upon this class of most intricate and complicated subjects, I do not believe myself that it would have a very preponderating weight with the Congress of the United States, if that is the body which the labors of this commission is supposed to illuminate and inform upon these subjects.

I think I will just read section 4, in spite of the fact that I have put it in the RECORD, for my own information as well as that of other people. It provides:

That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

If these words happened together, without any guiding intelligence to arrange them in sentences, I can understand their being in the act. Some of these things are perfectly idle inquiries. You might just as well have imposed upon this commission the duty of defining exactly the twilight zone of the antitrust law for the members of the trade commission who are to solve what the courts and the rest of mankind have found themselves more or less unable to solve, or to demonstrate exactly where the different hues of the spectrum cease to glide imperceptibly into each other, and to accurately define where one color begins and another ends.

It is perfectly preposterous to expect any conclusion that is worth the paper it is written on as to that last and crowning function imposed upon the commission, and I say that without in the slightest degree desiring to minimize any good work the commission may be engaged in. I mean to say that nothing can be expected of them or of any other nine men who could be appointed to have hearings on this subject for three years. If Congress expects this commission to continue to inform itself and hear the statements of such parties throughout the country from whom it thinks it can get information and eventually to report to Congress, it will have to continue the commission for years.

The situation here is as to whether Congress shall appropriate $200,000 or $50,000 for the paying of the expenses of this commission for the fiscal year; $100,000 was appropriated in the act which created the commission. I have not had the opportunity to examine the House hearings as to what has become of that $100,000. I do not know whether it has been spent or not. I assume, however, that the presumption is that that $100,000 was expended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator whether this money appropriated is partly used to pay the salaries of the commissioners, or is it simply for expenses?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The commissioners themselves are limited to $10 a day and their actual expenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. So a portion of this appropriation goes probably for the payment of per diem expenses of the commission.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; section 5 of the act provides—

> That the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

That is all it says, "for the use of the commission."

But the commissioners themselves in another part are limited to $10 a day and their actual expenses, which, of course, is a very small and merely nominal compensation.

I assume that the gentlemen who are on this commission are as qualified to perform the duties imposed upon them as could be selected, and what I say is not in criticism of the commission, because, if anything, they have my sympathy instead of any criticism. I hope with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] that their services will be valuable, as he says the services of the royal commission in Great Britain were valuable.

But I do say that I regret that this sort of a question comes up to us to determine without the necessary information. There is no possible way, so far as anything has been said on this floor, by which any Member of the Senate can determine whether he ought to vote $200,000 or $50,000 for the use of this commission for the next fiscal year.

What is proposed to be done with the $200,000 that the presiding officer of the commission has asked for may be revealed in the House hearings, but it has not been read on the floor.

My inclination is, of course, to be economical. I do not want to appropriate anything wastefully from the Treasury, no matter which party is in power. Neither do I want to be niggardly. But in this matter, with no particular information by the Senate committee other than a general vague guess, I should call it, that $200,000 is too much, I should be inclined to take the view of the House committee which estimated for $200,000.

I assume there must have been some testimony before them which would justify them in recommending that sum, but I will say candidly that I think if the duties imposed upon the commission in the act which I have put into the RECORD duplicate in any way the duties which are imposed upon regular continuous administrative officers of the Government, we ought not to appropriate any money for the commission without cutting out or preparing some amendment which will delimit the duties of one governmental agency from those of another.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that they have taken up the subject of child labor and are undertaking to investigate those conditions all over the country and have had hearings on this subject, when the Children's Bureau is charged with that duty, and has experts there engaged in the same work, and, I think, much more intelligently.

I simply call attention to it as an illustration, for I have been furnished with some of the testimony taken by them which is really ludicrous. I will just read an extract from one of their witness's statements, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Referring to certain mills and the children at work there, this witness says:

> The whistles blow at 3 o'clock in the morning for the operators.

The witness stated that the whistles blew for the force at 3 o'clock in the morning and they were not required to go to work until 6.

The proprietors of the factories, all the parties interested on the other side, say this is so utterly absurd that it is hardly worth while contradicting.

Mr. KENYON. Where are those men employed?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At Rome, Ga. It is utterly untrue. I do not mean that the witness meant to state what was not true. It is just a ludicrous statement, without foundation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will read the explanation of the witness for the reason they blow the whistles three hours before the work was to begin:

> Q. Why does the whistle blow so early?—A. So as to get them up. Southerners are not very active, and they give them plenty of time.

This was brought to my attention, and I call attention to it. Of course, the proprietors of these mills were not very much pleased at that kind of statement, when it was entirely without foundation.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire the name of the witness.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The name of the witness is Miss Watson.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The extract the Senator has read reminds me somewhat of a suggestion the witty John Allen, of Tupelo, Miss., once made, that they fired cannon very early in the morning to notify the colored men that there was to be an election that day. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I assume the instance cited by the Senator from Georgia is not an ordinary one, but it is a ridiculous one. Under the act as I read it hastily this commission has got to embalm all that testimony, and when they make their final report to Congress all this testimony has to go along with their report. It does seem to me that this act, before the Government makes some appropriation for the continuance of its work, ought to be amended so as to prevent such unfortunate occurrences.

After a three years' inquiry by a commission of this kind there must be thousands of pages of worse than useless testimony that they have taken that ought not to be printed at Government expense and bound in the Government Printing Office, with the usual number of copies for the disposition of men who try to get people to furnish shelf room to put such junk as that in their houses or offices. I think wherever this commission is duplicating any work or doing any work that any other agency of the Government under any existing law is doing this act ought to have all those duties cut out of it.

I hope that attention enough has been attracted by this little debate which we have had upon this provision to call the attention of the proper committee to the fact that before more money is appropriated they should have a bringing of the duties imposed upon this commission into line with those of other agencies of the Government; and if this work is being substantially done by the regular channels of the Government, then this temporary commission should not be allowed to exist.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield to me?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why would it not be better to merely give $50,000 to run the commission for the next 6 months? We shall then get their report; we shall see what they have been doing, and we can then determine whether we want to curtail their powers or to stop them. The commission will end by law in 12 months.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In three years from the date of its creation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. The date of the approval of the act was August 23, 1912.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the Senator's question is asked sincerely, and I receive it in that spirit. I would be perfectly willing, as I say, to cut this appropriation down to $50,000, or to $10,000, if that is all that the commission needs for this work; but I say I feel confused as to what my duty is when Congress has created a commission and charged it with certain work, and the House of Representatives has said, after hearing the testimony, which the Senate does not appear to have heard, that $200,000 ought to be appropriated. I do not want to hamper this commission in its work.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The chairman of the commission, Mr. Walsh, wanted $250,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And I have no doubt he could spend $2,500,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt if he should put force enough at work to answer all these questions he could spend that amount.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean with a long investigation that much could be possibly spent on the study of these various questions, except that I think we ought to do that by the department.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Without expressing any opinion about whether Congress was wise or was not in creating this commission, for I do not know as to that, the situation is that it is in existence and is halfway through its official life. The Senator from Utah says its official life must be extended to perform its duties. Before we go on appropriating any more money for it we ought to know what we are going to make it in the future. Of course, if we are simply to give it a dose to taper off on, $50,000 will probably wind up the work of the commission in good shape and enable it to make its report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Really, that is what I desire.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I assumed so. I do not want to give it knock-out drops if it is worthy of existence. The Senator from Utah wants to refresh it, to continue it, and to give it a future life.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the Senator's attention to a statement made by Mr. Walsh. He calls attention, first of all, to the work which the commission has been doing. Then he says:

> I think we will perform the work in one year and eight months.

That is, the remainder of the work.

> We are just approaching the work of holding our public hearings, and naturally we are sending out investigators in advance, and that is where the largest expense is going to be.

Of course it is necessary to have their investigators go out and ascertain from whom information of value can be obtained, to ascertain what particular sections of the country, what particular industries, ought to be specially investigated; and so on. That will in the end save money. Then, further on, I call the Senator's attention to this statement:

> The CHAIRMAN. As I understand, the commission has done the work considered essential preliminary to the public hearings?
> Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; we have.
> The CHAIRMAN. And now you are arranging to have public hearings, so as to give persons who may have special information, or who may imagine they have, an opportunity to present their views?
> Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; that is it.
> The CHAIRMAN. And after that you will commence to formulate your conclusions and recommendations?
> Mr. WALSH. Yes.
> The CHAIRMAN. This preliminary work that has been done, as you have already pointed out, resulted in the accumulation of a large amount of very valuable data?
> Mr. WALSH. We think so.
> The CHAIRMAN. Will that result in eliminating a large amount of material from your public hearings?
> Mr. WALSH. No, sir; except it will enable us to perform the work intelligently and mass facts that otherwise it would take us years to do.
> The CHAIRMAN. What I had in mind was whether by securing this data you have not eliminated the necessity for a great deal of investigation that otherwise would have been necessary?
> Mr. WALSH. We have, of course, eliminated the necessity for a great deal of scattered investigation. We could have jumped right into the middle of this work with a splash, and what we would have left afterwards would have been discreditable to us and of no service to the Government.

There is more to the same effect, but I call the Senator's attention to this statement further down, on page 509:

> However, we have tried to pick out the things that we think are significant as affecting the relations between employers and employees. We will try to suggest the remedies in the way of machinery that would make for better relations, and I have laid out, or attempted to lay out, the views of the commission upon that. An intensive study of any one of these subjects would take this entire appropriation.

Of course, they do not intend to make such a suggestion. Now, I ask the Senator to mark this statement:

> There is an organization in New York studying the question of unemployment with an appropriation of $200,000 per year for a period of five years. Of course we are going to scrutinize their data.

There is an organization in New York—I do not know what it is; I have only Mr. Walsh's statement for it—whose investigations of that single question of unemployment will cost a million dollars, and yet probably it will be money wisely expended.

You can not make such investigations without spending money.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I entirely agree with what the Senator says. Of course I assume that when the chairman of the commission says that there is an organization in New York which has spent $200,000 on a particular investigation, the commission will have the advantage of the results of that investigation, which will save this Government just so much money in the investigation of the general subject for the purpose of their results.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly. They also have the advantage of the work of the British Royal Commission, and Mr. Walsh says the commission went all over that work and that it assisted them very greatly in forming the proper outlines for their own work. Of course they also have access to the work of the other commission in New York, to which I have referred.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, and the Senator does not differ from me at all. I have no doubt these intelligent gentlemen—as I assume them to be, and who are perhaps noted in this line of work—have sense enough to know where to find the information which they want to get for the purpose of organizing their inquiry upon the proper scale. As the Senator has just read, they have up to this time been compelled to spend nearly one-third of their entire official existence in preparing themselves to reach the point of getting ready to hold public hearings, but my recollection is that they have had some such hearings. I think I have seen statements to that effect. If these men are expert and intelligent on the mass of subjects imposed upon them to be investigated, they will examine the sources of information and the results of other investigations all over the world—those in our insular possessions as to Asiatic immigration; those in foreign countries as to the relations of labor and capital; those in this country as to sanitary conditions in places of production; protection to life and health in our mills and factories; child labor and such questions, any one of which would take any body of men a considerable time to investigate both as to the facts and the existing conditions; and then as to the causes, and then as to the best remedies to be applied, and of course it is a monumental work. It is a work such that the Senator from Utah, being familiar with the work of the British Royal Commission, predicts that this commission will have to ask for an extension of time to complete, or very likely its previous efforts and the money the Government has spent upon it will be brought to no valuable or informing conclusion, and hence will be wasted.

I am not a business man, but if I were in business and had any kind of work like this to perform, and had to pay for it myself, or was acting for people, or employed by people, to expend their money for them where it would produce the best results, it seems to me I would want to know before I appropriated either $50,000 or $200,000 whether it was my intention to extend the life of this agency that I had constituted, or whether I was going to cut them off in their prime, and whether I had also some other agency that was now doing a part of the same work that I was paying this agency for doing. I would feel more or less guilty of negligence to the people who were paying me a salary to look after their affairs and adjust them economically, if I should, in deciding a question between $50,000 and $200,000 to be expended during the next year, have no better information than I now have when I am compelled to vote on this matter. I would also have a more fixed opinion as to whether or not I wanted this work done at all. If the commission recommends that the time shall be extended within which it can complete its work in the way that it ought to be completed, and in view of the experience which it has already had—and it must be more experienced than we are—we shall be compelled probably to take its judgment about the matter. If we are going to continue its existence, then it would be a pity for Congress, having created this commission and instructed it to do this work, in which it has spent $100,000, to strangle it and to prevent its own creature from performing the duty that we have imposed upon it when it has been working largely practically without salary.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the strangling stops $500,000 of waste it might be desirable, might it not?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator, if this commission could really evolve a remedy for almost any of the tremendously important subjects which they are investigating it would be worth $50,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator the slightest idea that they will do so?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator must not press me too hard about that, because I am more or less of a practical turn of mind, and I see the difference sometimes between a general benevolent and sympathetic feeling for a grievance and the possibility of applying a permanent remedy, one that I am sure will remedy it.

I think I have already said that while I do not have, perhaps, an optimistic faith in the practical beneficial results that may come from these inquiries, still I think it is my duty, if I do not consider that their labors will be worth the money, to abolish the commission and to confine my effort in some other channel to get the information, if it is possible to get it; but I do not want to leave the commission instructed by Congress, when its members are acting more or less in a charitable kind of way—for the amount provided for the members of the commission of $10 a day, if they are at all qualified to investigate these subjects, is not intended to be compensatory for their services; they are giving their services to the Government, and they are simply getting their expenses out of it practically—I say, so long as Congress imposes these duties upon that commission and keeps it in existence we ought not to strangle it; we ought not to impose a task upon it and then deprive it of the tools wherewith to execute the task that we have ordered it to perform, especially when the members of the commission are giving their services. Therefore, before we can know whether to appropriate $50,000 on the winding-up theory, or $200,000 on the continuing theory, when the chairman of the commission has asked for $250,000, we ought to decide the question of policy; and we can decide now just as well as we can next December whether we are going to continue the commission or cut it down. As I have said, if I were running my own affairs or were hired to run those of a company or of a corporation, I would not allow this thing to be decided on the present information which the Senate has before it. I do not mean that the information is, perhaps, not in the House hearings or not within the reach of the Senate, but no business corporation would determine the question as between an appropriation of $50,000 and one of $200,000 in the way we are going to determine it to-day.

That is what makes this Government so expensive. I think it was Senator Aldrich, several years ago, who said that two or three hundred million dollars were wasted by this Government which would not be wasted if it were run by John D. Rockefeller and philanthropic gentlemen of his stripe. They would know how that two or three hundred million dollars could be saved. They might get "cussed out" for saving it; somebody might say they were the "criminal rich"; but they would not be spendthrifting it around. I think this is the kind of a thing that shows almost the hopelessness of administering Government funds economically and efficiently.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this commission had its origin among a class of public-minded men who have devoted their entire lives to the study and consideration of such questions as this commission is supposed to investigate and consider. It did not have its origin among the Members of the Senate or among those who might be interested in filling the places with men who simply desired an office. The work of the men who gave origin to this idea speaks for itself, and whether the commission shall do what it was designed to do or not, those who designed it had a high purpose and a high motive in view. None of the men who originally conceived the idea of the commission and its work either desired or would have accepted a position on the commission, but they thought there was a certain line of investigation which had to be made and which ought to be made at the public expense; that it covered too wide a field and was too expensive to be made and would not be made with continuity or with system by individuals outside of Government employ. So they came to Congress with this idea, it was formulated into a bill, and the bill passed the Senate and the House after discussion and consideration in both bodies. The criticism which now seems to be lodged against the bill was not lodged against it at the time when we created the commission and authorized them to proceed. If all such criticisms were not made, there was an opportunity to make them.

The commission having been created and gone forth with this authority, and having been at work some eight or nine months, we are met here this morning with the criticism that they have spread out all over the earth; that they are going into fields where they ought not to go; that they are too ambitious to find out facts and to make investigations. They have gone nowhere they were not authorized to go; they have initiated no investigation that they were not commanded to make; and they are seeking to do nothing other than that which the creating body authorized them to do. In my opinion the criticisms which have been lodged against this commission are rather in disparagement of the Senate than of the commission.

If the Senate ever has a spasm of economy, it is in relation to just the kind of a proposition now before the Senate. Whenever there is a movement to investigate certain lines of industry and certain conditions in the industrial world and the relationship of capital and labor, if there is going to be a spasm of economy it will come upon us right at that time. We are rushing through here with a great deal of effort and energy a river and harbor bill, which carries at least $25,000,000 which can neither be justified in law nor in conscience, and we are getting altogether unduly excited over the fact that we are about to appropriate $200,000 to investigate the great question of the relations of labor and capital.

It may be that some uninformed and inexperienced employee who has obtained his position by virtue of the influence of some Member of Congress has made some unfortunate report which does not do any particular credit to the situation; but I call attention to the fact that this commission was not made up after it had been created until the present administration came into power. I happen to know that the President of the United States spent a great deal of time and consideration in the filling of this commission, and he filled it with men and women who he believed had the capacity, the public mind, and the public spirit to do the work imposed upon them; and, in my humble opinion, there is not justly to be lodged a single word of criticism against this commission at this time.

I know how sensitive some of us are as to the investigations of the conditions of child labor and of the sweatshops and death traps and hell holes in which the lives of the young people of our country are being ground out of existence; I know how throughly it stirs the blood of economy when we begin to "lift the lid" off of that hole into which we are pouring the young lives of this country year after year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he really thinks that has anything to do with the objection which has been urged against the Commission on Industrial Relations?

Mr. BORAH. I really think it has.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On whose part does the Senator think it is having an effect?

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to be personal.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I only desire to say that he will remember that no Senator upon this floor supported more cordially than I did the bill to create the Children's Bureau, and I certainly can not think that he believes that I would object to any proper investigation in behalf of children or any investigation to protect children from improper treatment anywhere.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have made no reference to the Senator personally; I do not care to do so; and I would not do so if I were justified in doing so; but I do not hesitate to say that for years there has been a powerful influence asserting itself one way and another against the right treatment of the child-labor question in this country, and no one ought to know it better than the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. SMITH of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield, and to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to either one of the Senators.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I merely wanted, Mr. President, to call the Senator's attention to the fact, with which, I presume, he is already familiar, that his criticisms about the failure to provide for investigations into the question of child labor are not altogether justified, for we have already provided nearly $200,000 at this session of Congress for the Children's Bureau. That was done in the legislative appropriation bill, and while I do not happen to have the exact figures in my mind, I think the appropriation was $169,000.

Mr. BORAH. I am not criticizing the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, my criticism upon the Senator's remarks is that I do not think he is presenting the case fairly. I believe I have said more against the work of the Commission on Industrial Relations than any other Senator, and I called attention to its work with reference to child labor. There is no reasonable appropriation that I would not vote for to help the Children's Bureau. I believe there is the place to make investigation on the subject of child labor, and there is the place where the work should be performed. I do not believe that nine men put on a commission, with its work spread out so broadly and so thinly, can do the work comparable with a bureau organized expressly for that purpose and thoroughly equipped to do it. I do not think the Senator is justified in suggesting that the resistance to work of this kind being undertaken by a commission and the insistence that it be performed by a bureau established for that purpose, the creation of which I supported with great pleasure and about which I had the privilege of first speaking in the Senate, and to which I am thoroughly attached—I do not think the Senator is justified in the character of argument that he is making, certainly so far as the Children's Bureau is concerned. The question is, Where can we have the work done best? I believe that it will be done best by the established permanent agencies in the departments.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I am not criticizing the integrity of view of the Senator, but that does not modify the statement which I made. I made no reference to the Senator individually nor to the Senator's views. I simply said that I did not desire to be personal about this, whether the person was inside the Chamber or outside the Chamber; but no one doubts the influence which is constantly exerted upon these matters. No one who has been connected with the Committee on Education and Labor and this legislation for the last 10 years need to doubt it. It is exerted in manifold ways, and generally up to within the last few years has been successful in killing all legislation on that subject.

Mr. President, there are conditions in this country which ought to be investigated, studied, and considered, and about which we can not have too much information. We will leave the subject to which we have drifted in this morning's debate as to whether or not there is duplication with reference to child labor investigations and such matters. There are other matters which the commission are specifically authorized to investigate, concerning which no one seems to be doing anything effective in this country, and yet matters which every one must, upon reflection for a moment, concede to be a distinct menace to our institutions.

We have had in this country in the last eight or nine months more exhibitions of force, more exhibitions of civil war, of riot, and of disregard for authority than we have ever had, to my knowledge, in the same length of time. I am not saying that I think it has arisen by reason of this administration or these policies, but by reason of conditions which have been accumulating and growing up in this country for a number of years and by reason of the fact that we have given no consideration and no study to those industrial questions. We have confined ourselves almost entirely to the study of and to legislation upon those old political subjects, which have almost been displaced by the social and industrial questions which have arisen.

Take, for instance, the situation in which we find one of the States of the Union now—a state of armed neutrality, of civil war, in which the State authority is defied, in which the governor of the State says that the parties are simply resting in quiet, in sullenness, until such time as they can get to one another's throats. When this commission was created its author had in mind particularly just such conditions of affairs.

I read from an article in the North American Review, which says:

> For four years an industrial struggle, which only recently reached its most acute development, has been going on. The economic problem, serious enough in its beginning, has reached a tragic climax of nation-wide importance. During these four years much bitterness has been engendered, and the dispute, which originally involved an economic question between capital and labor, has finally become political—between the State on the one hand and those who deny its authority on the other. Riot has assumed the proportion of rebellion, focusing the attention of the whole American people upon the State —

Giving the name of the State.

No worse condition than that exists in Mexico—men shot down, women and children incinerated, burned alive, or smothered. If this commission, with its able corps of men and women, can find or bring to the Senate facts and suggestions which will enable us to take a single step in the solution of so tremendous a subject, we will have justified ourselves in spending not only $200,000 but a million dollars, if necessary, in the investigation of altogether the most important subject before the people to-day.

This would not be so bad if it were confined to one locality or to one situation, but at the time that condition prevailed in that State the same condition of affairs was going forward in three or four other States in the Union. A land of unbounded natural resources, of unlimited wealth; a land which ought to be blessed with indescribable prosperity, is cursed by a condition of civil war by reason of the strained relations which have grown up between capital and labor in this country.

Has anybody here a solution? Has anybody a remedy? Is there any bill pending, is there any information at hand, or are we to sit idly by and quietly permit the matter to grow until it shall pass beyond the control of law or authority?

This article further says:

> The troops of the State were able to enforce peace. But it was a sullen and unwilling peace. The mine guards were disarmed and sent away. The strikers promised to surrender their arms, but they did not do so. Similarly, a recent promise of the leaders to surrender these arms to the United States troops was unfulfilled. In the meantime, and after the military occupation had begun, I continued unceasingly my efforts to adjust or settle the strike.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who is the author of that article?

Mr. BORAH. The governor of the State of Colorado.

Upon the next page he quotes from a statement signed by the leaders of the strike, and I want to invite the Senator's particular attention to it. It says:

> Organize the men in your community in companies of volunteers to protect the people of Colorado against the murder and cremation of men, women, and children by armed assassins employed by the coal corporations, serving under the guise of State militiamen.
> Gather together for defensive purposes all arms and ammunition legally available. Send name of leader of your company and actual number of men enlisted at once, by wire, phone, or mail, to W. T. Hickey, secretary of State Federation of Labor.
> Hold all companies subject to order.
> People having arms to spare for these defensive measures are requested to give them to local companies, and where no company exists send them to the State Federation of Labor.
> The State is furnishing us no protection, and we must protect ourselves, our wives, and children from these murderous assassins. We seek no quarrel with the State, and we expect to break no law. We intend to exercise our lawful right as citizens to defend our homes and our constitutional rights.

Mr. President, those laboring men, in their rage, in their just or unjust cause—I do not know, and do not undertake at this time to pass upon it—came conscientiously, undoubtedly, to the belief that they had no protection under this great Government of ours except that protection which they derived by organized force, by arbitrary power. Practically, sir, a great and wonderful State of this Union broke down in its power to enforce law and order; and even the great Government of the United States had no remedy to offer to those men except the remedy of force—the presence of an army—which did no more, says the governor of the State, than to enforce sullen peace. Is the use of the Army, the soldier, the only solution a proud, intelligent people offer to a condition which involves the happiness and welfare of—ultimately, sir, the happiness and welfare of all our people and permanence of our institutions? I do not state the question too broadly; it means all of that.

If this commission, sir, shall be able to throw any light upon such situations; if it shall be able to investigate these matters and bring here the real truth and the real facts, or if it shall give them over to the authorities who are there in immediate command, and, anyway, to make a single step toward the final solution, amelioration, or adjustment of this question, it will be worth all the money we put into it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows whether or not this commission is investigating the conditions in the locality to which he has referred?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know whether it is or not; I can not say. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, however, that I do know, by reason of my connection with the passage of the law, the men who planned it in the first instance, that it was just that condition of affairs they had in mind—the adjusting and study of these situations as they might arise, to find out the real cause and why it was that the disturbance came on, and that possibly a remedy might be suggested.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question because it just occurred to me that about the very best place in the world for them to be sitting right now and for some months back would be right out there and see what they could get at first hand.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator perfectly. There is no place which could better engage the attention of this commission than just such places as that. In other words, they should follow the rule of Napoleon, and that is, where the fighting is thickest there they should be.

Just a closing paragraph, Mr. President, and you will see the situation:

> The State has taken no side whatever in this industrial conflict. I have used every means at my disposal to bring about a settlement and to avert civil war. A time came when I found the leaders of one side of this conflict heading an armed rebellion against the State. I can not escape the belief that Colorado's experience is but a local expression of general conditions and, in that aspect, of vast importance to the people at large. The remedy for such conditions lies with the legislative and not with the executive branch of the Government. It is a governor's duty to enforce the constitution and laws of his State. The hundreds or thousands of men lately in arms against the military forces of the State are still in Colorado, and so are their arms, hidden away, perhaps to await a future use. What the future holds, who can say?

That is the only suggestion the governor of that great State has to make.

Now, Mr. President, the people of the State of Colorado are no different from the people of any other State in this Union.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire what document the Senator has just read from.

Mr. BORAH. I was reading from an article written by the governor of Colorado upon this subject, printed in the last issue of the North American Review.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The people of the State of Colorado, as I say, are no different from the people of the other States of the Union. They are a most intelligent and industrious people, and they have a great State. The conditions which exist there may exist in any industrial center of the United States for the same reasons and upon the same grounds that they exist in that State. I apprehend that in all probability the public officers of the State of Colorado are no different and would act no differently from the public officers of other States of the Union; and I do not wish the inference to be left here that the Colorado situation is a peculiar one, or that there is anything connected with the State itself or the people of that State which superinduces or should superinduce that condition of affairs, separate and distinct from what might come in any other State. It only vivifies and brings to our mind the fact, as the governor indicates, that this condition is practically universal. It is because labor and capital in this country are in armed neutrality; and if the Congress of the United States has made any investigation or has taken any step to investigate those conditions, other than is provided for in the act creating this commission, I do not know of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I mistaken in the thought that this very body has appointed committees that have gone to these places and made investigations? The House has done so, I think, in the case of Colorado, and this body did in the case of West Virginia.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is true so far as the mere fact of investigation is concerned. I have not seen the report. I do not know whether a report has come in from the committee that went to Colorado or not. It may have. But, Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire knows what the functions of those committees are and what they do and all they do. To go to make an investigation and study the situation and try to resolve upon some means of ameliorating the situation and preventing it in the future belongs to experienced and trained men and experts who have nothing else to do while they are doing that other than to do that. For Members of Congress to drop out of the session for a week or two and go into these matters and investigate them is to come back with a very small smattering of information in regard to the facts. The work here makes it impossible to give the time or the investigation that is contemplated by this commission.

It was to call into the field of activity trained minds and enable them to devote their time to this subject that this commission was created. Why, Mr. President, this commission has been in active operation now for eight or nine months. When we look over the activities and the long life of the commissions which have been created in England and in Germany we find that they run through years and years. Some of those reports are so well grounded and so thoroughly gotten up that they have become authority the world over. We can afford to be liberal; we can even afford to take the chance of some of this money being wasted if we have faith in this commission, as I have. I believe the President selected its members conscientiously and effectively and with judgment, and I believe it is our duty to give enough money to it to justify its work and to continue it without the thought that to-morrow or next day or next month its existence may be terminated. Here, with the commission in existence only eight or nine months, we are discussing the question of repealing the law and ending its existence, as if its members could study these questions and pass upon them in eight or nine months and furnish us any information which would be of value to anyone.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the existing conditions in this country growing out of the relations between capital and labor present one of the gravest problems that Congress and the country have to deal with to-day. Unless we can control these conditions by some peaceful means they are going to shake this Republic to its foundations before very long. The conditions do not seem to improve. On the contrary, so far as we can judge from what has happened in the last few months, they have grown worse and more dangerous to the institutions of the country.

We pass laws intended to correct these evils. We are compelled to enforce those laws, often by resorting to force; but that does not settle the question. It arouses the animosity and the rage of the men we are attempting to help and control. They resist it, and resist it by force, resulting in bloodshed. We can not reach it in that way. It must be done in some other and more effective way than that if we are going to correct these conditions at all.

If this commission that has been provided by Congress is able to help us, even in a small degree, to solve this great question, we ought not to hesitate to appropriate money sufficient to enable it to make the investigations that will enable it to do it.

Personally, I do not think much of investigations made by commissions or by committees. We do not seem to get anywhere by these investigations. I think the great trouble in this country is that the people themselves are not taking the interest in it that they should if we are going to solve these questions. It can not be done by Congress. It can not be done by a commission or any number of commissions. It is a matter of education, and the restoration of the people to right thinking about conditions of that kind.

Possibly the investigations and reports that are made by commissions and committees may help to educate the people to realize how dangerous these conditions are to the country and to the people. Unless we can do that, unless we can reach the problem by reaching the public mind, then the condition looks to me to be hopeless. I do not believe the people of this country begin to realize how serious the question is.

We have this commission now. It was brought about, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, largely through the influence of men who have studied these questions and the difficulties growing out of them—charitable, generous men, who do realize the situation and who are anxious to do anything that can possibly be done to better conditions. I know personally one of the members of the commission. He is a man of high character, who has studied these questions faithfully and earnestly. He has traveled abroad at his own expense for the sole purpose of informing his own mind, independently of his appointment to the commission, and before the commission had been appointed or even thought of.

The trouble about it is that we are piling up volume upon volume of information that is obtained through these commissions and committees, and nobody reads them, or at least very few people read them. The knowledge that is obtained in that way is confined to a very few people. There is not sufficient interest taken in it to induce the people generally to look into it and to determine for themselves what the conditions really are or what may be done to improve them.

In my judgment no more important commission has been created by Congress for a long time than this one on industrial relations. The field that is laid out for them for the making of investigations is so broad that it is going to be impossible for them to cover the whole of it; but just this one condition of things that has resulted, what has happened in one of the States of this Union, should give them an opportunity to investigate at least one branch of the subject intelligently and with benefit to the people of this country. The commission has not been in existence for a sufficient length of time for us to know whether or not it is going to do good work, practical work. I should like to see it continued at least for a sufficient length of time to give it the opportunity that is required to investigate conditions and help us to improve them. I think Congress ought to be liberal in the making of appropriations with that object in view; and for that reason I hope this appropriation that has passed the House will not be reduced in this body.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, the Commission on Industrial Relations was established by a solemn act of Congress in August, 1912. I have no doubt that at that time the same arguments that are used to-day were used against the passage of the bill. Nevertheless, it was then believed by Congress that other departments of the Government and other commissions were not covering the field that was sought to be covered by that legislation.

One matter in particular with which I am familiar, and which has not been discussed to-day, is that which authorizes the commission to investigate the conditions and provisions for protecting the life, the limb, and health of employees. Thousands of men are killed every year in industrial pursuits for lack of the most ordinary safeguards. Hundreds of thousands are crippled for lack of those safeguards. I have heard it stated that for every story of a skyscraper erected in the city of New York one man is killed. I believe that is an exaggeration; but it does show what a tremendous loss of life and limb there is for lack of safeguarding workmen.

When a man is killed, his wife and children have to be supported by somebody, and usually they are supported at public charge. They become paupers in many cases. Every man who is crippled so that he can not support himself must be supported by some one else, either as a result of a suit against the company or as a pauper. So that that one field presents an opportunity for a tremendous saving to the Government.

This commission has only one year further in which to act, and it should be given ample funds. I know some of the members of the commission; I know by reputation other members. I have great confidence in the commission and in the work it ought to do if it has the funds with which to do it. I have no doubt the chairman of the commission made a careful estimate of the expense for the next year. His figures were cut from $250,000 to $200,000 in the House. I think it reflects little credit upon the United States Senate that we have passed over here to-day, without question, hundreds of thousands of dollars for this project and for that; we have appropriated millions of dollars without discussion, and then, when we get to this one item, where labor and its relations to capital are to be considered, we rise and shake our heads, we discuss, we wonder, we even make it a subject for joke and humor and ridicule.

It is no joke to the wife and the children of the man who has been killed through the carelessness of his employer. It is no joke to the man who has lost his arm or his leg on account of the lack of proper safeguards. I do not think the Senators here, in the wit they have indulged in, have intended to treat this subject lightly. I have a better opinion of them than that. It is a most important subject.

The fact that one witness before this commission was mistaken militates nothing against the condition we are seeking to secure. Before the Banking and Currency Committee there were many witnesses who made foolish remarks, but that was what the committee was for—to sift out the wheat from the chaff; to take the good and to reject the bad. There is no doubt that this commission will do just that; and while I have no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the committee acted according to their best judgment and with entire honesty and fairness in the matter, I do hope the Senate will restore the $200,000 that was appropriated in the lower House.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Committee on Appropriations saw fit to reduce this appropriation. The act creating this commission was passed by a Democratic House and a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President. In view of the relation of the Democratic Party to the laboring people of this country I say again that I regret the Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to make this reduction.

When the act was first introduced in the House of Representatives and passed unanimously, as I recollect, by that body, it was proposed then that the whole sum of $500,000 should be made immediately available in order that the commission might properly map out and plan its work and employ its experts, so that it should be put in a position to carry out and perform the duties imposed upon it by Congress.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] referred to the opposition that measures of this kind have met with in his experience in the Senate, and I can supplement everything he has said and go much further than he went from my own experience with legislation of this kind in the House.

There was considerable opposition to this proposition and the influence of some of the gentlemen who oppose all legislation of this kind is manifested by the language that is found in the last section of the act. These final touches, in my judgment, were given to the act by the National Association of Manufacturers. In the closing days of that session of Congress I rescued the bill from the hands of a gentleman who afterwards, in the lobby investigation, turned out to have been in very close touch with these people.

You will notice that limitations are thrown about the ability of the commission to spend money; that they shall not be permitted to pay more than a certain amount of money for experts; and that the salaries are limited and expenditures curtailed in various other ways. Those provisions were obnoxious to me and objectionable to the supporters of the measure, but the friends of this legislation were then, as they are now and always have been, willing to take half a loaf rather than no bread. So the bill was passed in its present form.

Then the struggle was taken up before the Committee on Appropriations and it has gone on from time to time ever since. Instead of the amount of money being appropriated which it was estimated the work would cost, to be turned over to the commission in order that it might properly map out and plan its work and put into execution the purposes and perform the duties they were called upon to carry out, $100,000 was appropriated with the understanding that whatever money was necessary for the proper expenses of the commission would be freely granted to them; now the chairman of the commission is asking for $200,000, which the House granted, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate of the United States proposes to cut it down to $50,000.

So far as any charge of extravagance made against the commission is concerned I simply desire to say that before the commission was appointed it was believed by the men who were favorable to this legislation, and I will say that I introduced the bill in the House of Representatives myself, that it would take at least half a million dollars to properly conduct the investigations. There has been no attempt on the part of anyone up to this time to get more than that amount of money. There has not been any attempt on the part of anyone to get that much money. That amount was wanted at once. They wanted it to be made available immediately. They thought they could do better work with the money if they had it in one sum than if it were parceled out from time to time by piecemeal. I agree with that view. I think better work could have been done if the money had been appropriated at once.

The present situation is an illustration of it. The chairman of the commission undoubtedly expected to encounter opposition in the House and in the Senate. Opposition had been encountered before. It was encountered when the original appropriation was made. A wise and conservative man, as I believe him to be, he was not likely to enter upon a program calling for an expenditure of a sum of money which he might not be able to get and which it seems now he was not able to get from at least one of the committees of Congress.

This industrial commission, in my judgment, serves an extremely useful purpose. It is differentiated from any department of the Government in that it can conduct its investigations and has conducted its investigations in such a manner as to escape any charge of partisanship.

I remember when the silk strike was on in the city of Paterson, when thousands of people were out of employment and marching on the streets daily, when they were being arrested by wholesale and the jails and police stations were crowded beyond their capacity, when there were so many cases the courts could not deal with them, the cry went up from that municipality, as it always goes up from every municipality stricken in that way, for a congressional investigation. Most people seem to have a blind faith in Congress and immediately they want a congressional investigation under such circumstances. I resisted that demand. I could not see what good it would do the city of Paterson to have a committee of Representatives and Senators go over there and call those men on the stand and allow them to make charges and countercharges against each other and stir up strife and make the situation incomparably worse than it was at that time. I said to them that there had been passed by Congress an act creating a commission of nine members and the appointments were then pending before the President of the United States. I asked them to desist in their demands for a congressional investigation and to await the appointment of this commission, which I was urging the President every day to appoint, and then the commission, having no interest in either side of the controversy, and having no political position to sustain and no policy to espouse, could make an investigation, and if an investigation were of any service they then would receive the benefits of one that would command the respect of everybody.

Unfortunately for me and unfortunately for the people the commission was not appointed in time to be of any service in that particular instance, but months after the strike had been settled and the employees had returned to work the members of the industrial commission went to the city and conducted an investigation. They had public hearings. They called the manufacturers before them, and they stated the circumstances out of which the strike arose. They called the representatives of the organizations of labor and they called the representatives of unorganized labor and they got the side of every party to that controversy. The public had a chance to compare the extreme statements of the employers with the extreme statements of the employees, and occasionally a fair-minded statement from a public-spirited man who had no interest—except a general interest—in either party to the controversy. They have not yet made their report, but it is apparent to anyone who has kept watch upon the columns of the newspapers that they gained information that had never been made public before, because we all know that in a time of an industrial strife no statements find their way into the columns of the press except extreme statements on one side or the other.

I can refer you to the time when another strike was in progress in that city. For more than six months I represented the strikers in various suits, ranging from cases before the police court justice to the Supreme Court of the United States. Probably at one time or another 150 or 200 people were defendants in those suits. The newspapers from one end of the country to the other carried the alleged details of what went on in that city. Injunctions were issued; contempt proceedings were instituted. Men and women were sentenced to pay fines and to suffer imprisonment in default thereof, and in some cases in addition thereto.

Although to the outside world it seemed that there must be a state of absolute anarchy in that city, in all that period of six months there was not a dollar's worth of property destroyed and there was only one charge of assault made. Yet those interested in that dispute had influence enough to make it appear to the world at large that a deplorable situation existed.

I think the efforts of the industrial commission and the hearings they held in the city of Paterson have been productive of great good. The manufacturers, without any industrial strife, without any trouble or disturbed conditions, had a chance to go to those public hearings and hear the men whom they employed state their wrongs and grievances.

This commission held hearings in the city of New York, and any student of these affairs is bound to admit that they brought out facts at the hearings in New York that had never been brought out before, and they brought them out in a way in which they had never been brought out before. They have so conducted themselves that they are regarded as a fair, nonpartisan commission, that have no party to sustain and who care not where the chips fall, whose only duty is to hew to the line.

I regret very much that the Senate, a Democratic Senate, should see fit to reduce this appropriation. I fondly hoped, and I do hope and I believe, that the Democratic Party is sincerely interested in the welfare of the laboring people of this country. I believe that the welfare of the laboring people of this country is indissolubly connected with the welfare of the Democratic Party and that one needs the other.

I sincerely hope that the chairman of the committee will permit this appropriation to remain as it was left by the House. If I had had my way in the beginning, I would have appropriated $500,000 for the expenses of the commission; and if it developed then that they could not finish the work with that amount of money, on a proper showing they could have been granted more money. As the Senator from Idaho said, we can afford to waste a little money on a proposition of this sort. I do not, however, think any of it has been wasted.

I am unfamiliar with the detailed work of the commission. All I know about it is what I have seen in the public prints. The chairman of the commission I have never met, to my recollection. One or two members of the commission I do know slightly; but I know the scope and character of the work they have been carrying on. I believe they are trying to do it conscientiously, and I believe their work when finished will be productive of great good to the laboring people of this country.

For the life of me I can not see why, when we are spending money so generously in every direction, spending money recklessly, I might well say, in every direction, we are called upon to economize on a proposition of this sort in which the welfare and the well-being of practically every man, woman, and child in the United States is involved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not think that the very particular point at issue is of such vast importance, but the discussion has taken a wide range and opens up a vista which is vast, and I do not feel willing to let what I may call a groan of pessimism go from the Senate to-day unmodified as a cloud to be spread with no sunlight to aureole it.

This world, and especially the relationship between capital and labor, as well as most other things pertaining to humanity, are growing better every year, and not worse, as Senators seem to think. A man can throw his eye backward 5, 6, 10, or 20 years and come to the conclusion that the relation between capital and labor is worse than it was once; but if he throws his eye back farther—decades and demicenturies—over this same field of history, he will not be discouraged. He will remember that in the beginning one man could not get another to work for him at all except by just capturing him, making him a slave, and forcing him from day to day to work, while the workman received nothing except enough to keep him alive so that he could work. Thus slavery was the first expression of the relationship of labor to capital.

One might come away down below that period, down to the beginning of the new enlightenment in Europe, and his imagination might be set afire reading the history of the peasants' war, culminating most acutely in 1492, when the villeins upon the great feudal estates were fighting for the right to work as free men.

We come down later after the great plague in Great Britain when labor riots were constant things for years, so graphically celebrated by William Shakespeare when he brings Jack Cade and others upon the stage.

We can come down to the very opening of our own time, Mr. President, and remember the Chartists in Great Britain, when houses, ricks, barns, machinery—everything—were being destroyed every day; a time which enlisted the giant intellect of Thomas Carlyle in some of his Latter Day Essays to explain how the situation came about and how it could be bettered.

In our own time, remember the Molly Maguires. Nothing as bad and apparently hopelessly defiant of law and order has succeeded it. These things come and go on the surface of the turbulent stream of liberty and progress. When they have gone the sky is clearer, and men can see more clearly and farther than before they came. There is something learned from each, which, taken at its value, ameliorates conditions and makes for peace in the future—for mutual understanding presaging peace.

Things are better now, Mr. President, and they are growing better, and they are growing better by the spiritual growth of men, and for the most part this spiritual growth has not come about as the act of government anywhere in this world. Where government has done any good at all, it has generally done it after the public conscience had been awakened to the fact; so that the act of Congress or of legislature was nothing but the fiat of the Government set upon the will of the people and set upon the results wrought out by an awakened conscience—set upon and catching and fixing the accomplished fact of one more stride forward.

This spiritual growth for the most part has been the work of great geniuses who felt and expressed humanity's woes and some of whom were willing to sacrifice themselves for humanity. I need not run over them. There was Jack Howard, nobleman of "the first house of England" as he was, going to all the prisons of England and Europe, subjecting himself to all the contagious diseases of the jails until finally he died a victim to his research, giving the world the benefit of what he had learned, and doing it in such a way that the world's heart as well as the world's head took it, and thereafter occurred the improvements in the conditions of the prisoners, who up to that time had been regarded as having no sort of human rights at all.

I need not dwell before the Senate upon the fact that Charles Dickens's portrayal of the conditions in England led to the abolition of imprisonment for debt and the improvement of schools and educational methods, lashing out of existence many a "Do-the-boys Hall." I need not dwell upon the facts to those who have read it of the great beneficial effect of Charles Reade's Hard Cash.

I was just reading the other day, Mr. President, a new book, "An Ancient Evil and a New Conscience," by Jane Addams, of Chicago. I will wager my head that that book alone will do more good in accelerating a spiritual growth—it will bring the men who possess things and the men who do not possess things more nearly together upon a common plane of thought and feeling than all that this Congress could have done if it had been doing nothing else for the last 10 years.

The old everlasting condition of "armed neutrality between capital and labor," as the Senator from Idaho called it, has been going on since one man first worked for another. It is no recent thing. From the very first time that one man wanted another to work for him, from the very first time when there began to be a division of labor, so that a man did not do all his own work and make or catch all he needed and had, it has been a hard fact. I may say from the first time men began to do work at all, because that change in the relation of man to man took place the minute men quit fishing and hunting and settled down to steady labor.

It is not growing worse; it is growing better; and, Mr. President, there will be evils about it as long as Parson Dale's sermon in Bulwer's novel, My Novel—I believe it is taken to heart by human beings everywhere—that greatest of all sermons, I think, though written by a novelist, which begins by enjoining the poor to have charity for the rich and enjoining the rich to have respect for the dignity of the poor. It is going to go on until the human heart and not the human head alone has worked it out of existence. In the meanwhile it does no harm to "investigate" and to continue to investigate.

Duplication of work in investigation and research ought to be avoided as far as possible, of course, but even duplication of work is preferable to not doing something. Even if you get nothing as a result of the investigation it is something if you leave the true impression upon the mind of those who consider themselves hard-ridden that you are trying to help them. Unfortunately the easiest thing in the world to persuade men of is that they are having an awfully hard time. You can go out and preach hard times in times of prosperity and men believe you because there are in the audience men who have not quite gotten all they wanted to get, though they tried, and think that then they have had an awfully hard time, and others who have not tried. Of the two the latter are bitterer than the former. Tennyson says that "knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers." That is true, and yet you must have knowledge as a beginning of wisdom, and you have to get that knowledge as best you may. You must educate the head first, somebody's head, before you can educate the heart—the popular heart; the all heart; everybody's heart. That is what makes up civilization.

You are never going to have any end to the old state of armed neutrality between capital and labor as long as private property exists until you come to the condition where each man is willing to earn all that he can by honest labor and is willing to keep only what he needs, and no man is willing to keep aught of another until he has tried his best to earn it for himself and has not. It will not be communism impressed by law. It will not be a superposition of Government upon men's lives. It will not be what is put upon men by premature law, but it will be what comes out of men's hearts as just and right and is only recognized by law. That feeling is growing every day, and it never was as strong at any time in the world as it is right now. The very fact that you are carrying on this discussion to-day proves it.

This discussion would hardly have been possible in 1830 or 1840. In the meanwhile, the great danger is that Government may attempt to usurp the place of evolution—evolution of thought, evolution of feeling, evolution of ethics—may destroy that treading upon our dead selves which thereby raises ourselves to higher things, all of which constitute true civilization and true progress.

The main business of government, after all, is to keep men from hurting other men, and thereby give free room for society by development in peace and order and mutual understanding to make spiritual growth.

I have said nothing relevant to this particular provision, but after the speech made by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], whom I so much respect, and who is generally so optimistic and of such spiritual insight, I did not want the day to close with a pessimistic cloud spreading out from this hall over the American people so that they could not see the sun behind it.

As for myself, I think if the Government just goes a little bit behind evolution and clinches—just to use a carpenter's phrase—clinches the accomplished fact of progress just as the better thought and sentiment of mankind have created it, and tacks it into the board, is about all that can be expected of government.

In the meanwhile, this little amendment does not make so much difference whether passed or defeated, because whether this work be done by these men, whether it be done by the Department of Commerce, whether it be done by the Department of Labor, whether it be done by the Children's Bureau, or whether it be done by some one else, is of minor importance in comparison with the necessity of men seeing and knowing that somebody competent and earnest is seeking to do it, and that they are not being harder and harder driven by neglect every day; that, upon the contrary, there is more and more light every day and more and more opportunity for honest labor every day. Of course, the conditions are hard yet, and they ought to be made better and better day by day, and the organizations of labor which are effected for the purpose of making them better, for the purpose of getting shorter hours, for the purpose of getting higher pay and better sanitary and educational conditions, and for the purpose of getting for labor nearer labor's just part of the value of production, ought to be encouraged all the time and in no manner discouraged, even negatively. But the world is growing better. Men's mutual relationships are growing better, not worse; not more intimate, but more just. I wish I could add also more intimate, but it is too early as yet for that.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, just a word on behalf of the action of the Senate committee. I do not think there was a single member of the committee, in fact I know there was not a single member of the committee, who was opposed to the character of the work which is being done by this commission, but it did seem to the committee, and it seems to them now, and it seems to me after having heard most of this discussion, that the work which is being done by that commission is simply a duplication of work that is being done by other departments of the Government, and work that if it is not being done by them could be easily directed to be done by the Senate of the United States through a resolution of inquiry.

As a matter of fact, so far as the laboring people of the country are concerned, in whom the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] seems to be deeply interested, the Department of Labor has been created for that very purpose. It has bureaus and it has arms which can be extended out to the same field of investigation that the commission now covers, and I have not any doubt that not only the interests of labor will be protected through that bureau but the interests of the employers as well.

It was with a view to economy that the committee thought it best to grant to the industrial commission the same amount which was appropriated for their use last year. We think that the amount recommended by the committee is sufficient in addition to the money which will be expended by the other bureaus of the Government for these purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the optimistic note sounded by the learned Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will not be lost in this discussion. The world is growing better beyond a peradventure, and the relations between capital and labor are constantly improving, notwithstanding an occasional outburst, which would seem to prove the contrary.

I have taken occasion once or twice to say that the controversy between capital and labor is a serious matter, and I have felt and expressed the opinion that we ought to do all we can to make it less acute and exert ourselves to ameliorate the condition of the laboring men.

We are very apt to be misunderstood in the discussion of a question of this kind. When the bill for the creation of the Children's Bureau was under consideration I called attention to the fact that at that very moment the Department of Commerce and Labor was investigating that matter, and I ventured to suggest that it might be well for us to await the conclusion of that investigation before creating another instrumentality.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not know that I caught what the Senator said correctly, but I want to call his attention to the fact that at the time the new Cabinet office was provided for at the same session of Congress and by the same committee on the other side it was thought that there would not necessarily be any clash of jurisdiction between the two, and that even with the existence of the new department there was a field for this commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. I took occasion to look into that matter and I found there was an investigation going on by the department, and I merely ventured to suggest that it might be well to await the conclusion of that investigation. Immediately it was heralded over a portion of the country that I was an enemy to the establishment of a Children's Bureau and that I opposed all legislation for the amelioration of the children of the country. It was not correct, but perhaps it served a purpose.

Mr. President, I believe in the Children's Bureau absolutely. I believe in it more strongly to-day than I did when it was organized; but it will be recalled that that bureau was given, and ought to have, exclusive charge over this special matter of child labor.

The act provides that—

> The said bureau shall investigate and report to said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories.

And so forth.

Mr. President, I do not see any need of this industrial relations commission going into that question, because the Children's Bureau has jurisdiction over it, and we have voted a very liberal appropriation to enable that bureau to conduct its work.

Mr. LANE. I should like to ask the Senator how much there was appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. GALLINGER. One hundred and sixty-nine thousand dollars has been appropriated for the work this year.

Mr. LANE. That attracted my attention; and I notice in reading the bill which we have recently passed, providing for the Department of Agriculture, that we appropriated therein $400,000 for the necessary expenses for the eradication of cattle ticks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is an old story, and it has not any bearing on this question.

Mr. LANE. It is not an old story. It happened this year.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Oregon did not move any amendment, so far as I remember, proposing to increase the appropriation for the Children's Bureau; and I apprehend that if anyone had moved to reduce the appropriation to eradicate cattle ticks, he would have risen in his might and opposed it. If $169,000 was not enough for the Children's Bureau, some of the Senators who are so distressed over the fact that we hear it every time the question is up that we are appropriating more for the brute creation than we are for the human creation, ought to have moved an amendment.

Mr. President, only a word more, for I do not want to prolong this debate at all. I called attention to the Industrial Commission which we created a few years ago, and expressed the fear that, unless the present Commission on Industrial Relations was somewhat restricted in its operations, we would have another library of 19 volumes, each one of them about as thick as, or thicker than, that book [exhibiting], which would be dumped in on us. I could not give my quota of them away; I had 50 or 60 copies, and nobody wanted them. So far as I know, there never was an allusion in the debate in this body to anything in that voluminous and unnecessary report, except to one item which was contained in volume 17.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I only learned a little while ago that hearings had been had in the Industrial Relations Commission from time to time, but none of them have been printed. I think they ought to be printed as they are taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so, too.

Mr. POMERENE. It may be that the same rule prevailed at the time the other testimony was taken to which the Senator refers. I, for one, should like at this present moment to have the benefit of the hearings which have been thus far had by this commission, and I think other Senators, also, would like to have them.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The law provides that these hearings shall be printed within one year, or as soon as they are taken, and that the entire work shall be finished in three years. This commission will die by the terms of the law which created it in August, 1915, I think, which will be three years; and they really have not had time to print these volumes. That is why I have tried, industriously but unsuccessfully, to-day to get them. The commission have not had time to print them. I understand that the chairman of the commission will probably be able to furnish us with some of the hearings at an early date.

Mr. POMERENE. In all of our committee hearings the testimony is printed from day to day, and I see no reason why that course could not be followed by the commission. If they have not been furnished with sufficient funds, I should like to see them so furnished, so that we might be able to keep in touch with the commission. Had that been done, I dare say Senators would have been more familiar with the work of the commission than they now are.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit an interruption at this point?

Mr. GALLINGER. In just a moment. I regret that there was not a provision in the original act that the printing should be done at frequent intervals, so that we might have had the advantage of it. I have followed the hearings before the commission, so far as newspaper reports are concerned, in several instances, notably in New York City and Philadelphia, and I think they are doing a very excellent work. I would be glad, indeed, as I have no doubt all Senators would be, to have the full text of those hearings, if it were possible; but it is not possible for us to have them now, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has suggested. I now yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I have not any information on the subject, but I am inclined to be of the opinion that one of the reasons why these hearings have not been published is on account of the lack of funds. The little examination which I have been able to give the testimony before the commission leads me to the conclusion that such money as they have had has been expended in salaries and in carrying on these investigations. That is the reason why originally it was proposed that the amount of money to be spent by the commission and the time in which it should be expended was to be limited by law. It was found impossible to do that.

I think that, as I said a while ago, this piecemeal way of dealing with this whole proposition will have a bad effect. Senators are complaining because they do not get copies of the hearings, and it is quite within the point of possibility that the reason they have not received them is the lack of funds. Instead of appropriating more money we are proposing to appropriate only $50,000.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have received a little more specific information in respect to this matter. These hearings have been taking place for six months, perhaps, or more, and the typewritten copy is in the office of the commission—stacks of it. Gentlemen who have been interested in ascertaining what was in these hearings have gone and asked for copies, and have been told that the only way they could get them would be to pay the stenographer for a copy or to sit down and write them out in longhand. Under such conditions it is impossible for Senators to inform themselves as to what is going on.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is an easy way out of that dilemma. If some Senator would offer a resolution that the testimony, so far as it has been taken, should be printed as a Senate document, it would supply us with the needed information; but that can be attended to later on.

Mr. POMERENE. It seems to me that whatever fund is appropriated here, whether it be $50,000 or $200,000, there should be some amendment to this bill requiring the commission to have these hearings printed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not believe there is a Senator within the sound of my voice who does not profoundly desire that these great questions as between labor on the one hand and capital on the other should be equitably and fairly and honorably adjusted. I can not believe that the criticisms that have been made upon some public men—and I have suffered somewhat in that direction myself—are justified by the facts. I think, however, that a commission of this kind is somewhat like a committee of the Senate. Just here I wish to say, Mr. President, that I have never believed that a committee of the Senate, going to West Virginia for a week or two or going to Denver for a week or two, would furnish us any very desirable or valuable information; but no man felt like going against the appointment of a committee, for it was demanded in the interest of labor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he has read the report of the West Virginia investigation?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have read both sides of it; and there is no agreement on any real issue that was raised.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator feel that there is some very valuable information there, and that in fact the Senate investigation ended the strike in West Virginia?

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not know that before; and I am glad to know it, if the Senator vouches for it.

Mr. KENYON. I say that investigation had a great deal to do with breaking up the labor trouble in West Virginia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to have that assurance. I voted for that investigation, because it was thought desirable that we should send a committee to West Virginia; and the House of Representatives sent one to Denver. I presume that some good came out of them, but those committees did very little to get at the fundamentals of this question, to solve the problem, so that it would remain solved for any considerable length of time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he does not agree with me that many of these commissions have made false reports, and that probably a Senate committee would be better to investigate some of these great questions than would be such commissions?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think so, if they would take the time to do it, but committees of Congress do not as a rule take the necessary time.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that one of the greatest investigations was that by the Merchant Marine Commission, of which the Senator was chairman. The Senator will also remember that there was an appropriation of $300,000 for another commission to make an investigation, whose report was filled with false statements, so that it was of no earthly use to the country, and we paid $44,000 to print the report, which nobody has ever read.

Mr. GALLINGER. The clamor for large appropriations does not always appeal to me. I was chairman of a commission, as the Senator from North Carolina suggests, consisting of five Senators and five Representatives in Congress, which made an investigation covering the entire country from Boston to Los Angeles, and also on the Gulf coast, holding hearings at every important point. An appropriation of $40,000 was voted to that commission, and there was paid back into the Treasury, as I recall, about $19,000 of that $40,000. Of course, there were no salaries, except those of the secretary and one or two experts employed, and the expenditure for the payment of witnesses. So, sometimes I think we get the notion that these commissions need more money than they really do.

I did not, however, mean to raise that question just now. What I meant to say, Mr. President, and what I will say in conclusion, is that, turning to this bill, I read on the same page a headline "United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation." That headline appealed to me as I read it a moment ago, and I sent for the law creating that Board of Mediation and Conciliation. I find that it is for the purpose of adjusting differences between railroads and their employees; and it occurs to me that after this commission, concerning which we are now talking, ends its life, we ought to have a board fashioned somewhat after the board provided for by that law, and an appropriation made that would create a permanent board for the purpose of hearing the controversies between the laboring men and their employers.

Section 2 of the act providing for a Board of Mediation, Conciliation, and Arbitration in controversies between certain employers and employees, to which I have alluded, provides:

That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between an employer or employers and employees subject to this act—

interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of said employer or employers to the serious detriment of the public interest, either party to such controversy may apply to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation created by this act and invoke its services for the purpose of bringing about an amicable adjustment of the controversy; and upon the request of either party the said board shall, with all practical expedition, put itself in communication with the parties to such controversy and shall use its best efforts, by mediation and conciliation, to bring them to an agreement; and if such efforts to bring about an amicable adjustment through mediation and conciliation shall be unsuccessful, the said board shall at once endeavor to induce the parties to submit their controversy to arbitration in accordance with the provisions of this act.

That board, Mr. President, consists of Judge Martin A. Knapp, Judge William L. Chambers, and Mr. G. W. W. Hanger. It is composed of three very eminent men, and I apprehend it is doing most excellent work, and my suggestion is—I give it for what it is worth—that after the Industrial Relations Commission has performed its function and has expired that it would be well for the Congress seriously to consider the question whether a board fashioned after the Board of Mediation and Conciliation could not well be organized for the purpose of hearing controversies between employers and employees and endeavoring to adjust them. I think they would accomplish much more than any commission can do and much more than any committee of either House of Congress can do.

Mr. President, concerning the amount of this appropriation, I will say that I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations but was not present when this item was considered and do not know exactly how I would have felt about it at that time. As I have heard the discussion, it has occurred to me that the committee perhaps might well compromise this matter, and in place of $50,000 insert $100,000, and let it go to conference in that shape. However, Senators should remember that no matter which amount we put in the bill it will of necessity go to conference between the two Houses, and doubtless an adequate appropriation will be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, probably the Senator did not hear what the chairman of the committee said in relation to the matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not.

Mr. OVERMAN. He said that, in considering this matter, the committee concluded we would make it the same as the appropriation provided last year, and then the matter would go to conference; we would investigate it and see what testimony or what information the House had and finally give the commission a sufficient amount to carry out the purposes for which it was created. I think the chairman of the committee made that statement, but the Senator probably was not here at the time.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not present.

Mr. OVERMAN. We concluded we would let it go to conference and determine it in that way.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. My attention was attracted by the fact that the Industrial Relations Commission is perhaps about the only agency in existence which is of real value in making a study of industrial conditions as they affect human beings. The investigations undertaken by that commission have in view the protection and benefit of all the people, but the appropriation has been cut down to the pitiable sum of $50,000. It may be that the commission will not do a great deal of good, and yet there is a field open wherein it might do inestimable good for the people of this country and to all classes without distinction.

In this connection I remember the appropriations we have made for the benefit of the cattle industry and for hogs and for the destruction of pests that infest cotton and other agricultural products. In the Agricultural appropriation bill recently passed there was, for instance, an appropriation of $625,000 for the detection, prevention, treatment, and care of diseases of domestic animals; the sum of $400,000 for the eradication of ticks which infest cattle and infect them with disease; and further along in the same bill there was appropriated $673,000 for the eradication of cotton pests, such as the boll weevil. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are appropriated and expended for such purposes as those I have indicated. Of course, we ought to make reasonable appropriation for such purposes, but here is a subject that comes near to the heart of the people; a subject which intimately concerns the health of the community and the welfare of all the people, and, perhaps, the health and future fate of the race in this country.

Perhaps the investigations will disclose facts and bring forth suggestions in regard to existing conditions which, if carefully considered and acted upon by Congress, may afford a remedy and save a revolution in this country and the confiscation of property, if you please. There is a state of unrest now which even the philosophy of my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will not allay. In comparison with $400,000 appropriated for the purpose of experimenting with sprays to kill ticks the small sum of $200,000 is refused for the great work of the Industrial Relations Commission. It seems to me that we are not paying sufficient attention to the needs of humanity as contrasted with the needs of the brute creation.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] said that the complaint which I have made is an old story, and I have an idea that it is an old story; it has been rung into the ears of this Congress for years and years; but it will not be told to you many times more, for you are going to sit up and pay attention to that complaint, or it is going to come to you with the drumming of guns, and then it will not be called an old story; it will be a new story, and you will be glad to pay heed to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LANE. I am done.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator must not lose sight of the fact that we are making very large appropriations for the public health through the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and in other directions. The Senator should not lose sight of the further fact that the appropriations which are made to preserve the purity of our food, whether it be meat or vegetables, are directly for the benefit of the human family; and unless we made such appropriations we would have a condition of things existing in this country that would be unspeakable. Therefore it ought not to be sent out to the country that we are making large appropriations for the brute creation and neglecting our duty to the men, women, and children of the country.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have not the advantages that many of my brother Senators have in experience in such matters as this, and I am not so familiar as they are with matters connected with the particular amendment under consideration; but, as I gather from the discussion, the Industrial Relations Commission was created for the purpose of acquiring information. I do not think it was intended primarily to provide remedies; it was rather to diagnose the situation—to take the symptoms. If I am not mistaken, that was the great purpose of the institution of the commission. It was created and given life for a certain limited period of time. That time, as I understand, has not more than half expired. It is a child of our creation; it is an agency that we ourselves have employed; and is it wise now to strike down that agency before it has had time to accomplish the purpose for which it was created? It seems to me that it is not. It occurs to me that if that is to be done, we had better strike at the root of the tree than to undertake to destroy its life by lopping off its branches one at a time.

If this commission is a useless and unnecessary body, then why not repeal the law that created it and destroy its existence? That would be the sensible way; yes, that would be the manly way in which to treat this subject; but to let it live, to give it a precarious existence, and yet take from it everything that could make it useful or enable it to discharge the duties that were devolved upon it, seems to me to be unwise. Mr. President, it appears to me that if the result intended by this amendment is allowed to be accomplished, we will reflect upon our previous action in creating the commission, as we are anticipating its failure before it has had time to demonstrate its usefulness.

When this commission was created we knew we were moving in the dark; we knew that we were in the field of exploration, and we estimated then that it would take a certain length of time to make the voyage necessary to accomplish the purposes intended, and yet before that time has expired, yea, before it is well on its way, we undertake to recall the voyageurs whom we sent abroad; we are signaling them to return to the home port before they have ever reached the port of their destination. That does not seem to me to be wise; it is not treating the subject with that seriousness and giving it that consideration to which it is entitled.

Mr. President, the work intended for this commission was not for the benefit of any one class. It was not raised, as I understand, primarily to advance the interests of labor or to advance the interests of capital but was created for the purpose of acquiring information for this body and for the country as a basis upon which intelligent action could be predicated in the future, action looking to the benefit of both, action that would tend to adjust the unsettled conditions that are now presented by our industrial situation.

That situation, sir, is very different from what it has been in the past. There never was a country since man was created in which the great industrial march has been so rapid as it has been in this country. It moves on, and has moved on for half a century like a mighty torrent, sweeping the conditions of the past out of the way. Labor and capital were never before engaged in such a great, such a stupendous struggle—I do not mean a struggle between themselves, but a struggle to develop the wonderful resources of this great country of ours. They are marching forward; they have been marching, and they will continue to march forward; and it ought to be our pleasure as well as our purpose to give them all the help we can in order that they may continue in that great march hand in hand and heart with heart, carrying peace and prosperity with them instead of destruction and ruin.

I favor, Mr. President, an adequate appropriation for this work, and I hope the Senate will not only restore the $200,000 that was voted by the House, but I hope, sir, that it will appropriate the amount which the head of the commission has asked to have appropriated. I have sat here and listened with interest to the remarks of able Senators, and I have heard them often say that a certain amount was the amount estimated for by the head of a department or bureau. I have frequently heard the questions propounded, "Where did you get your figures?" "What is the department estimate?" "What has the bureau said about it?" The response would come almost invariably from the chairman of the committee who had charge of the bill in hand that the figures were in accordance with the estimate made by the department; that the amount sought to be appropriated was the amount estimated by the head of the bureau. Why not treat this commission in the same way? Why not give it the same consideration and treat it in the same way that we treat other governmental agencies? I think it is fair and right that that should be so treated.

I come, Mr. President, from a great industrial State—a State which God has blessed with more natural resources, probably, than any other State in the Union; God has blessed it, too, with a great population. He has placed there a great industrial army. I want, as far as I can, to bring industrial conditions in my State, as well as all over the Union, into the very best possible situation.

I believe the task imposed on this commission, if performed, will tend to reach this end. Therefore I shall gladly vote against the committee amendment, with the view of restoring the amount in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I join with those who desire to see the amendment of the committee defeated. I think the commission should be thoroughly equipped for the work it ought to do and the work it was created to do; and if it does that it will subserve a great public purpose.

I rose, however, to take just a moment of time, because I do not want to delay matters, and to say a word as to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] with reference to commissions in general, and the West Virginia investigating committee in particular.

I believe if the Senator from New Hampshire would read the testimony taken in that investigation he would derive very great profit, and I believe he would feel that the committee endeavored to get down to the fundamentals of that unfortunate controversy.

I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the report that was made by the committee. The committee found a most unfortunate situation in West Virginia. Armed bodies of men, mine guards, employed by the owners of the mines, and armed employees had been engaging in actual warfare. The governor of that State had appointed a commission upon which was Bishop Donahue, a Catholic bishop of very great eminence; when he was on the stand we asked him the question as to what was the fundamental trouble, as to why it was that employers were arming mine guards in their employ to go out and shoot their men, and men were arming themselves to go out and shoot their employers. I asked this question of the bishop:

> What is the fundamental trouble, Bishop?

That good old man, who had given this question a great deal of thought, said:

> The causes are deep rooted and very obscure to a man unless he thinks and thinks and thinks and traces the roots down into their primary causes. I should say, if I were asked to put it very briefly, that it is human greed on both sides.

Though in the report we suggested that it was a little difficult to realize how there could be much human greed on the side of a man who was supporting a family and working day by day in the mines at ordinary living wages; but there is greed on the part of the owners of the property, and there always will be such greed.

Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has sounded a note here that is uncomfortable, but it is true. I wish I could join in the rosy view and picture that has been painted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that labor conditions are getting better and that we are all getting better. I hope that is true. Let me call attention to a few matters. Out in West Virginia there was a little village of tents where the wives and children of the strikers lived, at Holly Creek, and about 11 o'clock one night there came an armored train with a machine gun in a baggage car, and as it approached this little village of women and children somebody—the evidence did not disclose exactly whom—operated that machine gun as the train moved along very slowly, and raked that village of tents with this machine gun. We had women before us with bullets in their feet and others who had been made widows by the progress of that train.

When the Senator from California says that we must devise some means to settle this matter peacefully, and says it with the solemnity and judgment that characterize him, he is stating an eternal truth, because things like the West Virginia performance can not go on. The value of any commission, such as this Industrial Relations Commission, that may shed a little light, however small it may be, upon some plan to stop these troubles can not be measured by money in any way.

The same thing has happened in Colorado. There were three women down here a few weeks ago, and some Senators heard their story—I happened to be one of them—and they told a story there of Ludlow, the village of tents, of the tents set afire, and the village raked by machine guns. One woman before us lost three little children, smothered to death in one of these holes of refuge.

Mr. President, we can sit calmly in our seats, or we can ride in automobiles or launches and live in fine homes, and say that everything is progressing beautifully, but conditions like that in this country will have to stop. Now, the old bishop may be right. He says, "Loosening the moorings of Christianity had something to do with it, but the fundamental is human greed."

I think the Senator from Mississippi is right in one of his observations, and it is a broad one—that it is through a spiritual growth and development of the human being that this question will finally be worked out; but at the same time the facts brought before us will enable us, possibly in a philosophy of legislation, to devise some means to help settle this great question that is staring us in the face in this country; that is, of keeping the few from becoming excessively rich while the many are becoming excessively poor.

So I do hope we will not curtail the work of this commission. I do not know the men on this commission save one, Mr. Garretson, a man of high character and great ability. They were appointed by the President, who, I am sure, must be in sympathy with their work. We ought not to economize on this particular proposition, when this bill and the river and harbor bill carry $10,000,000, practically, for a canal scheme in the Ohio River, with a constantly decreasing traffic. We might take the money off of that; and of the fifty-three millions or so in the river and harbor bill and the one hundred millions in this bill, if we want to economize, there are certainly plenty of places where we may do so.

I was only led to make these suggestions by reason of the reference of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the work of the investigating committee in West Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I regret to occupy even a few minutes of the time of the Senate on this matter, which has been before us now almost all day. I can not refrain, however, from reminding some of the Senators who have addressed the Senate that the committee is not composed of the enemies of mankind. Anybody might think from this debate that this committee owned this money; that it was theirs; that they were withholding it from humanitarian uses; and that there are a few Senators who have a monopoly of humanitarian sentiments who are here in defense of humanity and in defense of the people against the aggressions of the committee. Indeed, some of them have gotten so enthusiastic, like my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE], that they want to give more than the commission asked for. They did not ask for more than $200,000; but he says we must give them $50,000 more. They asked for only $200,000.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I understood the commission asked for $250,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator is mistaken. I will read what the chairman of the commission said.

Mr. WHITE. I advocated that simply because I understood that was what the commission asked for.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I supposed the Senator had misunderstood it; but still that is what he said.

Mr. WHITE. I understood that they asked for $250,000 and that the House had cut it down to $200,000. That was my information.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No; the chairman said he had gotten $50,000 in the deficiency bill, and he wanted $200,000 more, and the House gave him $200,000.

Mr. WHITE. Of course, I do not want to give him any more than he wants.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think somebody ought to have told us what these people are doing. If anybody on the floor of the Senate knows what this commission is doing, he has not vouchsafed that information to the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES and Mr. WHITE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me that it devolves upon the committee to let the Senate know what they are not doing.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have tried to do that; and I will do it a little more right now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair inquired if the Senator from Virginia would yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator says nobody has stated what this commission is doing. I stated some of the things they were doing. I stated that they held public hearings in the city of New York and invited employers and employees engaged in various industrial controversies there to appear before them, examined them, and had their testimony reported. Then they went to the city of Paterson and did the same thing, and went to various other sections of the country and held hearings.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We did understand that they had held hearings; but if there is any good in them or what they heard or what they did, I have not any information about it.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator knows that under the provisions of the bill the commission is not called upon to make a report of any kind inside of a year. It is quite apparent to anybody who is familiar with the amount of money that has been appropriated and the activity of the commission that they could not possibly have made a report up to this time with the amount of money which was appropriated.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it was incumbent upon the commission, when it asked for $200,000 more money, to give some account of what it had done.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the chairman of this commission appeared before the House committee and made a very full statement of what they were doing, part of which I read to the Senate some little time ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. He made a very full statement as to the possibilities of what he might do—glittering generalities, embracing all the activities of mankind.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps that may be a matter of personal opinion. It seemed to me that the chairman did not indulge in glittering generalities, but that he made a very succinct statement of the facts. I thought it was a very intelligent statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I can discover nothing of that sort in the hearing. I read every word of it, and I did not discover anything of the sort. I did discover that he talks, for example, about sanitation. We have a department devoted to that with liberal appropriations. He talks about hygiene. We have a department devoted to that, with very, very liberal appropriations in this bill and in other bills. The health of the country, instead of being neglected, is being liberally provided for. The Senator from Oregon seems to think we are doing a great deal for the cattle tick and for the boll weevil and nothing for mankind. It has never occurred to me that the appropriations we are making to exterminate the boll weevil were being made in the interest of the boll weevil. We thought we were doing it in the interest of mankind. The same thing applies to the appropriations for the extermination of the cattle tick. All these appropriations are made for the amelioration of the condition of mankind, and not for the cattle tick or for the boll weevil or for the swine. When we spend money to suppress hog cholera the object of it is to furnish pure food for mankind. Our appropriations are made exclusively for the benefit of mankind. They are not made for the cattle tick or the boll weevil.

The head of this bureau also spoke of the adjustment of difficulties between labor and capital. The very item before this appropriation, $50,000, is for a board of conciliation to adjust difficulties between labor and capital. I want it distinctly understood that this committee is not inimical to a liberal appropriation for that purpose, but I did feel that we ought to get some further information about it.

I read what the chairman of this commission said, and it did not satisfy me. He has had $150,000—$100,000 first and then again $50,000—and I, for one, do not know what he has accomplished with it.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption now with reference to the amount of money that is asked for by the chairman of the commission?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly. I will yield for an interruption at any time the Senator desires to interrupt me.

Mr. HUGHES. The chairman of the Industrial Relations Commission wanted $250,000 appropriated in this bill. The statement was made by a member of the House committee that if $250,000 was appropriated that sum added to the amount that had been already appropriated would exceed the limitation placed by law upon the amount to be expended under the bill creating the commission. Now, there was no limitation imposed by law as to the amount to be expended under that bill, but the member of the House committee thought there was, and he says so in the testimony. He says it was his idea that there was a limit of $350,000 placed upon the amount to be expended under that law. Consequently he called the attention of Mr. Walsh to the fact that $250,000 added to what had been already appropriated would exceed that limitation. Mr. Walsh made no comment on it, I think, but it is quite apparent, I submit to the Senator, that the commission asked for $250,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will read what he said, and the Senator will see the mistake. I will read the language of Mr. Walsh himself. He said:

I will say this, however, that with the $50,000 in the deficiency appropriation, as I look upon the thing, I think we could cover it with $200,000.

Mr. HUGHES. I will read what he says, also, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so, but it is impossible to change that. I will say to the Senator that it is useless for us to quibble over that.

Mr. HUGHES. I was really interested chiefly in the fact that I thought perhaps I was responsible for the error, or supposed error, of the Senator from Alabama. I wanted to show that even if it was an error it was a justifiable one; and if the Senator will permit me I will read a line or two of this testimony.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am perfectly willing to have the Senator read it.

Mr. HUGHES. This is the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. Mr. Walsh, the chairman of the industrial commission, was before him. The chairman of the committee says to Mr. Walsh:

You are asking for $250,000 here for next year. That will be in excess of the amount that is authorized to be expended by that commission.

Mr. WALSH. Under those circumstances, then, you would not allow it—is that it? I am not familiar with this.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there a limit placed upon the expenditures to be made by your commission?

Mr. WALSH. Nothing, except by the application of the President——

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). Does not the act itself provide that the work shall be done for not less than $350,000?

Mr. WALSH. No, sir; it does not. The report that the committee made to Congress, recommending the creation of the commission, said that it would cost $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. I recollect the discussion of the matter, and my impression is that the amount was limited to $350,000.

That came about in this way, if I may be permitted to trespass upon the time of the Senator: When that bill was first introduced in the House it carried an appropriation of $500,000, to be appropriated all at once, so that the commission could plan its work and carry it out, as I said a while ago. I just wanted to call the attention of the Senate, however, to the fact that it is evident here that the chairman of the commission at first, at least, wanted $250,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will note the language, he says "for next year." He did not say he wanted it in this appropriation bill; but he explained it later on by saying that he had gotten $50,000 in the deficiency bill, and he needed only $200,000 in this bill. He used the language "next year." He says he has gotten $50,000, and he only wants $200,000 more.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, it is very probable that that is the way the confusion arose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is exactly what he said, in the plainest possible terms.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. It was on the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey that I made my statement as to the amount wanted by the commission.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No doubt it was a perfectly natural and harmless error that the Senator fell into, and I simply wanted to correct it. I was not complaining at all that he had made that mistake, nor was I complaining of the Senator from New Jersey for the statement he made.

Mr. HUGHES. I wanted to take the responsibility for the statement; that was all. I did not want the Senator from Alabama to be responsible for my inaccuracy.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. What I want to impress upon the Senate, however, is that unless some new light can be thrown on it, there is certainly a great duplication of work. I am willing to have $200,000 appropriated, or the $250,000 which my friend from Alabama inadvertently mentioned, or half a million dollars or a million dollars. I want whatever is necessary appropriated, but I do not want a single dollar uselessly appropriated; and I wanted some further light on this matter. As they got along last year with $50,000, when criticism was made of the work of this commission, and when we were without full information about the work of the commission, we cut it down to $50,000 in order that the item might go into conference and we could see what the House based its $200,000 on, and that we might do just exactly what was just and right and would best promote the welfare of the people of this country.

We are not inimical to the appropriation. We want every dollar appropriated that is necessary. It is not our money. It is the people's money, and it ought to be appropriated for their service and for the promotion of their welfare; but it ought not to be appropriated uselessly. Work ought not to be duplicated. We are getting in this country to the point where almost every kind of work is being duplicated. Every department is reaching out, like the courts reach out for jurisdiction, for new fields of activity.

Here is the subject of child labor. That is another thing that the chairman of this commission said he was going to investigate. We have just appropriated $169,000 for a special bureau organized for the purpose of investigating child labor. Do you want to give $169,000 to that special bureau, organized for that purpose, and also appropriate money to enable this Industrial Relations Commission to investigate child labor?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, with his permission, if he does not think the better plan, then, would be to abolish this commission?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not prepared to go that far. I want to investigate and see exactly what the commission needs, and give it to it, as it has been started. I am not sure it was wisely started, as there is so much duplication. I do not see why we should duplicate work. The cry of humanity and philanthropy and human kindliness appeals to us all, and we are apt to be led too far in appropriating, rather than not to go far enough.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let me suggest to the Senator from Virginia that if this provision in the bill should go over until probably day after to-morrow, I think we can get the information he desires.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I should prefer to have it disposed of now, Mr. President. I hope this bill will be out of the Senate before day after to-morrow.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will ask the Senator to pass it over now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no pride of opinion; I have no sort of concern about this, except to do my duty by the Senate, and present this matter clearly to it. It will be perfectly agreeable to me for the Senate to vote the $200,000. I have no desire in this matter that is not in common with the desires of other Senators.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senator that there is not a Senator upon this floor who thinks he is moved by an improper motive.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Oh, I am sure of that. I did not mean to intimate that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have not heard any suggestion of that kind; but if the amendment goes over, I think we can get information that will be of value to the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think we have all the information we are going to get. The chairman of this commission has been before the House committee, and he has given pages of information of a sort. He deals in generalities. He embraces all the activities of humanity. There is nothing that can be conceived by the wit of man that will benefit humanity that he does not contemplate investigating. He has laid out for himself the broadest sort of field. I do not know how far he has proceeded in a practical way with any of these things; but he has laid out a field of work here that would cost perhaps millions, and occupy years; and I expect it will be just about as much read as the 19 volumes of the industrial commission. It may do some good; but I think it is duplicating work so much that I am very apprehensive that it will not do much good.

I do not see, for the life of me, why we want anybody else to investigate the health of this country. That subject has received large appropriations. It is one of my weaknesses to spend money for the public health.

Mr. SMOOT. Three million dollars.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. As the Senator from Utah says, about $3,000,000. I have always advocated the most liberal appropriations for the benefit of the public health and for the amelioration of the condition of mankind in every possible way; but I do not want to see money uselessly appropriated and wasted.

Whatever the Senate may do is perfectly agreeable to me. I want every Senator to understand fully that I have no pride of opinion about this matter, nor has the committee any pride of opinion. It only wants to do what is right. If the Senate thinks the appropriation should be $200,000, it is perfectly agreeable to me to see it voted, and voted this evening. I do not want it put off. I want this matter disposed of. I want this bill passed, and I simply want the judgment of the Senate in respect to this proposed appropriation of $200,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Virginia has suggested that in his testimony before the House committee the chairman of the commission proposed to enter a very broad field and to inquire into a great many things. My question is, Does the chairman of the commission propose to enter any field that the commission is not authorized to enter under the terms of the act creating it?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think he does. It is a most comprehensive act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Therefore if Congress has directed the commission to go into a broad field of inquiry, ought we now to restrict the labor of the commission unless we desire to repeal the act?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think we might give him a reasonable amount of money and see what sort of work he is doing. I do not think he can do all those things in one year, or two years, or five years. I do not think the commission in five years can exhaust the comprehensive field that its chairman has laid out.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does not the Senator from Virginia believe we either ought to abolish the commission entirely or give it a larger appropriation than $50,000?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I am not at all sure the commission ought not to have more than $50,000, and my idea was to take the matter to conference and let us hear what the House conferees had to say. I will confess that if I had not been trying to economize time I would have sent for Mr. Walsh myself and would have given him some further examination on this matter; but I thought it might go to conference, and we could then determine whether or not we would enlarge the $50,000.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] suggested compromising it at $100,000. I had no desire to compromise it. I know he did not mean that in any disagreeable sense, but it is just as agreeable to me for the Senate to vote $200,000 as to vote $100,000 or $50,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it not true that the work of the commission is of a character that admits of almost indefinite enlargement?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is, and therefore I would restrict it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Therefore, after all, it is a mere question of good judgment on the part of Senators with reference to the amount of work we want the commission to do. If that be true, why are we not just as well qualified to determine the matter now as at any other time, without any more information than we have at the present time?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Because I should like to see us have some report. I should like to find out what the commission is doing. I do not feel like giving it carte blanche. I do not want to give it indefinite authority to expend money, especially in the duplication of work.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no suggestion, is there, that the commission has been doing anything that we have not authorized it to do?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that is admitted.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is true, because they have been authorized to do everything.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is admitted, further, that the field is so broad that they can expend $200,000, or a great deal more than that, in covering it. Therefore it seems to me that we have all the material we need for a judgment upon the subject at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can state something they have done which they were not authorized to do. I do not think the bill creating the commission ever contemplated that they should take charge of the subject of vocational education, and I have found them starting out on that field of endeavor. I think they have broadened their investigation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I believe it is a great mistake in the commission to venture on the field of the adjustment of the differences between labor and capital.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to prolong the debate unduly, but I have not heard the fourth section of the act creating the commission read, and I desire to read it now:

SEC. 4. That the commission shall inquire into the general condition of labor in the principal industries of the United States, including agriculture, and especially in those which are carried on in corporate forms; into existing relations between employers and employees; into the effect of industrial conditions on public welfare and into the rights and powers of the community to deal therewith; into the conditions of sanitation and safety of employees and the provisions for protecting the life, limb, and health of the employees; into the growth of associations of employers and of wage earners and the effect of such associations upon the relations between employers and employees; into the extent and results of methods of collective bargaining; into any methods which have been tried in any State or in foreign countries for maintaining mutually satisfactory relations between employees and employers; into methods for avoiding or adjusting labor disputes through peaceful and conciliatory mediation and negotiations; into the scope, methods, and resources of existing bureaus of labor and into possible ways of increasing their usefulness; into the question of smuggling or other illegal entry of Asiatics into the United States or its insular possessions, and of the methods by which such Asiatics have gained and are gaining such admission, and shall report to Congress as speedily as possible with such recommendation as said commission may think proper to prevent such smuggling and illegal entry. The commission shall seek to discover the underlying causes of dissatisfaction in the industrial situation and report its conclusions thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Virginia will pardon me, we could have given a commission no wider authority than is here stated. Vocational education is directly connected with a half dozen of the inquiries which are authorized. We can spend $200,000 or $300,000 or $400,000 or $500,000 profitably in the examination that is here required.

The examination, I think, is not for the purpose only of collecting facts. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], as it seemed to me, touched the heart of this whole subject when he said that this is an educational process. The commission is valuable not for the mere collection of information and printing it in a book. The commission is valuable because it is made up of eminent men and women, whose opinions are valuable, whose suggestions will tend to educate the people, and will tend to create a public thought that will move in the right direction and will ultimately result in the proper legislation upon these various subjects.

Now, that work can not be done by a mere department of the Government. It can not be done by the Department of Commerce or the Department of Labor, as well organized as those departments are. It can not be done by the Children's Bureau. It can not be done by any department that we may have for sanitation and hygiene. If it is done effectively, it must be done by a commission that commands the confidence of the people of the country not as a mere part of the administration of the law but as a great postgraduate school for all citizens, in order to bring about a state of mind that will demand legislation fit and appropriate for the subject.

I know how faithful the Senator from Virginia is to the duties imposed upon him; I do not criticize him or the committee in the least degree; but it seems to me—and I believe he will concur with me—that we do not need any more information to enable us to make up our minds how much money a commission of this character can effectively or wisely expend. The truth is there is no practical limit to the money which may be expended for this purpose, and spent well.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if he does not think it is a little extreme to give to any commission such a scope of work, and does the Senator believe that any body of nine men could be found who are well enough educated on these subjects to take charge of it? Would it not be far better if you are going to have any special work of this kind to have a commission on about one-fifth of it?

Mr. CUMMINS. It might have been well when we passed the act if we had limited the scope of the work of the commission. I will not review our judgment recorded in 1912. I will assume that it was wise to do what we did. If it was not wise, let us reach it directly and take away from the commission that part of its jurisdiction which we think it ought not to continue; but to attempt to cripple the commission by limiting so narrowly the expenditures which it may make is an indirect and, I think, a very indefensible way of repealing the law under which the commission was created.

I personally believe—it is not a question of belief—I know the commission can spend $200,000 and yet be far short of the work which Congress authorized it to do—which Congress more than authorized, which it required it to do. Therefore I hope that the appropriation provided for in the bill as passed by the House may prevail.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from Iowa admits that the scope of the original law is so broad that it is practically without limit; that if carried out in all its ramifications and to the full extent of its possibilities the amount of money and the amount of time would be almost undefinable. The only way to limit it under the circumstances is to limit the appropriation.

I do not want to have the work of the commission unduly crippled, but I do want to have it restrained within reasonable limits, and I do want a duplication of work prevented.

My idea and the idea of the committee was that we would give them what they had last year and take it into conference and see what further ought to be done, if anything. I will say very frankly that I think it likely something further ought to be done. I do not think they can make any headway with the broad field laid out on $50,000. I think if they carried out the plans they have laid out it would cost $5,000,000 and last almost forever, for they exhaust all the activities of mankind in their program.

I think it would be wise to limit them in the way of money at their disposal, but I repeat that neither I nor any member of the committee, so far as I know and believe, has any pride of opinion in the matter except to have the Senate dispose of it according to its judgment and its opinion. It is just as agreeable to me to see $250,000 as to see $50,000 appropriated. It is for the Senate to determine. We thought $50,000 and further consideration in conference would best protect the interests of the people, but if the Senate thinks differently they simply have to reject the committee amendment and let the matter be finally settled at $200,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee, on page 56, line 24, to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. VARDAMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who is absent on account of sickness in his family. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

I will transfer the pair of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] so that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and myself can vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted through inadvertence. My attention was called to the fact that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is out of town, and I rose to make the correction, but sat down to wait until after the close of the roll call. Under the circumstances, if agreeable to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and allow my vote to remain.

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN].

Mr. STONE (after having voted in the negative). I have voted, but I did so inadvertently. I have a standing pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], which I transfer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and allow my vote to stand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 9, after the words "geologic surveys," to strike out "of the public lands," so as to make the clause read:

For geologic surveys in the various portions of the United States, $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, line 21, after the words "artesian wells," to insert "boring artesian wells for investigation"; and, in line 23, after the words "water resources," to strike out "$150,000," and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, boring artesian wells for investigation, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $200,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment in line 23, page 104, by striking out "$200,000" and inserting the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand that is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I want to strike out "$200,000," as proposed by the committee, and to insert the words I have sent to the Secretary's desk to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 104, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "$200,000," and to insert "$250,000: Provided, That $100,000 of this sum shall be used to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the existence of artesian water and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that that amendment would cut down the amount for gauging streams. I think the Senator should either raise the amount carried by his amendment or lessen the amount for the special purpose he has in view.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be glad to make the amount still larger if it would not be objectionable to the committee. I have increased the amount which the committee has suggested by $50,000; so that there would be $150,000 left for the ordinary purposes, and $100,000 devoted for the specific purpose named in the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. But the estimate for that work was $200,000, and the department felt that it would be impossible to cover the requirements of the situation in connection with the gauging of streams with a less amount than that.

Mr. NORRIS. With that statement I will modify the amendment, and instead of "$250,000" insert "$300,000."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment again stated, and the page and line given, so that I may follow it.

The SECRETARY. On page 104, line 23, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "$200,000," and inserting "$300,000: Provided, That $100,000 of this sum shall be used to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate the existence of artesian wells and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I ask the Senator if he could not further modify the amendment by including also the measurement of the run-off of the streams in the same region?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is already included in the bill. There is an appropriation for that purpose, I think.

Mr. BRISTOW. I inquire if the Senator——

Mr. JONES. I will suggest that that is covered by the provision for gauging streams in the first part of that paragraph.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what the term "gauging streams" means.

Mr. BRISTOW. That will cover, then, the measurement of the water that runs off the ground, as well as the investigation as to artesian water?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. My amendment increases the amount from $200,000 to $300,000, and it provides that $100,000 of that money must be used for the purpose of boring artesian wells.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Kansas that the provision with respect to the measurement of the streams is very valuable for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of water that can be impounded in reservoirs.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is exactly the point I had in mind. I think the appropriation is inadequate; I want it increased. Three hundred thousand dollars is not enough; it ought to be a million dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course there is no limit to the amount that can be expended along that and other lines; but we have got to take into consideration the state of the Treasury and many other things in order to determine what appropriation should be made for a particular item. Many of us would like to have larger appropriations than we vote for, but we do not insist upon them, because of the fact that we know that we can not have the appropriations we desire and at the same time do justice to other necessary requirements of the Government.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand that; but there are a hundred items in this bill that could be cut out and one-tenth of the amount saved and used for this purpose would benefit the people of the United States tenfold more than if the money were expended as proposed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask the Senator to name those items? That is a broad assertion he has made. I will suggest to the Senator that when he comes to name the items he will find there are friends here of each one of those items.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not doubt there are friends of each item.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And not only that, but they can give good reasons why those appropriations should remain in the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. There are doubtless friends of every item of appropriation made; that goes without saying. I would not argue with the Senator on that proposition; but you can cut out all the items that relate to the harbors and rivers in this bill and take all of that money and use it for the impounding of water, and it will benefit the people of the United States a thousandfold more than they will be benefited by the money that is being poured into these streams.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not live in a country where there are many rivers and harbors.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the Senator from Nebraska make the amount three or four times as much as he has suggested. Two hundred thousand dollars is absolutely inadequate; it is of little consequence. When it comes to confining an appropriation of this importance to that meager sum, I think it is pitiable legislation, although it is better than nothing, of course.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I thought the Senator from Nebraska was through.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I just want to call attention to the fact that the House gave $150,000 and the Senate increased it to $200,000, which was the maximum amount estimated for. I am so distinctly in sympathy with the amendment the Senator from Nebraska has offered that I am not making any point of order; but I want to say to him that although we will do the very best we possibly can he must realize the difficulty there is in holding an amendment like that when we get into conference.

I am in entire accord with the amendment, and make no point of order, and do not oppose it, and will do the best I can to keep it in the bill; but there are difficulties ahead, as he will readily understand. We will do the best we can to overcome them.

I will say in passing—not that it is at all necessary—that there are different points of view. The Senator from Kansas goes out of his way to make an attack on river and harbor appropriations. He has none in his State; but there are Senators who are just as much interested in those appropriations as he is interested in this. I am interested in both, however, when they are right. I think this is right, and I will do the best I can to maintain it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have modified the amendment by striking out "the Secretary of Agriculture" and making it read "the Secretary of the Interior," because this is his department.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is a very good change.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Virginia say what he has just said; but in order to assist him I want to call his attention to the fact that this amendment, exactly as I have offered it, with the exception that it was "the Secretary of Agriculture," was put into the agricultural appropriation bill and passed the Senate and went to conference. I am informed by the Senate conferees that the House conferees on that bill objected to it most strenuously because, they said, it was not in the proper bill; that it ought to have been appropriated so as to give the Geological Survey the control of the money, instead of the Secretary of Agriculture.

I think that will probably assist the Senator somewhat when he goes to conference.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator that I will take care of it as far as I can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment stated again, with the substitution suggested by the Senator. It seemed to me to be quite inappropriate to put the work in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out of the committee amendment "$200,000," and in lieu thereof to insert "$300,000: Provided, That $100,000 of this sum shall be used to enable the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the existence of artesian water and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary may alter the totals. These changes necessitate changes in the totals.

The SECREATRY. In this case the total, on page 105, line 7, will be "$1,355,520."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. And there will be other places of the kind. I want the Secretary to be authorized to correct the totals in accordance with the items of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will be instructed accordingly.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question in regard to an amendment just preceding the last one, in line 9, on page 104. The words "of the public lands" are stricken out. Would not the insertion of those words prohibit the making of surveys in cooperation with States?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The understanding of the committee was that it would prohibit the surveys being made in any except the public-land States, either independently or in cooperation with the States.

Mr. BURTON. And it would mark the abandonment of a line of work which has been pursued heretofore by the Geological Survey?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. For many years.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is perfectly correct. I will say to the Senator that some of the most important work of the Geological Survey has been done on private lands; and if these words remain in the bill it will be impossible to continue that work.

Mr. BURTON. Is not this the first time those words have been inserted?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the first time those words have been inserted.

Mr. WARREN. They were inserted on the floor of the House.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that even in the public-land States it is found utterly impracticable to carry on the work of the Geological Survey if they are not permitted to include within the scope of their activities lands held in private ownership as well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Mines," on page 105, line 23, after "$347,000," to insert "of which sum not exceeding 5 per cent may be used for personal services in the District of Columbia," so as to make the clause read:

For investigation as to the causes of mine explosions, methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to the mining industry, $347,000, of which sum not exceeding 5 per cent may be used for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I desire to have this amendment rejected. It is a mistake, and makes an inconsistency in the bill. I ask, therefore, that it be rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Alaska, expenses in," at the top of page 110, to insert:

Medical relief in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, with the advice and cooperation of the Public Health Service, to provide for the medical and sanitary relief of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; for erection, purchase, repair, rental, and equipment of hospital buildings; for books and surgical apparatus; for pay and necessary traveling expenses of physicians, nurses, and other employees, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, to be immediately available, $50,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I notice that the phraseology of the amendment is "Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians." I was wondering whether Eskimos and Aleuts were not Indians. How is that?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are Indians, but they are different tribes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Are they different tribes?

Mr. JONES. I think they are separate branches; yes. They are always referred to in that way.

Mr. WARREN. We wanted to cover them all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment that has just been agreed to, I have here a letter from the commissioner of education with a memorandum showing the importance and necessity of this appropriation. His suggestion was made in connection with the proposition to increase the preceding amount, $200,000, to $250,000. I ask to put the letter and memorandum in the RECORD so that the reason for this amendment will appear in the RECORD, showing its very great necessity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, June 29, 1914.

Hon. WESLEY L. JONES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR JONES: I earnestly desire to enlist your interest in securing an amendment by the Senate to the sundry civil bill increasing the appropriation for education in Alaska from $200,000 to $250,000 (H. R. 17041, p. 104).

From this appropriation the Bureau of Education must provide schools, medical relief, and relief of destitution for the native inhabitants of Alaska. The increase desired is of vital importance to the natives of Alaska.

The inclosures submitted herewith, to which I invite your attention, are (1) a 1-page memorandum regarding the increase desired, (2) a concise statement showing what the Board of Education has accomplished in Alaska, (3) a statement of the work of the Bureau of Education in Alaska and of my future policy regarding that work, which I prepared for the House Committee on Appropriations.

Assuring you that your cooperation in this matter will be appreciated, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

P. P. CLAXTON, Commissioner.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING THE NEED FOR INCREASING THE APPROPRIATION FOR EDUCATION IN ALASKA FROM $200,000 TO $250,000.

This appropriation is set forth on page 104 of the sundry civil bill, 1915, now under consideration by the House of Representatives.

The present appropriation of $200,000 for education in Alaska is inadequate to meet the urgent demands upon it. The amount of the appropriation has remained the same for seven years in succession; in the meantime the Bureau of Education has been forced to undertake many new and important enterprises, and it is still unable to provide schools for more than three-fourths of the children of natives in Alaska.

Realizing the absolute necessity of endeavoring to check the diseases which prevail to an alarming extent in the native villages, the Bureau of Education has been compelled to use more than $36,000 of the educational appropriation for the current year in furnishing medical relief in the Alaskan villages. To secure these funds it has been necessary to close several of the smaller schools.

From the present appropriation no reserve fund can be withheld with which to check unforeseen epidemics of measles, diphtheria, and smallpox among the natives, or with which to furnish relief to native communities suffering from flood, storm, or volcanic eruption.

WHAT THE BUREAU OF EDUCATION HAS ACCOMPLISHED IN ALASKA.

THE SCHOOL SERVICE.

Alaska has an area approximately equal to one-fifth of the United States. In this continental region there are about 25,000 natives in villages ranging from 30 or 40 up to 300 or 400 persons, scattered at intervals along its thousands of miles of coast line and on its great rivers.

During eight months of the year all of the villages in Alaska, with the exception of those on the southern coast, are reached only by trails over the snow-covered land or frozen rivers. Many of the native villages are remote from the main lines of travel, with no established means of access. In spite of the inherent difficulties of the problem the Bureau of Education has established a United States Public School in each of 70 villages, with 97 teachers, each of whom is a "settlement" worker, striving to elevate the natives (adults as well as children) intellectually, morally, and physically.

In many of the villages the public school is the only agency striving for the uplift of the natives. Each schoolhouse is a social center for the accomplishment of practical ends. Many of the buildings contain, in addition to the recitation room, an industrial room, kitchen, quarters of the teacher, and a laundry and baths for the use of the native community. The schoolroom is available for public meetings for discussion of affairs of the village, or occasionally for social purposes.

In the native villages the teachers and nurses endeavor to establish proper sanitary conditions by inspecting the houses, by insisting upon proper disposal of garbage, and by giving instruction in sanitary methods of living. Natives are encouraged to replace their filthy huts by neat, well-ventilated houses. In some sections the natives have been taught to raise vegetables, which are a healthful addition to their usual diet of fish and meat.

There are extensive regions in which the services of a physician are not obtainable. Accordingly, it often becomes the duty of a teacher to treat minor ailments, to render first aid to the injured, or to care for a patient through the course of a serious illness.

The Bureau of Education fosters the establishment of cooperative stores and other cooperative enterprises owned and managed by the natives themselves. By thus relieving themselves of the burden of the profit exacted by the middleman the natives are able to secure the necessities of life at the lowest prices and can at their own local stores obtain equitable value for their furs, ivory, woven baskets, and other native products.

The Bureau of Education has 76 school buildings in Alaska, the total value of which is $247,411. The value of the school equipment and furniture is, approximately, $65,000.

The appropriation, "education of natives of Alaska, 1913–14," is $200,000, of which $36,000 is used for medical relief of the natives.

The school enrollment is approximately 4,000. About 1,500 native children in remote villages are still to be provided with school facilities.

[1] The number of the schools has been reduced in order that additional funds may be available for medical work.

A document distributed by the officials of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, 1909, written by an unprejudiced observer not connected with the Government service, contains the following statement regarding the Bureau of Education's schools in Alaska:

"In brief, the Government is doing a splendid work. The teachers are well fitted for their vocation. The management of the Alaska native schools is excellent. What the Government teachers have done for the natives of Alaska can not be measured. It is the kind of work that does not show immediate results, but the author of this publication knows that it is sincere, painstaking, zealous work, and he knows that it is intelligently and wisely conducted."

MEDICAL WORK.

There is no specific appropriation for the support of medical work among the natives of Alaska. For several years the Bureau of Education has been striving, without success, to secure funds for use in making proper and adequate provision for the checking and prevention of the diseases which beyond question prevail to an alarming extent among the native races of Alaska. It has succeeded in securing a modification of the terms of the appropriation for the education of natives of Alaska which enables it to employ physicians and nurses. It can not erect the hospitals which are so greatly needed.

Realizing the absolute necessity for action, the Bureau of Education is using $36,000 of the $200,000 appropriated for the education of natives of Alaska during the fiscal year 1913–14 in employing 9 physicians, 9 nurses, in supplying the teachers of the United States public schools for natives with medical chests for use in treating minor ailments, also in maintaining three improvised hospitals in school buildings in centers of native population where hospitals are most urgently needed, and in making contracts with four hospitals for the treatment of diseased natives.

Nearly 1,800 cases were treated in the hospitals at Juneau, Nushagak, Nulato, and Kotzebue during 1912–13. The most prevalent diseases were tuberculosis, trachoma, rheumatism, and venereal diseases; the surgical operations included excisions for tubercular diseases of the bones, the removal of tubercular glands, laparotomies, curetting of ulcers, setting broken bones, sewing up recent wounds, and excisions of hemorrhoids, cataracts, abscesses, tonsils, and adenoids. During the year epidemics of infantile paralysis at St. Michael and of diphtheria at Nulato were checked by physicians employed by the Bureau of Education.

Referring to the medical work of the Bureau of Education in Alaska, Dr. Emil Krulish, passed assistant surgeon, United States Public Health Service, detailed to investigate health conditions among the natives of Alaska, makes the following statement in his official report:

"This improvement in the Sitka village, which is an example of the improvement in other sections of Alaska, I attribute chiefly to the influence and efforts of physicians, nurses, teachers, and hospitals now under the Bureau of Education. It demonstrates the fact that the outlook for the general improvement of the native is encouraging and the task feasible."

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 111, after line 9, to insert:

Hot Springs Reservation, Hot Springs, Ark.: For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs to care for storm waters from the mountains of the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in accordance with plans described in House Document No. 1298, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not think we ought to adopt that amendment without some explanation of it. As it reads here it is:

For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs to care for storm waters from the mountains of the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840—

And so forth. Why should the Federal Government pay for that?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, that improvement is one which is shown to be necessary by an engineering examination that was made under the authority of an act of Congress. It is well known that about 1,000 acres of the area of Hot Springs is Government property. Two mountains that make a valley on which a considerable part of the town is built are the property of the United States. The Government owns a vast amount of property there. All the bathhouse sites in the town are the property of the United States. This has been evolved as an expert determination of what the right of ownership in that place devolves upon the National Government. It is all worked out in a very elaborate document by a board of engineers appointed for that purpose. The item passed the Senate at the last session, but by reason of the size of the bill or something else it was left out in conference. It is a well-recognized necessity in that locality, and it has been duly estimated for. It has run the gantlet of all the inspections to which items of this kind are usually subjected.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to have the item passed over until I can examine this document.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It depends altogether on whether or not we are likely to get through with the bill to-night.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We hope to finish the bill to-night. I do not think the Senator will make any mistake in allowing the amendment to be agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is not a new item. It is one that has passed the Senate heretofore.

Mr. BURTON. It seems to me a very singular contention that the ownership of property adjacent to a city should impose upon the Government the obligation of providing a drainage system for the city.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is more than the mere ownership of property adjacent to it. It is the ownership of the city itself, nearly a thousand acres—900 acres and a fraction.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas whether there is any report which would show whether or not this experiment in Government ownership is profitable?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. This one has not been profitable up to the present time, but it ought to be in the near future. It is one of the great institutions of this country, and I feel confident that its operations will show a net profit in favor of the Government at an early date. Heretofore it has not yielded a net profit, but it is making progress in that direction.

Mr. GALLINGER. As I understand, the hotel rights and bath rights and everything of that kind are sold to private parties; are they?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That was true 20 years ago. At that time the hotel leases were made for rather nominal prices; but the importance of the resort has become so well known now that these sites are exceedingly valuable and they bring very high rents. I think from this time forward it will be a self-sustaining proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not make the inquiry with any feeling of hostility at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am sure that is true. I am sure my friend from Ohio would have no objection to it if he had heretofore availed himself of the opportunities that were presented on a former occasion to advise himself about its details. I have not any fear about what an examination of the item will disclose; and I would not want to delay the bill and put ourselves to unusual trouble about a thing that is so patent.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I do not wish to take the responsibility, just for the sake of making an examination myself, of postponing the disposition of this bill beyond to-day; but I really do not believe the consideration of the bill will be concluded before adjournment. If it should be reached at a later time, I probably should have had the opportunity to examine it in the meantime. I should like to have it passed over, so that there will be an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have not any objection to passing the item upon the request of the Senator, provided we do not thereby delay the ultimate passage of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If we should get to the end of the bill, I hope the Senator will then take it up and dispose of it this evening.

Mr. BURTON. I will send for the document right away.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In connection with this amendment increasing the amount from $165,000 to $225,000 I wish to call the attention of the chairman, although it may be that it has been called to his attention, but so that there will appear in the RECORD the special importance of a part, at least, of this increase, to the fact that I have had inserted in the RECORD, at page 6516, a letter which the Secretary of Commerce sent to me some time ago. I will read what the Secretary says as to the necessity of a part of this increase.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suggest to the Senator that if he just wants to get it in the RECORD as explanatory of the item, it can be printed without reading.

Mr. JONES. Unless it has been called to the attention of the Senator, I want to call his attention to it, because he will recognize the importance of it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am perfectly familiar with it.

Mr. JONES. The part of the letter to which I refer is brief, and it will take but a moment to read it. The Secretary of Commerce says:

This is a portion of the item in our estimates, "Field expenses, Pacific coast." The amount appropriated for this for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, was $165,000. We are asking for $225,000.

This is the part to which I especially call attention:

Included in this is $30,000 for an additional wire-drag party to be employed on the coast of Alaska during the summer and along the Pacific coast during the winter. This item appears on page 3 of House Document No. 577.

A peculiarity of the Alaskan coast is the pinnacle rocks which rise abruptly in points from the bottom. Ordinary sounding apparatus, which is all we now have, will not find these. A case in point is the State of California, wrecked in Gambia Bay with a loss of 32 lives. She struck a pinnacle rock. The bay had been sounded and she had been in and out many times. The only means available for soundings, however, would not discover such a pinnacle. A wire-drag apparatus is a sure means of finding such rocks. One was requested several years ago for use in the Northwest, but was not granted. If it had been granted and if it had been put in use in Gambia Bay, the State of California would have been saved. It ought to be supplied and the money for it and for the force necessary to use it should be made available immediately. With such an apparatus the coast can be made safe. Without it, it would only be by accident that one of these pinnacles would be discovered.

The next amendment was, on page 140, line 8, after the word "vessels," to insert "reimbursement of officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for food, clothing, medicines, and other supplies furnished for the temporary relief of distressed persons in remote localities and to shipwrecked persons temporarily provided for by them, not to exceed $500," so as to make the clause read:

For objects not hereinbefore named that may be deemed urgent, including the preparation or purchase of preliminary plans and specifications of vessels; reimbursement of officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for food, clothing, medicines, and other supplies furnished for the temporary relief of distressed persons in remote localities and to shipwrecked persons temporarily provided for by them, not to exceed $500; actual necessary expenses of officers of the field force temporarily ordered to the office at Washington for consultation with the superintendent, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The total in line 16 is not correct. It should read: "In all, for field expenses, $380,400," in lieu of "$320,400." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Lighthouse Service, on page 140, after line 20, to insert:

For two new vessels, including their equipment, $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 141, line 10, after the words "Office force," to strike out "Disbursing agent" and insert "Chief accountant," and in line 11, after the word "clerks," to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to make the clause read:

Office force: Chief accountant, $2,500; chief of division of library and archives, $1,800; clerks—three at $1,800 each, three at $1,650 each, four at $1,400 each, eight at $1,200 each, five at $1,000 each, ten at $900 each, six at $720 each;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 141, line 18, after the word "each," to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to make the clause read:

Topographic and hydrographic draftsmen: Two at $2,400 each, three at $2,200 each, three at $2,000 each, three at $1,800 each, three at $1,600 each, three at $1,400 each, three at $1,200 each, three at $1,000 each;

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 142, line 19, after the words "office force," to strike out "$202,620" and insert "$205,420," so as to make the clause read:

In all, pay of office force, $205,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 14, to insert:

For lithographic presses, $18,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 15, to strike out:

For a one-story brick building in extension of the present lithographic and aluminum plate printing room, $2,400.

And to insert:

Rebuilding lithographic and aluminum printing rooms, Coast and Geodetic Survey: For rebuilding and extending the present lithographic building, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 20, to strike out:

For a new one-story brick building of 3,200 square feet floor space, with suitable partitions, for the accommodation of material now stored in temporary wooden structures on the south lot of the Coast and Geodetic Survey grounds, $4,000.

And to insert:

One-story building, Coast and Geodetic Survey: For the erection of a one-story building between the Butler and Richards Buildings, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Fisheries," on page 144, line 17, after the word "service," to insert "fish pathologist, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, $2,500," and, on page 145, line 7, after the words

"in all," to strike out "$96,680" and insert "$99,180," so as to make the clause read:

Commissioner's office: Commissioner, $6,000; deputy commissioner, $3,500; assistants in charge of divisions—fish culture, $2,700; inquiry respecting food fishes, $2,700; statistics and methods of fisheries, $2,500; assistants—1 in charge of office, $2,500; 1, $2,500; 1, $1,800 (transferred from Alaska service); fish pathologist, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, $2,500; 1, $1,600; 2 at $1,200 each; 2 at $900 each; architect and engineer, $2,200; assistant architect, $1,600; draftsman, $1,200; accountant, $2,100; librarian, $1,500; superintendent of car and messenger service, $1,600; clerks—3 of class 4; 4 of class 3; 1 to commissioner, $1,600; 4 of class 2 (1 transferred from Alaska service); 5 of class 1 (1 transferred from Alaska service); 3 at $1,000 each; 15 at $900 each (1 transferred from Alaska service); statistical agents—1, $1,400; 2 at $1,000 each; local agents—1 at Boston, $300; 1 at Gloucester, $600; 1 at Seattle, $600; engineer, $1,080; 3 firemen at $720 each; 2 watchmen at $720 each; 5 janitors and messengers at $720 each; janitress, $480; messenger boy, $360; 4 charwomen at $240 each; in all, $99,180.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 152, to insert:

No part of the foregoing amount shall be expended for hatching or planting fish or eggs in any State in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, there are not adequate laws for the protection of the fishes; nor in any State in which the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents are not accorded full and free right to conduct fish-cultural operations, and all fishing and other operations necessary therefor, in such manner and at such times as is considered necessary and proper by the said commissioner or his agents.

The next amendment was, on page 153, line 25, after the word "therewith," to strike out "$60,000" and insert "$110,000," so as to make the clause read:

Alaska general service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, clothing, and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands of Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, expenses of travel of agents and other employees and subsistence while on said islands, hire and maintenance of vessels, and for all expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1910, entitled "An act to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes," and for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, $110,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 154, to insert:

Alaska fishery service, vessels and boats: For construction or purchase of vessels and boats in connection with the enforcement of the laws and regulations for the protection of the fisheries and fur-bearing animals of Alaska, including one seagoing vessel, one light-draft tug, and six rapid motor boats, to be available until expended, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 154, after line 13, to strike out:

And to insert:

For the continuation of the appropriation for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of Utah, including the purchase of land, construction of buildings and ponds, and for equipment, $25,000, to be available until expended; and the initial appropriation of $25,000 for the above-named purpose, included in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, is hereby continued and made available until expended.

The next amendment was, on page 155, after line 22, to insert:

Marine biological station, Florida: The provision of the act to authorize the establishment of a marine biological station on the Gulf coast of the State of Florida, approved March 1, 1911, requiring the State of Florida to donate and transfer free of cost the necessary land and water rights for such station, is hereby amended and modified to read as follows: Provided, That the State of Florida, a corporation, a firm, or an individual donates and transfers free of cost to the Government of the United States the necessary land and water rights.

The next amendment was, on page 156, after line 6, to insert:

Clackamas, Oreg., station: For construction of buildings and improvements to water supply, to be available until used, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to sell at public sale to the highest responsible bidder, after due advertising, the old fish-hatchery site belonging to the United States on the Clackamas River, near Clackamas, Oreg., consisting of 15.87 acres, the proceeds of said sale (after the payment of the expenses incidental thereto) to be covered into the Treasury as "Miscellaneous receipts, proceeds of Government property," $15,000.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I was going to suggest that the clause as drawn does not seem to be intelligent.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think on a careful reading of it the Senator will find it is intelligent. It is a little awkward, but——

Mr. THOMAS. I can not make head or tail of it. It may be because I am obtuse.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It appropriates $15,000 for construction and authorizes the sale of the old buildings.

Mr. THOMAS. If that is what is intended to be done, it is not what it says.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I admit that it is awkwardly expressed.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is what the department sent us.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. This language was prepared by the department, and the committee let it stand. They have to construe it.

Mr. BURTON. What does it mean, in any event, may I ask? Does it mean that the old fish-hatchery site is to be sold, and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, and independently of that an appropriation of $15,000 is to be made?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct. It is hardly expected that a new construction could be perfected with the sale of the old construction. We put in $15,000 in addition.

Mr. BURTON. The fish hatchery is not to be abandoned?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. SMOOT. It is to be moved to a new place.

Mr. BURTON. How far from the present locality?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know, but the testimony shows not very far.

Mr. OVERMAN. It had to be removed on account of the water receding. There is no water there, and they had to get to water. At the present location it is no good at all, I understand.

Mr. BURTON. The ground is to be sold and they get a new site.

Mr. OVERMAN. The location is changed.

Mr. BURTON. And this appropriation of $15,000 is for improvements to the site. Is the fish hatchery provided for in some other bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. It is for construction of the building.

Mr. BURTON. So this is regarded as sufficient to construct new buildings and provide a water supply in place of the present structure?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is my understanding.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is very awkwardly expressed. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "$15,000" at the end of the amendment, and inserting it after the word "used," in line 9, and following it by the word "and."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not object to that, but the amendment was prepared by the department, and it was satisfactory to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

Mr. OLIVER. If the department sends bad English to us, I do not think we ought to stand for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Very well, the Senator can fix the English to suit himself. It suited the Senator from Oregon, and I had no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the word "used," insert the words "$15,000, and," and strike out "$15,000" in line 17, so as to read:

Clackamas, Oreg., station: For construction of buildings and improvements to water supply, to be available until used, $15,000, and the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to sell, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 156, after line 17, to insert:

Beaufort, N. C., biological station: For repairs and additions to buildings and improvements to grounds, to be available until expended, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 156, after line 20, to insert:

Edenton, N. C., station: For construction and repair of buildings, to be available until expended, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 8 on page 158.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to offer an amendment at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is being read for action on the amendments of the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The committee amendments have not been completed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Immigration Service," on page 159, line 7, after the words "Secretary of Labor," to strike out "$2,649,500" and insert "$2,700,000," so as to read:

For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; cost of the reports of decisions of the Federals courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $2,700,000: Provided, however, That the commissioner of immigration to discharge at New Orleans, La., the duties now required of other commissioners of immigration at the respective ports of the United States shall be appointed in the same manner and for the same term as the said other commissioners, and shall have the same official status as they; and that section 34 of the immigration act approved February 20, 1907, is hereby repealed in so far as it conflicts with the foregoing provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 159, in line 18, after the words "shall be," to strike out "reduced to the sum of $2,900" and insert "$3,000," so as to read:

Provided further, however, That the salary of the said commissioner of immigration at New Orleans, La., shall be $3,000 per annum.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move to strike out the additional proviso in lines 17, 18, and 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 161, after line 19, to insert:

Building to install the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition: For the construction of a suitable building in that part of the reservation of the United States known as the Presidio of San Francisco, State of California, in which the Government Exhibit Board, created by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, shall install, display, and safeguard the exhibit of the Government of the United States at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, $500,000: Provided, That the said building shall be so located and planned and shall be of such a permanent character as will make it available and useful for military purposes of the United States after the close of the said exposition, and shall be on such general plan and design and in such location as shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said building shall be erected under the authority of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, as he may direct: Provided further, That not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended from the appropriation made herein, on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, for entertaining the officers and representatives of foreign governments who may attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this amendment seeks to appropriate $500,000 for the purpose of constructing a building at the Panama International Exposition to house the exhibits of the Government at that exposition, and as the building is to be made available for military purposes thereafter it must be of a permanent character. When the city of San Francisco secured the location of the exposition on the Pacific coast and within its boundaries it was with the express and reiterated understanding that the Government should not be called upon for any expenditures or appropriations whatever. The exposition company was to receive its financial support from other sources, and of course those sources were the State of California and the city of San Francisco.

The city of New Orleans was at that time a competitor for the scene of the location of this exposition. Those two places played against each other, and San Francisco's representations and insistence were finally successful.

My interpretation of that situation is that whatever buildings were to be constructed, whether for governmental use or for private exhibition, were to be constructed by the company and out of funds which it was to obtain elsewhere. The exposition company up to this time has done that. I was in San Francisco within the past few months and went through the grounds and the buildings, which are very commodious, very substantial, and almost complete.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator will excuse me, I am sure he understands that I do not desire to interrupt him, except to save time——

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that there was a special message sent here by the President of the United States asking this appropriation. The building will be worth its cost for military purposes as a permanent acquisition for the War Department. It is to be built under the direction of the War Department.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And it is to be built upon Government land.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; it is to be built upon Government land, at the very place where a Government building is needed.

Mr. THOMAS. If we need a building of that kind, we should have an appropriation made for it, and there should be a special bill for that purpose. I am very loath to oppose the wishes of the President of the United States upon anything, but I do not believe, Mr. President, that we should contract with a great municipality——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Would the Senator from Colorado object to my reading the letter, so that he will understand what it is?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly not. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I wish to say that it occurred to me that it would be well to read the President's communication.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The President's communication is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of a building within which to install, display, and safeguard at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco the Government exhibit authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913.

As pointed out by the Secretary of State, many of the Governments officially invited guests by the United States to participate in the exposition are erecting buildings within which to house their exhibits at the exposition. The Government of the United States should not be behind these in appropriately providing for its national exhibit.

I commend the recommendation to the favorable consideration of Congress.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 31, 1914.

Mr. THOMAS. I was about to say, Mr. President, when interrupted by the chairman of the committee, that a contract and agreement such as was solemnly entered into between the Government of the United States and those who promoted this exhibition ought to be just as binding and just as religiously observed by the Government as though it did not have an enormous Treasury and was not the sovereignty of the country. To my mind, if it had occurred to Congress when the original selection of an exposition site was made that it would be called upon to appropriate $500,000, as is sought to be appropriated here, it might have resulted in locating the exposition somewhere else.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Colorado misapprehends the contract which he quotes. The United States is in the same position as a State. If a State makes an exhibit at the Panama Exposition, it is under an obligation to make the appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no contract between the exposition company and any of the States; it is with the Government of the United States, which has the dispensing power, the power to determine where this exposition should be held.

Mr. WARREN. But there is nothing in that contract, as I read it, which provides that the United States may not make its own exhibit in its own building.

Mr. THOMAS. The United States may make its own exhibit.

Mr. WARREN. It may make its own exhibit of its own property in its own building on its own property, and for which there is immediate use along military lines.

Mr. THOMAS. There is nothing to prevent the United States, Mr. President, from spending all the money in its Treasury in any direction in which it sees fit; but the proposition for which I contend is that the city of San Francisco, having agreed to take all these matters off the hands of the Government of the United States, should provide this building if the Government exhibit is to go there.

Besides, Mr. President, it seems to me it comes at a very late time for the construction of this building in view of the fact that the exposition is to open next year, and practically all of the buildings of the exposition proper are nearly completed. I very much question whether this building can be put in condition in time for the exposition if this appropriation should be made; but I want to make a point of order against it.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Senator permit me to have read a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, in regard to the construction of a building by the United States at the Panama-Pacific Exposition?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from California? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending an appropriation of $500,000 for the erection of a building within which to install, display, and safeguard at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco the Government exhibit authorized by the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913.

As pointed out by the Secretary of State, many of the Governments officially invited guests by the United States to participate in the exposition are erecting buildings within which to house their exhibits at the exposition. The Government of the United States should not be behind these in appropriately providing for its national exhibit.

I commend the recommendation to the favorable consideration of Congress.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 31, 1914.

Mr. PERKINS. I should also like to have the letter from Mr. Bryan, following the message of the President, read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, that will be done.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE PRESIDENT:

The sundry civil appropriation act approved June 23, 1913, appropriates $500,000 for the purpose of inaugurating, installing, maintaining, and returning a Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to open at San Francisco next year, of such articles and materials as illustrate the functions and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States tending to demonstrate the nature and growth of our institutions, their adaptation to the wants of the people, and the progress of the Nation in the arts of peace and war; and authorized the President to provide for the collection and exhibition of such articles and materials under the direction of a board which is created by the act, to which is imposed the duty of determining the nature and character and extent of the exhibits to be made and which is charged with the collection, purchase, preparation, safe-keeping, and exhibition and return of such articles and materials as the board may decide shall be exhibited. But no provision is made by that act or by any previous or subsequent act for the erection of a suitable building within which these exhibits may be installed, displayed, and safeguarded.

The policy of the Federal Government to support the exposition was fixed by the joint resolution of February 15, 1911, which requested the President of the United States to invite all the nations of the earth to participate therein, and the invitation extended in pursuance thereof by the President to all the nations of the earth to take part in the exposition gives to the exposition in the minds of the foreign Governments an official character.

Twenty-seven of these Governments have responded favorably to the invitation, most of which have buildings in course of construction in which to house their exhibits, while many of our States have signified their intention to take a worthy part in the exposition and have made provision for the erection of State buildings. Of the Governments which have not yet accepted the invitation few have actually declined, while others are awaiting the assembling of their legislative bodies for appropriate action.

I deem it important that the Government of the United States should make at the exposition such a display as will be commensurate with the international scope and importance of the exposition and as will comport with the dignity and standing of the United States. This can not be done, and the exhibit would be of little value if scattered through the exposition buildings, space in which I understand is already insufficient for individual exhibitors. To be imposing it should be collected together under one roof. The site set apart for the building is on the Government reservation in the Presidio. A building there erected by the Government could no doubt be utilized after the exposition for Army uses, and it should be constructed with that end in view.

The sum of $500,000 is not too large for this purpose, and I recommend that Congress be requested to appropriate that amount for the erection of the building.

Respectfully submitted.

W. J. BRYAN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 30, 1914.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I will not make the point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I object to the amendment. I thought the Senator from Colorado was going to make the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think it is subject to a point of order; it is estimated for by the President of the United States, and there is no higher department of the Government than the Chief Executive.

Mr. THOMAS. I will not make a point of order against an appropriation that is asked for by the President and Secretary of State. It does not change my opinion, however, Mr. President, concerning the character of it; and I do not think under the circumstances that any such appropriation should be made.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I make the point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, before that is passed upon——

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order suggested by the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I do not know that the point will hold, but the amendment is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is simply a direction how the money shall be used; it is not general legislation; and, furthermore, it is estimated for by the State Department and by the President of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. And reported by the Appropriations Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is certainly not general legislation; it is simply special legislation for a special building at a special place.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is certainly not general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment seems to have been moved by the direction of a standing committee of the Senate, so that there appears to be no parliamentary objection to it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Virginia, to what use will this building be devoted after the exposition?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It will be used, as I understand, for a barracks for soldiers. It is very much needed, and it will be erected on Government property at the very place where the Government requires a building for the use of its troops.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Is it the character of building that would be constructed if the exposition were not held?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is to be constructed with a view to the needs of the War Department, and under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the committee if he will allow to be read a letter from the Secretary of War in relation to the matter?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] that when this exposition was located in the city of San Francisco it was with the distinct understanding that this Government was not to be asked for an appropriation; and while I am not going to consume the time of the Senate, I simply want to register my protest against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 162, after line 20, to insert:

The provisions contained in the act entitled "An act making an appropriation for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914," which provides for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition be amended as follows: Under the head of "To provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition," the paragraph on page 81, which reads as follows: "The President of the United States is authorized to detail three civilian officers or employees from the executive departments as members of a commission which is hereby constituted as the National Exposition Commission; one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner shall receive in addition to his original compensation his actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for clerical, office, and other necessary and actual expenses of said commission," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The President of the United States is authorized to detail two civilian officers or employees from the executive departments and one from civil life as members of the commission, which is hereby constituted as the National Exposition Commission; one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State, the civilian commissioner to receive a salary of $5,000. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner detailed as aforesaid shall receive, in addition to his original compensation, necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for clerk hire and actual expenses of said commission."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is a little error in punctuation on line 8, page 163. In that line, after the word "commission," a comma should be inserted; at the end of line 8, after the word "commissioners," a comma should be inserted; and at the end of line 8, after the word "commissioners," the semicolon should be stricken out and a comma inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether I am right in construing the effect of this amendment to be that the change it makes in the law is that one of the commissioners may be appointed from outside of the Government service and is to receive a salary of $5,000 a year, whereas under the law as it now is three of the commissioners were to be detailed from the executive departments at Washington and were to receive nothing, except a subsistence allowance of $10 a day?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this amendment——

Mr. OVERMAN. I trust the Senator will not do that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator from North Carolina, who is more familiar with it than I am, will state the reasons for the change.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is no additional appropriation in this amendment at all. As the Senator from Iowa has said, the only change is that one of the commission is to be appointed from civil life instead of three being detailed from the departments. That is all there is to it. The one appointed from civil life is to receive $5,000 a year.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask, then, where will the person who is to be appointed from civil life get his $5,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. That comes out of the appropriation. If the Senator has read it, he will see that this is an amendment to the bill appropriating $500,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but it adds just that much to the expense. If it were proper 13 months ago to create this commission from the executive departments of the Government, why is it not proper still?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say, Mr. President, that the reason——

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be very glad to hear the reason.

Mr. OVERMAN. The reason is that if three men were detailed from the departments, probably one from the State Department, one from the Department of Commerce, and one from some other department, they would not be able to give all their time to the duties of the office of commissioner, but would have to go back and forth. It is necessary that there should be some one on the ground in San Francisco all the time to meet objections and pass upon questions that may arise in connection with exhibits.

I will say, further, that there was a gentleman appointed to this place as commissioner. The law, as it reads, requiring details to be made from the several departments cut him out. He now has his commission and is acting as commissioner, and has been so acting for a year.

Mr. CUMMINS. Where did he get the authority?

Mr. OVERMAN. Really there was no authority for it; but he was appointed commissioner, and he had been acting under a commission given to him—without due authority it is true—but I think it would be humiliating to him if he were not continued in this office where he has been working for a year. As I have said, this amendment does not add a dollar to the appropriation.

Mr. CUMMINS. But it adds to the expense.

Mr. OVERMAN. It takes that much money, amounting to $5,000, from the appropriation, but that amount is only given to one commissioner, who will be present in San Francisco all the time, whereas the officials of the departments who are detailed probably can not leave their work in Washington and can only go back and forth between San Francisco and Washington from time to time. That is the purpose of the provision. I think the Senator will agree with me that it is a wise thing to do, because questions are constantly arising in connection with space to be allotted at the exposition, and so forth, and there ought to be some one there all the time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, does the Senator from North Carolina say that one of the three can not be there all the time?

Mr. OVERMAN. Whoever are detailed from the departments, Mr. President, will have to be some prominent officials. If only two are officials of the Government and the third is appointed from the outside, the two can go to San Francisco occasionally and in the meantime attend to their duties here in Washington, while the third, appointed from civil life, can remain in San Francisco. If one is there all the time, he can send, if it is necessary, for the others to come from Washington to pass upon the questions that may come before the board of commissioners for their decision. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of the explanation of the Senator from North Carolina, I will not make the point of order; but it is evident to me that it is intended to give another man a job, and that is all.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am perfectly candid about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wanted to be sure whether I was right that this amendment is simply to give a man not now in office a position under the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is perfectly right, except that it is not to give anybody an office who is out of office, but it is to take care of a man who has already been appointed to this position.

Mr. CUMMINS. Who made the mistake of appointing him?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know how the mistake was made, but a commission was issued to him. It was a mistake.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will not make the point of order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if the salary of the commissioner appointed from the outside is to be $5,000 a year or $5,000 for the exposition?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it says $5,000 per year or not; I think it does.

Mr. CUMMINS. It says he is "to receive a salary of $5,000."

Mr. OVERMAN. Five thousand dollars a year?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not say whether it is to be for a year or for a month.

Mr. KENYON. Or for the exposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. We might say $5,000 per annum. I suggest that we add the words "per annum, until the close of the exposition."

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the insertion of the words "at the rate of."

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well; "at the rate of $5,000 per annum until the exposition closes."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator who has just taken his seat whether the provision for $10 a day in lieu of subsistence means every day, whether he is employed on the work or not? There is no limitation as to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose he would be on the job every day, and his subsistence, like that of all officers of the Government when away from home, would be paid.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be so, but it reads:

> Each commissioner detailed as aforesaid shall receive, in addition to his original compensation, necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was the same as the law passed in the last Congress; that is the law now; there is no change at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does that mean that the commissioner, in order to draw his "in lieu of subsistence," has got to be on the job there, or can he be on the job here in Washington, where his ordinary duties are?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not suppose he will be at Washington; that is, instead of making it $5 and $7 a day, as the law is in the case of all other employees, inasmuch as they are going to San Francisco it is made $10 a day when they go there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that the words "while on duty" might be put in there to make it clear.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move an amendment, Mr. President, after the word "subsistence," to insert "while on duty."

Mr. JONES. I suggest that it read "while on duty in San Francisco."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; "while on duty in San Francisco."

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this bill allows these commissioners, their clerks, I suppose, and so on, $10 a day for subsistence. When you come to treat of such men as compose the General Board of Appraisers at New York, who have to be away from New York part of the time, you cut down their subsistence to $5 or $6 or $7 a day. Why is that? Here is a board in New York consisting of the most capable and competent men, men of very high skill. They have to hold their court at Chicago sometimes, and——

Mr. OVERMAN. Not only that, but the heads of our departments who travel do not get more than $5 a day. I am not responsible for this, however. It was put in the last sundry civil bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. It could be changed here.

Mr. OVERMAN. Surely. I do not object to an amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply want to say that I do not believe $10 a day is too much. I do not believe a man can live in San Francisco and support himself properly and reputably and do honor to his country upon much less than $10 a day; but I do think that cutting down the subsistence of these high officers under the customs service is a great mistake. I know they can not live upon the allowance that is made here, and the result is that there is a constant inroad upon their salaries. When it comes to that, I think the committee ought to be consistent and raise them or cut these, one of the two; and I leave it to the committee to do whatever it thinks best in that regard.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I would suggest to the committee that after the word "necessary," on line 8, page 164, it insert the words "to be expended." That would follow the phraseology of the subsequent section, and at the same time would make it intelligible.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the three proposed amendments.

Mr. BURTON. What is the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the three proposed amendments to the amendment of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to three points in the substituted paragraph which are indefinite or ambiguous. One has already been mentioned. Beginning on line 19, page 163, the paragraph reads as follows:

The President of the United States is authorized to detail two civilian officers or employees from the executive departments and one from civil life as members of the commission—

And so forth.

The appointing power does not detail men from civil life; he appoints. The two first mentioned are detailed. They are already in the Government service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I accept the amendment. I agree to the insertion there of the words "and shall appoint."

Mr. BURTON. I would suggest this phraseology: Substitute for the word "and" in line 21 a comma and the word "also," and after the word "one" insert the words "to be appointed."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. The next is in line 24:

One of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State, the civilian commissioner to receive a salary of $5,000.

Reference has been made above to "two civilian officers or employees." I take it that this term "civilian commissioner" is intended to describe the status of the one appointed from civil life, is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. You have spoken just above of "two civilian commissioners."

Mr. OVERMAN. "Officers or employees."

Mr. BURTON. Well, "two civilian officers or employees," who would be the civilian commissioners. I suggest there the use of the words "the commissioner appointed from civil life," instead of the words "the civilian commissioner."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. I believe attention has been called to the other point—"to receive a salary of $5,000." It is indefinite as to whether it is per annum or for the entire service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virgina. I move to insert the words "per annum." That will make it clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is manifest that the consideration of this bill can not be concluded this evening.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will give us a few more minutes. I think there is very little left in the bill now. I do not see any reason why we should not complete the bill to-night.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to suggest that there is something in the bill that will meet with opposition. I refer especially to the proposed amendment of the committee on page 184. I know that that amendment will lead to considerable debate. That is the proposition to take $500,000 of the funds of the Panama Railroad Co. and devote it to the payment of the expenses of Members of Congress when they visit the Panama Exposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to suggest, as the bill can not be concluded this evening—I have assurances from various Senators that it will not be—that we have been here almost seven hours, but if the Senator wishes to continue until 6 o'clock I have no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I should be glad if we could have a few minutes more and go along as far as we can.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 165, after line 14, to insert:

The Government Exhibit Board, for which provision was made in the sundry civil act approved June 23, 1913, shall, after consultation by correspondence or otherwise with the heads of the executive departments and the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the American National Red Cross, the Commission of Fine Arts, the Librarian of Congress, the Public Printer, the Governor of Porto Rico, the Governor of Alaska, the Governor of Hawaii, and the United States Geographic Board, determine the nature, character, and extent of the exhibits of the United States Government to be made at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to be held at San Francisco, Cal., in 1915, and shall be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as said board may decide shall be exhibited; and the said board is empowered to select, purchase, and exhibit articles or materials representing the activities of any department, office, commission, or organization named in this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 166, after line 11, to insert:

MACDONOUGH MEMORIAL.

For the erection of memorials at or near Plattsburg, N. Y., in commemoration of the victory of Commodore Thomas Macdonough on Lake Champlain, in September, 1814, $15,000 of the sum herein appropriated to be paid to a commission appointed by the State of Vermont, and the remainder to a commission appointed by the State of New York, the whole to be applied only with the approval of a commission of three to be appointed by the President of the United States, of whom one shall be chosen from the Army and one from the Navy to represent the National Government in the erection of the proposed memorial: Provided, That no part of the said appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until after the State of New York shall have appropriated a sum not less than $125,000 for the said memorial and celebration, $250,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against that amendment, on the ground that it adds a new item of appropriation to the bill, that it is general legislation, and that no estimate has been made for it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his point of order, as this matter will probably go over, until to-morrow, and let us look into it a little more carefully?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Personally I feel very anxious to have this appropriation made, and I hope a point of order will not be made against it; but let it go over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that it may be passed over for the present.

Mr. THOMAS. I am willing to do that, with the understanding that I can renew the point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 167, after line 3, to insert:

UNDER DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL FOR THE EXPLORATION OF THE SEA.

For the pro rata share of the United States in the administrative expenses of the Permanent International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, in the interest of the commercial fisheries, $5,956.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Under legislative," on page 167, line 26, after the word "stables," to insert "including purchase of power lawn mower," so as to make the clause read:

Botanic Garden: For general repairs to buildings, heating apparatus, painting, glazing, repairs to footwalks and roadways, general repairs to packing sheds, storerooms, and stables, including purchase of power lawn mower, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 2, to insert:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $2,500 made in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1912 and subsequently made available for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914, for removing fence and wall around the Botanic Gardens and such grading, soiling, seeding, and sodding as may be incident thereto, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1915: Provided, That the work herein authorized shall be completed on or before January 1, 1915.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 13, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $55,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 18, to insert:

For furniture for Senate Office Building and labor and material incident thereto, including carpets, window shades, awnings, etc., $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 168, after line 21, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, $17,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 169, after line 2, to insert:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation made in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1912, to provide suitable transportation for freight and other purposes in the subway leading from the Capitol to the Senate and House Office Buildings and in the sub-basement corridors of the Senate and House Office Buildings, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including temporary operation, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal years 1914 and 1915 for the maintenance and repair of motor-propelled vehicles used in said subway.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "The Panama Canal," on page 184, line 2, after the word "Isthmus," to strike out "and for expenses of the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal" and insert "Provided, That the Secretary of War may make use of the equipment and funds of the Panama Railroad Co. for the purpose of transportation and other necessary expenses incident to the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal," so as to make the clause read:

Seventh. For pay of officers and employees of the department of civil administration, including foremen, subforemen, skilled and unskilled labor, watchmen, messengers, and storekeepers, of the departments of civil administration and law, including those necessarily and temporarily detailed for duty away from the Isthmus: Provided, That the Secretary of War may make use of the equipment and funds of the Panama Railroad Co. for the purpose of transportation and other necessary expenses incident to the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal, $500,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may be passed over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It can go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 186, line 4, after the word "expended," to insert "Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the construction of the Panama Canal, including any portion of such appropriations which may be used for the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances, for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies, for the construction of office buildings and quarters, and other necessary buildings, exclusive of fortifications and colliers, and exclusive of the amount used for operating and maintaining the canal, and for the permanent organization after the canal is opened for use and operation, may be paid from or reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909," so as to make the clause read:

In all, $20,718,000, the same to be immediately available and to continue available until expended: Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the construction of the Panama Canal, including any portion of such appropriations which may be used for the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances, for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies, for the construction of office buildings and quarters, and other necessary buildings, exclusive of fortifications and colliers, and exclusive of the amount used for operating and maintaining the canal, and for the permanent organization after the canal is opened for use and operation, may be paid from or reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not know that I am at all opposed to this amendment, but I should like a little information with regard to it. It is this:

Is it proposed that we shall expend our money in and about the Panama Canal, so as to be able to supply foreign ships, just as we supply our own ships, with anything they may desire to buy and that may be necessary or useful in commerce? In other words, does the Committee on Appropriations put upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty the construction, that has been sometimes contended for, that if we supply coal or food to our own ships at the canal, we must also provide the facilities that will be necessary to supply all other ships with the same things? Is that one of the conditions which must be equal and similar as respects our commerce and foreign commerce?

I think we ought to know now how we construe the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in that respect. If it is our duty to create there an immense depot in order to supply all the ships that may pass through the Panama Canal as we supply our own, then a certain appropriation is required, and a very large one, probably; but if we do not recognize that obligation, we need not appropriate nearly so much money for that purpose nor enter upon a policy of appropriating money for that purpose, as though our obligation were wider.

I should like to know what the view of the chairman of the committee is in respect to our duty in and about the Panama Canal with reference to supplying the world with whatever it may desire to buy there.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I had not adverted to that question; but on the spur of the moment I can not conceive that there is anything in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that would impose upon us any such obligation as furnishing coal or anything else to foreign ships if we did not choose to do it. I will say in addition to that, however, that this is a provision—and that is one reason why I have not scanned it carefully—that was in the law passed in 1914, and it was reinserted in this bill by the House committee, but it went out on a point of order. Of course it is an open question for Congress to do as it sees fit about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I knew that it was formerly in the bill, but I think the time has come now when we must determine what this treaty means with regard to our obligations to foreign commerce.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think it would be well to pass this amendment until to-morrow morning, as it is perfectly evident that we shall not finish it to-night anyhow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should be glad to have it passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator pass it over, because there is another question involved in the amendment that I should like to discuss to-morrow also.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It can go over until to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the appropriation was made for the Panama Exposition. I shall not ask to have it settled this afternoon, but I want to enter the motion now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There are but few committee amendments left. We are near the end of the bill, and we might go through with those so as to finish the committee amendments, except those which have been passed over.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 195, line 24, after the word "the," to insert "Attorney General and the," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. Appropriations herein for printing and binding shall not be used for any annual report or the accompanying documents unless the head of each executive department or other branch of the public service or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia making such a report shall furnish copy to the Public Printer in the following manner: Copies of the documents accompanying such annual reports on or before the 15th day of October of each year; copies of the annual reports on or before the 15th day of November of each year; and complete revised proofs of the accompanying documents and the annual reports on the 10th and 20th days of November of each year, respectively. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the annual reports of the Attorney General and the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13, page 197, line 23, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "$4" and insert "$6," so as to read:

SEC. 13. That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty when not otherwise fixed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 198, line 4, after the word "allowances," to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That internal-revenue agents appointed under the act of October 3, 1913, entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' shall receive compensation of not to exceed $7 per day, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence when absent on duty from their legal residence said agents shall receive, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $3 per day, and that internal-revenue inspectors appointed under said act of October 3, 1913, shall receive compensation of not to exceed $5 per day, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 when absent on duty from their legal residence, compensation and per diem in lieu of subsistence to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury," so as to read:

For the fiscal year 1916 and annually thereafter estimates of appropriations from which per diem allowances are to be paid shall specifically state the rates of such allowances: Provided, That internal-revenue agents appointed under the act of October 3, 1913, entitled, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think I am correct in assuming that these internal-revenue agents were appointed without reference to the provisions of the civil-service laws. Am I correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. GALLINGER. The provision has been used, to my knowledge, to appoint at least one man who ought never to have been appointed to any position, and who would not have been appointed through the civil service.

Mr. President, I am considerably disturbed about this question of the civil service. I think it is about time that we either stood by the law or repealed the law. I clipped from a morning paper the following:

TO PROBE TRADE CONDITIONS.

President Wilson, by Executive order published to-day, amended the civil-service rules so as to permit the appointment, without examination, of the 14 commercial experts provided for in the legislative appropriation act which became a law last week.

These experts will investigate trade conditions abroad and in the United States, including the insular possessions, with a view to determining the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. OVERMAN. How can that be, Mr. President? That act has not become a law. The legislative bill has not passed yet.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand, but it is going to pass. It seems that the President, if this clipping is correct, anticipated the actual passage of the law and exempted these high-priced officials, 14 in number. In other words, 14 good Democratic workers will get these positions without any reference to the civil-service law just as these men have received their appointments and, as I believe, largely because of their political activity to these high places—$7 a day and $3 for subsistence—to look into matters connected with the internal revenue, I believe in reference to the income tax.

I call attention to this, Mr. President, for the reason that I wrote at my desk this morning, and it is in my desk now, for I did not have an opportunity to offer it, a resolution asking for a statement as to how many officials of this kind have been appointed outside of the civil-service law during the Sixty-third Congress. It is a very large number, and if we are going to ignore the civil-service law every time we come to a point where we are to select 14 or 20 or 40 or 50 men, more or less, to do work that could be done by men who are on the rolls of the Civil Service Commission, who have taken an examination and who ought to have consideration, it looks to me as though it is a bad condition of things.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows that the statement in that clipping can not possibly be true, because there are no such officers created as special agents, and the President could not have issued that order. No such office is in existence and will not be until the bill shall have passed both Houses and been signed by both presiding officers and signed by the President. So the clipping can not be true.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a bare possibility that it is anticipatory. That it will happen precisely as the clipping suggests I apprehend is correct; but whether that be so or not, the scores of places that have been exempted from the operation of the civil-service law during the past month or two are rather alarming to me. I am not a great stickler for the civil-service law either, but I do really think that if we are going to emasculate the law by Executive order or by exempting such employees from the terms of that law it is about time for us to have a careful inquiry made into the matter. I hope that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], who has taken a great deal of interest in civil-service matters and who was the chairman of the committee when we were in the majority, will look into it and see whether we are going along correct lines or not.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that is a question, I respond that we are going, as I said the other day, as rapidly away from the civil-service system as we can go.

I rise to ask whether the amendment on page 197, line 23, was overlooked. I did not hear it referred to in the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was read and agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was sitting here and I did not hear it read. I should like to have it reconsidered. I think it covers the point I suggested a moment ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator wishes to be heard on that amendment, I have no objection to its reconsideration, and let it go over until morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. It has come to my attention that men I had in mind who fill the office of a general board of appraisers are called to Chicago, San Francisco, and other places in which a large amount of business is done, and if I understand it aright they would be limited in this bill to $6 a day for subsistence.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is correct. The committee fixed it at $6 a day.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think that is sufficient. It is a maximum, at any rate, and the head of the department has authority over it. I wanted to suggest an amendment raising it to at least $8 per day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does not this refer to the subordinates who are detailed for work in the field?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; it says:

That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty when not otherwise fixed by law.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be reconsidered by which the amendment was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is reconsidered.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Now, I ask——

Mr. CUMMINS. I move to insert "$8" in lieu of "$6," and it goes over until to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It goes over until to-morrow, and also the last amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the last amendment may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have just requested that it go over until to-morrow. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, after the completion of the routine business, I will ask the Senate to resume the consideration of this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to offer an amendment to come in after line 18, on page 198. It is to insert:

The commissioner, assistant commissioner, and members of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation while traveling on duty or engaged in the work of mediation and conciliation outside of the District of Columbia shall be allowed actual and necessary expenses for subsistence without regard to the limitation as to amount found in the second paragraph of that portion of the urgent deficiency act approved April 6, 1914, which relates to the Commission on Industrial Relations.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have not finished the committee amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator can offer it and let it go over to be considered after we complete the committee amendments.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like in connection with the amendment to have a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from Mr. Chambers, the chairman of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, regarding this item of subsistence printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator wishes to have it go in the RECORD?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to have it go in the RECORD. I send it to the desk so that it may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION,
Washington, July 6, 1914.

HON. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to request that the item in the sundry civil appropriation bill, now before your committee, making appropriation for the expenses of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation, be amended to exempt the Commissioner of Mediation and Conciliation, and the assistant commissioner and members of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation from the provisions of the urgent deficiency act of April 6, 1914, which limits the allowance for subsistence to $5, and to provide instead that the officials above named be allowed or paid their actual and necessary expenses for subsistence while traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia.

In explanation of the above request, I beg to state that to limit the above officials to $5 per day for subsistence would prove of serious detriment to this service. Most of the cases brought to this board require the services of either the commissioner, the assistant commissioner, or a member of this board in one of the large cities, where suitable hotel accommodations in a central location convenient to the railroad officials and to the organization officials can not be secured within the limitation.

In connection with the work of mediation, it is necessary always to have a suitable room for the conferences with the parties to the controversy; and so far such accommodations have been furnished gratis by the hotels at which the mediators have stopped. In order to come within the $5 limitation of expenses for subsistence, it would be necessary in most cases for the mediator not only to secure hotel accommodations in a less convenient location, involving loss of time in getting into touch with the parties to the case and in carrying on negotiations, but also to hire a room for conferences, which in itself would cost more than the entire expenses for subsistence at present.

Cases come to this board only after the railroads and their employees have exhausted every other means of composing their differences, and when the controversy has reached a critical point, threatening to terminate in a strike and consequent stoppage of operation and inconvenience to the public. It is imperative that the mediator act quickly and get promptly into touch with the railroad officials on the one hand and the committee of the employees on the other. It is believed that the limitation in expense of subsistence would prove a serious handicap to this work, and that in the end the cost of mediation would thereby actually be increased.

Mediation sessions are held in large cities, more frequently in New York and Chicago than elsewhere, but not infrequently in Cleveland, Ohio; St. Louis, Mo.; Denver, Colo.; Portland, Oreg.; San Francisco, Cal.; Houston, Tex.; and Atlanta, Ga. Practically all of the southeastern cases are heard in the offices at Washington. It is almost always inconvenient to get the use of a court room in the Federal buildings of these cities, as controversies are appealed to this board unexpectedly, leaving no opportunity for the appointment of dates and the arrangement for rooms in Federal buildings, which arrangements must be made through the Office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and take several days to complete, and sometimes it would be impossible under any conditions to secure a court room. Mediation hearings always necessitate a room of much larger dimensions than the rooms of an ordinary hotel, and it is only at the large, first-class hotels that such audience rooms can be had, and such hotels furnish us ample rooms without charge. In most cases we have required rooms with a seating capacity for 50 or more men, and it is a rare case that there are less than 20, as both sides to the controversy are represented by large committees. Such audience rooms as these hotels furnish us for hearings would probably cost not less than $20 per day on an average. In the case of one hotel furnishing this board a room free of charge, we learn that for other purposes it is rented at $50 per day. I do not recall an instance where it would have been practicable to secure proper sleeping accommodations and meals at any of these first-class hotels within $5 per day. The character of service rendered in these mediation sessions is, perhaps, of not less importance than that rendered by a circuit judge when absent from his home, and who is allowed $10 per day, besides travel expenses, for subsistence. Permit me to illustrate the situation: Judge Knapp, who is a member of this board, is also a circuit judge of the United States. When absent from home holding court he is allowed $10 per day for subsistence, besides travel expenses, while in holding mediation sessions, absent from home and rendering services of as equally important a character, he is limited by the urgent deficiency act of May 6, 1914, to $5 per day for subsistence. I do not suggest a per diem of $10 for subsistence, but that the commissioner, the assistant commissioner, and members of this board should be allowed their actual and necessary expenses when absent from Washington on mediation work.

I would be glad to be heard in support of this request at any time it may suit the convenience of the committee.

Very respectfully,

W. L. CHAMBERS, Commissioner.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say in this connection, Mr. President, that it would be exceedingly embarrassing to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation to be limited to the small amount proposed for subsistence. The board also desires to be relieved from that provision in the urgent deficiency bill immediately following the section in the bill regarding the Commission on Industrial Relations, in which the allowance for subsistence is limited to $5 per day. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to discontinue the consideration of the bill now?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; I agreed to yield to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] to make a motion for an executive session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will not go on further.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 8, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

TUESDAY, July 7, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our Father in heaven, for the beautiful world in which Thou hast placed us, with its splendid opportunities to develop all that is purest, noblest, best in us; for our homes, with their sweet and tender affections; for our Republic, with its sacred institutions, which tend to the development of good citizenship; for our religion, which inspires to nobler life, binds us indissolubly to Thee, and makes the whole world kin. May we appreciate and strive earnestly to fulfill every obligation devolving upon us willingly and cheerfully. In the spirit of the Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Chair as to his recollection of the accuracy of the Journal in a certain respect. Yesterday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] moved to suspend the rules and pass a certain resolution. The Chair said, after a second was demanded:

The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Now, the context a little further on shows that I, at least, thought that the Chair declared that there was no objection. The recollection of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the same as mine, to the effect that the Chair declared there was no objection. If that is correct, then a second has been ordered on Mr. PHELAN'S motion, and the resolution will have a different status two weeks from now than it will have if the Journal is allowed to stand as it is at present. I should like to have the Speaker's own recollection of the matter, as to whether or not the Chair declared that there was no objection to considering a second as ordered on Mr. PHELAN'S resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's recollection about it is that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] moved to suspend the rules, and so forth, and before the Chair could ask if a second was demanded a second was demanded. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] asked that a second be considered as ordered, and before the Chair could open his mouth or the gentleman from Massachusetts could shut his the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], standing right down here at the right, raised the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARDNER. Of course, the Chair's recollection settles it. My own impression was a little different. I should have said that the Chair hesitated a little while before the gentleman from North Carolina spoke.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not get a chance to continue.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the Chair had not made the statement that there was no objection. If the Chair will indulge me, I think I appreciate what the gentleman from Massachusetts has in mind; but——

Mr. GARDNER. I am satisfied——

Mr. FITZGERALD. But as it is a matter wholly in the discretion of the Chair, I think that should be conclusive.

Mr. GARDNER. I have no objection to the approval of the Journal.

Mr. BARTON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska want to correct the Journal?

Mr. BARTON. No.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, then, the Journal as read and corrected will stand approved.

The Journal was approved.

OWNERSHIP OF RAILROAD FROM ATCHISON TO WATERVILLE, KANS.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I rose to make a motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of House resolution 295. This is a privileged resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, let the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska will send it to the desk. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 295.

Resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to send to the House of Representatives certain information.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to send to the House of Representatives the following information so far as this information is now contained in the files of the Treasury Department:

First. What corporation now holds title to the 100 miles of railroad extending from Atchison to Waterville, Kans., formerly owned by the Central Branch of the Union Pacific.

Second. Did the United States issue subsidy bonds to this railroad company to the amount of $1,600,000.

Third. If so, has the principal and interest been paid. If not, state the amount still due.

Fourth. Has the United States made demands upon the present owners of the said railroad for reports of its business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving a point of order, the resolution does not seem to be in the usual form. I do not know how the resolution came to go to the Committee on Ways and Means, if it has gone there, as it is not one of those matters over which the Committee on Ways and Means has jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. It was referred to that committee because it has to do with information concerning bonds.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I see no objection, though, to the gentleman getting the information if he will make the resolution accord with the usual form and say, "If not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. BARTON. I shall be pleased to make the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We had some controversy about that form of a resolution some time ago. I took the trouble to look up the precedents, which are almost unanimously in favor of the proposition that a resolution addressed to the President or the Secretary of State in regard to foreign affairs must use the language "if not incompatible with the public interest." But other resolutions omit that phrase.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, as the gentleman states, there are a great many resolutions that have been passed that have omitted it, but many have not; and I think it proper to have the clause in the resolution. I am sure the gentleman would not desire to pass the resolution without it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. As a matter of privilege of this House I think all resolutions that go to any of the heads of departments other than the President or the Secretary of State ought to direct the giving of such information as this House may desire.

It seems to me it is going too far to say "if not incompatible with the public interest," because it is presumed at least that this House will not call for information that is incompatible with the public interest; and if it does call for information that is incompatible with the public interest it is easy enough for the head of the department, through the President, to advise the House that it is incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not concur at all in the views of my friend from Texas. I notice in a captious press it is very often being stated now that the legislative department of the Government is being absorbed by the executive part of the Government. I believe in that old school of philosophy that the three departments of the Government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial—should be separate and apart; but I do not think this House has any more right to direct the executive department of the Government what to do except by law——

Mr. GARNER. This makes it law——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A law requires the concurrence of the Senate and the President. I do not think this House has any more right to direct the Executive than the Executive has to direct the legislative department what to do.

Mr. PAYNE. But he is doing it.

Mr. LANGLEY. Compelling us to stay here, for instance. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the gentleman from New York will concur in my view.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There may be a very good reason why this particular resolution should contain the expression referred to by the gentleman from Alabama, because it calls on the Secretary of the Treasury to state whether any litigation has been commenced against a corporation, and if so, what action has been taken by the Treasury Department. If litigation be pending, perhaps it might be unwise or incompatible with the public interest to have that disclosed; but outside of such a situation I think there should be no misunderstanding, not only as to the right but the duty of this House to compel executive departments to furnish information when it seems necessary for the transaction of the public business; and, moreover, the Treasury Department is one of the executive departments which by the law creating it is required to submit its reports not to the President, but to the Congress direct.

It may be sound public policy not to insist upon certain information in this particular resolution, if there be litigation pending, regardless of the effect it might have upon the public interest; but I think my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will agree that we ought to maintain and insist upon the prerogatives of the House. I recall an occasion when one of the bodies of Congress called upon the Commissioner of Corporations in a recent administration to furnish certain information, and because the law provided that certain records should be transmitted by the Commissioner of Corporations to the President, who could withhold them, as soon as the resolution was adopted that information was sent to the White House and the President declined to furnish it to the branch of the legislature requesting it—not, in my opinion, because any good public purpose was served by that action, but in order to prevent certain disclosures being made that might have been detrimental to the political welfare of the party then in power.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Alabama will yield for a moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. On several occasions when this matter has arisen, both in the House and in the Senate, each body has stricken out of resolutions the words "if not incompatible with the public interest," because both Houses maintained the authority to direct the head of the department to send the information. That is an old, old matter.

So far as this resolution is concerned I have no objection to the amendment, but I would not want it to be taken——

Mr. GARNER. As a precedent.

Mr. MANN. I would not want it to be understood that all the Members of the House agree that those words should be inserted in all resolutions of inquiry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to that. The resolution was referred to the committee of which I am chairman, and I have not had opportunity to talk with the Secretary of the Treasury about it. I think it is subject to a point of order, which I have reserved, but I am perfectly willing that the gentleman may get the information if he is willing to amend his resolution so that if the Secretary determines it is not compatible with the public interest he will not have to send it down.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be amended by incorporating the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the resolution be amended by inserting the words "if not incompatible with the public interest."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska that, in line 9 in the phrase "subsidy bonds," the word "subsidy" being used as an adjective, I presume it necessarily calls for an opinion on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, and would therefore destroy the privileged character of the resolution. Now, I have no objection to the information which the gentleman seeks being furnished, but it seems to me that he ought to strike out the word "subsidy."

Mr. BARTON. The gentleman knows, and I know, that they were subsidy bonds. They were issued to railroads at that time, and generally written and conceded in that way. I have no objection to striking out the qualifying word. It was meant merely as a descriptive word. What I want is information as to the issue of bonds by the United States Government, and how many. I have no objection at all to making that change, and I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "subsidy."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON] to insert after the word "directed," in line 1, the words "if not incompatible with the public interest"?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now the gentleman can make the other request.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "subsidy" in line 9.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to strike out the word "subsidy" in line 9. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from further consideration of House resolution 295 and pass the same.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GILLETT. I rise to address the House. I think the previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I——

Mr. GILLETT. I just wish a moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. All right. I have the floor, and I will yield to the gentleman. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GILLETT. About two minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts two minutes.

Mr. GILLETT. My attention was caught by what the gentleman from Alabama said, that he believed in the independence of the executive and legislative branches of the Government. I quite agree with him, and I think our independence has suffered under this administration; and it brought to my mind two instances in this Congress in which the gentleman from Alabama brought the influence of the President to bear upon this House. One was when the resolution was up which contemplated intervention in Mexico. I remember the gentleman from Alabama used as his argument for adopting that resolution that the President desired it.

I remember another instance last fall, when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who disclaims the purpose of having the Executive influence legislative action as his reason for the House not adjourning, but continuing in session constantly, made the argument that the President of the United States desired it—purely a legislative action, an action which we ought to be able, it seems to me, to decide for ourselves. But the gentleman from Alabama, who now disclaims any desire or opinion that the Executive ought to influence the legislative branch of the Government in these two instances, gave the wish of the Executive as his reason for urging upon the House certain action. I cite these instances not with any purpose of reflecting upon the gentleman from Alabama, the very able and successful leader of the House, but as illustrating the encroaching influence of the Executive on the legislation in this administration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I do not recall the second instance to which the gentleman refers. I do not know whether he is indulging in a real recollection of the fact or whether he is confusing me with somebody else.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the RECORD will confirm me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no recollection as to that; but as to the other instance, when the resolution was before the House authorizing the President of the United States to move troops into a foreign country, I did state that this House should uphold the hands of the Executive, and I am willing to stand by that at any time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. But the gentleman went much further than that. He stated that his reason was that the President wished it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. GILLETT. I think the RECORD will bear me out in that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman does me an injustice.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not wish to do that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not think that after serving for 20 years in the House with the gentleman from Massachusetts he would accuse me at this late date of having to think through somebody else's intellect. I did say, however, as one of the reasons why the resolution should be adopted that the House was not informed as to the facts in Mexico; that it was impossible for the House to be informed as to the facts in Mexico; that we were in a foreign complication, where our men were being shot down in a foreign country, and there was no reason in the world, and there is not now, why we should not uphold the hands of the Executive under such circumstances.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not now.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not yield. There is no reason why we should not uphold the hands of the Executive. It is one of those cases where we can not have parties, where each branch of the Government must stand up behind the Executive; but I do say that, when it comes down to merely legislative matters, I believe in respecting the authority of the Executive within the sphere fixed for it by the Constitution [applause] as much as I desire the Executive to respect the authority of the legislative branch of the Government within the scope and line fixed for it by the Constitution. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on House bill 11745. I was under the impression that I had obtained that consent on yesterday, but I find on looking at the RECORD that I did not get in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from California upon what subject he desires to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. RAKER. On House bill 11745, the bill to provide for a certificate of title of homestead entry by a female American citizen who has intermarried with an alien, which passed the House yesterday.

Mr. MANN. That bill has passed the House. What does the gentleman want to insert in the RECORD now?

Mr. RAKER. I thought I had obtained consent yesterday, but on reading the RECORD I find that it does not appear.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not obtain the consent.

Mr. RAKER. I evidently did not get it as I intended.

Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman did not make the request. What does the gentleman want to insert in the RECORD on a bill that has already passed by unanimous consent—a long speech?

Mr. RAKER. No; I want to put in about 400 words on the subject.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know what the gentleman wants to put in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman submit his remarks to the gentleman from Illinois for examination in advance.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to insert some of his own remarks, he should be able to tell us what they are.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the report on the bill prepared by myself at the direction of the committee simply permitted those who have married foreigners to obtain title to land where they had already filed before the enactment of this bill. I have been, and am now, unalterably opposed to making it a general law that American women should marry those who are not citizens of the United States and have the right thereafter to obtain a homestead.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, for five days, on account of ill health.

To Mr. L'ENGLE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment was reported before the committee rose when the bill was last under consideration.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent was obtained on the last day when this bill was under consideration that amendment 139, known as the Mississippi-Choctaw amendment, should be considered before the other amendments were considered.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment was reported to the committee before the committee rose at the last meeting, and is now before the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have moved to disagree to all of the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, that motion is not now in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is not now time to move for a conference. The gentleman now moves to disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the Chair stated that this amendment 139 was read before the committee rose on the last day when the bill was under consideration. I think the Chair is in error. The first amendment was the amendment that was read when the committee rose, as I recall, and under the special order amendment 139 is now in order, but has not been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call to the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota that he is mistaken as to the fact. The Clerk stands for the statement made by the Chair that it was amendment 139 which was read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Chair is correct; it was read.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question now before the committee is the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a preferential motion, to move to concur in Senate amendment numbered 139.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes a preferential motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CARTER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER. When the time is fixed for debate, which can be done by unanimous consent upon this amendment, I assume that the gentleman in charge of the bill will open and close debate, will he not?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the custom in the committee.

Mr. MANN. This is under the five-minute rule; nobody has time.

Mr. CARTER. I said if there was an agreement as to time.

Mr. MANN. That would depend upon what the agreement was.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to make an agreement with the gentleman from Mississippi as to what time should be consumed. I would like to know what time he will desire?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say we are willing to make any agreement. I should judge an hour on a side ought to be sufficient—half an hour on a side.

Mr. MANN. I suggest we want more time over here; we want more than half an hour on this side.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Mississippi has moved to disagree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Including this one.

Mr. MANN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. HARRISON. My inquiry was, if that motion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Texas to make the motion to disagree to the Senate amendment. The gentleman from Mississippi made a preferential motion to concur. That is the parliamentary status before the committee at this time. Has the gentleman from Texas a request to make in regard to the disposition of time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We would want on this side, I understand, two hours.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman means for his motion to disagree to the Senate amendments?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One hour to be used by the majority and one hour by the minority.

Mr. HARRISON. That is agreeable to me if it is agreeable to the gentleman over there.

Mr. MANN. We want about an hour on this side.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say out of whatever time I get I will yield to gentlemen over there.

Mr. MANN. We might not want it from the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will change my request and make it one hour to be controlled by myself, one hour by the gentleman from Mississippi, and one hour by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, this is——

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the question. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed at the end of three hours, one hour to be controlled by himself, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and one hour by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a simple proposition; it is whether or not we want to disagree to the Senate amendment or concur in the amendment. There are no three sides to the proposition, and I think the time ought to be distributed equally as to the proponents of this particular proposition and the opponents of it, and I shall have to object to the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That restores the five-minute rule.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask unanimous consent to make a request?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield for that purpose only.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this question be limited to two hours and a half—one hour and a quarter to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas and an hour and a quarter by myself.

Mr. CARTER. Where does the request of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from South Dakota come in?

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman from Mississippi thinks there is no minority side. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state the request. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that all debate on this pending amendment be closed in two and a half hours—one half the time to be controlled by the chairman of the committee and one half by himself. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will have to object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that time for debate on this amendment be limited to 2 hours—40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi, 40 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], and 40 minutes by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate on this pending amendment be closed in 2 hours—40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the committee, 40 minutes by the gentleman from Mississippi, and 40 minutes by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to say I do not know what side the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is on. It may be——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think, in fairness to the gentleman from Mississippi, that I ought to state that I do not favor the motion to recede and concur, but I do favor the motion made by the gentleman from Texas to disagree to the amendments of the Senate. I think it is only fair to make that statement.

Mr. HARRISON. That is giving them a double amount of time, and there are some gentlemen on this side who want to argue for my motion, and therefore may I ask the gentleman if he will not amend his motion to give 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. That will be an equal amount of time all around.

Mr. CARTER. If it will satisfy the gentlemen of the minority, I will change my request to this, Mr. Chairman: That there be 2 hours debate—40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], 40 minutes by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], 30 minutes by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], and 10 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CARTER. I will make it 20 minutes each.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Under the five-minute rule applying to this amendment there would be five minutes' debate on each side. The gentlemen ought to come to some conclusion pretty soon, or else the rule will be invoked.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas may have been at the ball game the other day when we had a gentlemen's agreement on this bill.

Mr. GARNER. I may have been, but I was in the company of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. We made it before we went.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the motion that I control 30 minutes, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] control 30 minutes, and that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] control 30 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. And the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] also to control 30 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will add that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] have 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent, in lieu of the other request, that debate on this amendment be limited to 2 hours—30 minutes to be controlled by himself, 30 minutes by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], 30 minutes by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I make the suggestion to the gentleman from Texas that he make it 40 minutes in place of 30 minutes in each case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That will extend the time 40 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is a wild amendment that went on in the Senate without the consideration of either branch of Congress, but I am not sure that we ought to have such time as is being apportioned to it. If we are going into it extensively, it will require some time; but I do not know that this amendment should be singled out and run over every other amendment that is of more importance, and unless the chairman feels keenly about it, I will object myself.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that it will be better to agree to 40 minutes on a side, as has been suggested, rather than to run under the five-minute rule. My experience in this House has been that when we run under the five-minute rule we run over the time that should be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas modify his request?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas modifies his request by asking unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be limited to 2 hours and 40 minutes—40 minutes to be controlled by himself, 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], 40 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], and 40 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is recognized.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POST].

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman, the Senate amendment, known as the "Williams amendment," provides that the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, whose names do not appear on the approved rolls of the Choctaws of Oklahoma, and until such Mississippi Choctaws as are found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

This proviso, if adopted, will render nugatory the provisions to pay to the Choctaws $100 per capita until another settlement of the right of the Mississippi Choctaws to be enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation. This provision should be stricken from the pending measure. The question of the right of the Mississippi Choctaws to be enrolled as a member of the Choctaw Nation has been settled time and time again, not only by the Choctaw Nation itself but by repeated acts of Congress and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. The question involves, however, the right of what is known as Mississippi Choctaws to the privileges of a citizen of the Choctaw Nation. This right is ultimately founded upon the treaties between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, of October 18, 1820, and September 27, 1830.

In 1820 the United States entered into an agreement with the Choctaw Nation, then domiciled principally in the State of Mississippi, by which it acquired lands of that nation, some 4,000,000 acres, and ceded to the Choctaw Nation a large body of land bounded by the Arkansas and Red Rivers and the one hundredth meridian, constituting the present domain of that nation in the State of Oklahoma.

The undoubted purposes of this treaty are stated in the preamble. It was to induce that class of Choctaws who made their living by hunting, and who were not willing to work, to collect and settle together in the far West upon hunting grounds; it was also desired by the United States that the State of Mississippi should obtain a part of the lands then belonging to the Choctaw Nation. In the next decade very few of these Indians removed to their new home in the West, but elected to remain upon their old hunting grounds. Instinctively they were unwilling to give up the land they occupied for many years and abandon the graves of their ancestors, to remove to the lands west of the Mississippi, as provided by the terms of the treaty of 1820.

This reluctance on the part of the Indians resulted in further efforts on the part of the Government officials to induce the Indians to move west and culminated in the treaty of September 27, 1830. By this treaty the Indians gained nothing, but ceded to the United States about 10,000,000 acres of land in the State of Mississippi. The Indians were induced to make this concession to the Government by a provision in the treaty which allowed them to elect whether they would remain in Mississippi or remove west. Following the making of the agreement of September 27, 1830, a large number of Choctaws were transferred to the country west of the Mississippi and thereafter constituted the Choctaw Nation.

The fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 provides:

> Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of this treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him over 10 years of age, and a quarter section to such child as may be under 10 years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon such lands, intending to become citizens of the States, for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue; said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

It will be noticed that to the head of each family desiring to remain and become a citizen of the States were to be allotted a section of land, a half section for each child over 10 years of age, and a quarter section to each child under 10 years of age; and that such person shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove to the Choctaw Nation west should not be entitled to any of the Choctaw annuity.

This Choctaw annuity amounted to about $20,000 a year and was insignificant. Under this section of the treaty a large number gave notice of their intention to remain and become citizens of the State of Mississippi, although a very limited number—143—ever received patents for their land.

In the case of Choctaw Nation v. The United States (119 U. S., 1) it is stated that 1,346 Choctaw heads of families complied with or attempted to comply with provisions of the treaty, and that as late as 1838, 5,000 Choctaws resided in the State of Mississippi. Shortly after the ratification the Office of Indian Affairs intrusted the enrollment of the Indians who might desire to take advantage of the provisions of article 14 to the local Indian agent, one Col. William Ward. His conduct was wholly unsatisfactory, both to the Government and to the Indians.

The official reports show he was oftentimes intoxicated when the Indians applied to him for reservations; that he was harsh and abusive in his treatment of them; and that after making some few registrations he bluntly refused to receive any more applications and drove the Indians from his presence. To the conduct of this officer of the Government is attributed the small number of names that appear upon the register of those who desired to take up reservations, and has been the cause of contention lasting over the period of about 84 years.

On March 3, 1837, Congress passed an act appointing a commission to determine those Mississippi Choctaws who had been omitted from the registration and had been deprived of their reservations under article 14.

By the act of August 23, 1842, scrip was issued to those persons found entitled by these commissions in lieu of the land which should have been allotted to them under article 14 of the treaty of 1830. Only one-half of this scrip was delivered at that time, but was delivered to those residing east of the Mississippi River; the other one-half was held until such time as the scripees should remove to the lands west of the Mississippi. This scrip gave the applicants the right to enter public lands in the States of Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana in equal quantity to the amount of land the holder would have been entitled to under the fourteenth article.

The idea of retaining one-half of this land until the holder should remove west of the Mississippi River must have been with a view to carrying out the intention of the Government to require these Choctaws to eventually remove west of the Mississippi to the Choctaw Nation. However, by act of Congress of March 3, 1845, it was provided that this remaining one-half should be capitalized at $1.25 per acre, and the accrued interest thereon, at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, should be paid to the Indians or their representatives. Nothing was done, however, until the act of July 21, 1852, when it was provided that the amount yet due these Indians in scrip under the original act should be paid to them in money, and the sum of $872,000 was appropriated for that purpose. The greater portion of this money was paid out through the Office of Indian Affairs to the persons entitled to it as found by the awards made by the commission appointed under the act of 1842.

During the strenuous times immediately preceding the Civil War, and until near the close of the century, the affairs of these Indians seemed to have invoked very little attention from the National Government. In the meantime, the Choctaw Nation always invited their brethren from the East to become citizens of the nation, and from the Civil War there was a continuous emigration of small parties from Mississippi and Louisiana to the Indian Territory. A great many of the emigrants were admitted to full rights and privileges of citizenship by the Choctaw Nation during these years. The Choctaw Nation was always liberal in this respect, and in many instances sent emissaries east to induce the Mississippi Choctaws to remove west and become citizens of the nation, in several instances appropriating money for their removal. By the early efforts of the United States and the subsequent efforts of the Choctaw Nation the great bulk of the Choctaw Indians were induced to and did remove to their lands in Oklahoma and were finally enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation. However, some fifteen hundred or two thousand yet remain east of the Mississippi, in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana. Some of them are well educated and highly civilized and rank among the best and most worthy citizens of those States. The great majority, however, have failed to adopt civilization, live a sort of nomadic life, have never yet learned to speak the English language, and refuse to become affiliated with those among whom they live, so that their condition is described to be poverty stricken and most deplorable. Most of those who received their reservations have been subject to the wily intrigues of the white man and deprived of their patrimony. Most of those who were paid in scrip were imposed upon by their more civilized brethren and were defrauded or cheated out of the value of their certificates. That those remaining in this deplorable situation in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana are in need of and deserve the protection of the United States Government, their trustee, is without question; but this does not prove that they are entitled to citizenship in the Choctaw Nation. Their rights in this respect depend entirely upon their standing before the law. That they are poor and needy proves nothing; that their rights have been infringed upon by those among whom they have chosen to live concludes nothing. We have the poor with us always; we have the inferior everywhere governed by the superior. What, then, is the standing of these Mississippi Choctaws in the eye of the law? Under the treaty of 1830 it was open to individuals of the Choctaw Nation to do one of two things—either to move west to the Choctaw lands, domicile, remain, and become a citizen of the Choctaw Nation, or remain in the State of Mississippi and become a citizen of that sovereign State.

Since 1830 what has been the status of the Indian remaining in the State of Mississippi? To what jurisdiction has he been a subject? By the very terms of the treaty of 1830, if he remained he was to become a citizen of the State of Mississippi; by his remaining in that State, designating his intention to receive his reservation, his receipt of script, and subsequently of money, certainly fixed his right as to citizenship. The mere fact of his remaining in Mississippi and the Government exercising no control over him would make him amenable to the laws of the State of Mississippi; he would be subject to the civil and criminal courts of the State; if he acquired property, that property would be the subject of taxation. In that situation he has remained to this day. Under the treaty of 1830, notwithstanding the fact that he might elect by its terms to become a citizen of the State of Mississippi, yet by the very terms of that treaty he had a right to renounce his allegiance to the State of Mississippi, remove to Oklahoma, fix his abode upon the lands of the Choctaw Nation, and become one of its members. The fact of his renunciation to no longer remain a citizen of the State of Mississippi was not sufficient to transfer his allegiance from that State to the Choctaw Nation. It required the fact of removal to lands of the nation and his intention to remain and dwell there. In no other way could he acquire the rights of a citizen and enjoy its benefits and privileges.

I call attention to the fact that no time limitation was placed upon a Choctaw Indian by the treaty limiting his right of removal to the Choctaw Nation west. His right to elect to remove west and enjoy the privileges and immunities of a Choctaw citizen in the government and property of that nation was not limited to 10, 20, or any number of years. But is such a right perpetual? Rather did not the Indian fix his own status? Could he live out of the territory of the Choctaw Nation, evade the obligations and burdens of citizenship while that nation was growing and progressing beyond the dreams of the most avaricious, and at the same time enjoy the benefits of the funds and common property of the nation by merely removing and declaring his intention to become a citizen? In 1830 the country west of the Mississippi was wholly undeveloped, and no one dreamed of the fertility and resources of that vast territory ceded by the United States to the Choctaw Nation. At the time there can be little doubt that the lands occupied by the Mississippi Choctaws in the State of Mississippi were much more desirable and valuable than those acquired by the nation in the far West. In that early day the methods of transportation were most meager, and to remove from Mississippi was most difficult and dangerous and an extremely arduous task.

Is it not reasonable to suppose that the Government intended that those Indians desiring to remove to the far West should do so within a reasonable time, and that those that did not do so within a reasonable time should be considered to have elected to renounce their allegiance to the Choctaw Nation and become citizens of the State of Mississippi?

In the third article of the treaty the Choctaws agreed to remove all their people within three years; and by article 14 those who should decide to remain and become citizens of the State of Mississippi, and in the event, because of the intolerance and persecution of the whites, which they themselves had so bitterly experienced, or for any other reason, they might become dissatisfied with their altered condition and their new citizenship, and desire to follow them to their new home, and thereafter exercise with them in their own country the privileges of citizenship, they could do so; but this right was certainly not to exist for all time. The amount and tenure of the estate conveyed by the United States to the Choctaw Nation in pursuance of the treaty of 1830 has some bearing upon this question. The tract of country west of the Mississippi was conveyed by the President March 23, 1842, and by this conveyance there was granted to the Choctaw Nation all the rights, privileges, immunities, appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, as intended to be conveyed to them and their descendants, to inure to them, as long as they exist as a nation and live upon it, liable to no transfer of alienations, except to the United States or with their consent. The instrument conveying in fee simple contained two conditions for its enjoyment; that is, a nation must exist as a nation, and must live upon the land as a nation. Any Choctaw Indian removing from Mississippi in 1831, 1832, or 1833, and who might live upon this land for 50 years, if he would remove from it would forfeit his rights to the immunities and privileges of the national estate. The right of alienation was limited. The nation could not transfer the land except to the United States or with the consent of the United States; notwithstanding the fact that the grant purported to be in fee simple, yet the land could not be alienated without the consent of the Government. In other words, the United States held a trusteeship over the property and estate of the Choctaw Nation which they had conveyed to it. The power then rested in the United States to determine the existence of the Choctaw Nation as a tribal government. No one would contend that after tribal relations in the tract of country west of the Mississippi had been dissolved the right of removal still exists.

In the very nature of things it was evident that in the evolution of things the Choctaw Nation would cease to exist as such. This fact no doubt led to the provision prohibiting alienation of the Choctaw land except to the United States or with their consent. It is apparent from these considerations that the right of removal, conferred by the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, was limited. By remaining in the State of Mississippi the Indian thereby renounced his citizenship in the Choctaw Nation and became a citizen of the State of Mississippi. If afterwards he desired to enjoy the benefits of the common property of the Choctaw Nation it was incumbent upon him to renounce his citizenship of the State of Mississippi and remove to the Choctaw country west of the Mississippi. In no other way would he be entitled to the rights and immunities of the Choctaw Nation.

By the pending measure it is intended to open up the rolls of the Choctaw Nation and permit the Indians still remaining in Mississippi and adjoining States, after the lapse of 84 years, to receive the benefits of the vast estate in lands yet unallotted and held in trust by the United States for the Choctaw Nation after the tribal relations have ceased to exist. There is no equity or justice or moral or legal right in such a contention. Congress has several times attempted to determine the rule which should be applied to the Mississippi Choctaws, claiming under the provisions of article 14 of the treaty of 1830.

By the act of June 10, 1896, a commission was authorized to hear and determine the application of all persons who might apply to them for citizenship in any of the said nations. An appeal was provided from the finding of this commission to the United States court of the Indian Territory. Growing out of the findings of this commission we have the decision of Jack Amos et al. against Choctaw Nation, in which the United States court of the Indian Territory held that the Mississippi Choctaw Indians were not entitled to citizenship in the Choctaw

Nation or to participate in the distribution of tribal property unless they moved and took up their residence in the boundaries of said nation.

By the act of June 7, 1897, a commission was appointed to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes and report to Congress whether the Mississippi Choctaws under their treaties are entitled to all the rights of the Choctaw citizenship. This commission submitted a report to Congress in which it is said:

It follows, therefore, from this reasoning, as well as from the historical review already recited, that the nature of the title itself, as well as all stipulations concerning it in the treaties between the United States and the Choctaw Nation, that to avail himself of the "privileges of a Choctaw citizen" any person claiming to be a descendant of those Choctaws who were provided for in the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 must first show the fact that he is such descendant and has in good faith joined his brethren in the Territory with the intent to become one of the citizens of the nation. Having done so, such person has a right to be enrolled as a Choctaw citizen and to claim all the privileges of such a citizen, except to a share in the annuities. And that otherwise he can not claim as a right the "privileges of a Choctaw citizen."

Under the act of June 28, 1898, commonly known as the Curtis Act, the commission was directed to determine the identity of the Mississippi Choctaws who claim rights under the treaty of 1830. This act provides also that no person should be enrolled as entitled to an allotment in any of the five tribes unless he had in good faith removed to and settled with the nation in which he claims citizenship on or before the date of the approval of the act. Under this law a list was made up of Indians residing in Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana of 1,923 claiming rights under the treaty of 1830. This was not a roll of citizenship, but merely a roster to show who of those remained in Mississippi claimed under the treaty of 1830.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Congress had at various times from 1830 up to the close of the century appropriated money for the purpose of removing the Mississippi Choctaws to the lands of the Choctaw Nation west of the Mississippi, and that the Choctaw Nation in the Indian Territory had from time to time provided for the transportation of these Indians to its reservation. Congress again, by act of May 31, 1900, provided that any Mississippi Choctaw duly identified as such by the United States Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes shall have the right at any time prior to the approval of the final rolls of the Chickasaws and Choctaws by the Secretary of the Interior to make settlement within the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and upon proof of the fact of bona fide settlement may be enrolled by the United States commission and entitled to allotment. Afterwards it was found that many of these Choctaw Indians residing in Mississippi were full blood, and through ignorance and lack of information as to their family history were unable to prove that they were descendants of the persons who had complied or attempted to comply with article 14 of the treaty of 1830. A rule of evidence was then established that all full-blood Choctaw Indians should be deemed to be Mississippi Choctaws and entitled to the benefits of the article. A commission found that 2,534 under this provision were entitled to enroll, providing such persons would remove to the Indian Territory within six months after the notice of their identification. On March 3, 1903, Congress appropriated $20,000 to assist these identified full bloods in their removal who did not have the means or inclination to remove themselves.

The Choctaw government in the Indian Territory made repeated efforts to secure the removal of the Mississippi Choctaws to the Choctaw country, the last effort in this direction occurring in 1891, when it appropriated money for the purpose of paying the expenses of certain Choctaw families and removing a number of families to the Indian Territory. The work of enrolling these Indians commenced in 1896, and was to close March 25, 1903, but Congress extended the time of closing the rolls to March 4, 1907, thus giving to the Mississippi Choctaws a period of 11 years after the enrollment work commenced within which to prove their claims and make settlement within the Choctaw country. Eleven years of actual agitation and enrollment was certainly ample time in which the Mississippi Choctaw, if he desired, should have proved his claim and made his removal. Every agreement made with these Indians, every act of Congress relating to them, and every act of the Choctaw Nation made residence in the tribe a prerequisite to citizenship. The time during which the rolls were in preparation extended over a period of 11 years, and it was provided that no person whose name does not appear upon the roll as herein provided shall be entitled in any manner to participate in the common property of the Choctaw Tribe. Sentimentalists may deplore the condition of these Indians, but their condition is no more deplorable than that of many Indians in various States. These Indians have not seen proper to take advantage of the provisions that were made for them relative to the right of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation. They remained in an isolated state, huddled together in small bands, and by reason of long separation from the Indians of the West became a class by themselves. They neglected and refused, after repeated efforts on the part of the United States, exerted through many years, and on the part of the Oklahoma Choctaw Tribe, to join their brethren who breasted a wilderness and suffered untold hardships in conquering that wilderness to make rich and populous the State of Oklahoma. To compel the Choctaw Nation to share the comparatively small reward of their labor and suffering with the Mississippi Indians, who took no interest in the struggle and hardships of their brethren in conquering the wilderness and overcoming untold hardships, and who were not even willing to remove after the wilderness was subdued, and who were unwilling to share in the burdens of the tribal government, is neither morally nor legally right. There should be an end to all things.

Seventy-seven years since the time for removal and residence before the close of the rolls was certainly ample. To confer upon a Mississippi Indian the right of citizenship five years after the rolls have been closed and permit him to participate in the distribution of the lands and funds belonging to the Choctaw Nation in common and held by the Government of the United States in trust would certainly be a monstrous proposition. In view of the fact that many opportunities were afforded him for removal and his right to gain his citizenship in the Choctaw Nation, it is now proposed to confer upon him these rights without the fact of removal and residence. Such a proposition is preposterous. If there were any wrongs done the Choctaw Indians under the treaty of 1830, such wrongs were not committed by those who meekly submitted to the demands of the United States Government and braved the hardships of frontier life and carved out a national domain from the wilderness in the far West; if wrongs were committed against these eastern Choctaws, they were not done by one Indian against another, but were done by the Government of the United States through its officers, and if these Indians are entitled to relief, such relief should come from the United States.

There is another view to be taken of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. The right of removal and the right of citizenship after removal was a personal right. The treaty dealt exclusively with Indians then in being, the heads of families and their children. Not one word is said in the treaty of their descendants. The identical Choctaws then in being, who desired to remain in the States and become citizens of such States, were given an allotment—to the head of each family, 640 acres; to all children over 10 years of age, 320 acres; and to all children under 10 years of age, 160 acres. This would include all Indians in being at the time of the execution of the agreement, and contemplated all that should be received by such Indians who desired to remain in the States except their right of removing and becoming citizens of the Choctaw Nation in their country in the West. It is doubtful if any of the beneficiaries of the fourteenth article of this treaty are still living, but it is proposed to confer upon their remote descendants the full rights of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation, carrying with it the right to participate in its lands and moneys. Such a proposition is unwarranted.

As a member of the subcommittee investigating this identical question and hearing only one side of the question presented—that of the proponents—I have looked in vain to find any reason or justification for what is here asked for. These Indians have refused to affiliate with those among whom they have lived; many of them can not understand the English language. Living in isolation, huddled together in the direst poverty, they have been wholly neglected in education and religion, and their pitiable condition readily appeals to our sympathy. But these are conditions for the philanthropist, and wrongs are never righted by the perpetration of other wrongs.

In view of this history, these undisputed facts and the inevitable conclusion to be drawn from them, I was for a long time at a loss to understand the urgency with which these claims are presented, but am now no longer in the dark. A very enterprising firm of attorneys located in St. Louis, Mo., has solved the mystery. This firm of attorneys, through its agents and various ramifications, has searched the country with a fine-tooth comb in every State where there are persons of Indian blood, and in many States wholly devoid of Indians, and have by some means or other discovered that there are more than 13,000 persons in the United States tainted with Choctaw blood who have not been enrolled as members of the Choctaw Nation. This energetic firm of attorneys have been very persistent in pressing the claims of the Choctaw Indians, their affiliated whites and blacks and others, too numerous to mention, in whose veins no one but themselves ever suspected that a drop of Indian blood flowed. They have persistently been bombarding the Halls of Congress, seeking to open the rolls of the Choctaw Nation, closed March 4, 1907. They are evidently proceeding upon the theory that anything goes in this day and generation when the thought of easy money presents itself. They have proceeded so far upon their easy-money proposition as to incorporate their enterprise under the laws of the State of Texas. To give this enterprise the appearance of respectability, they fixed the capital stock at $100,000, and gave it the euphonious name of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. The company was to furnish $25,000 cash for the purpose of providing a fund to carry on the business of the corporation, the firm of Crews & Cantwell to retain 40 per cent of the stock, the other stockholders paying $25,000 for the 60 per cent. Crews & Cantwell transferred to the corporation some twelve or thirteen thousand alleged contracts with Choctaw claimants which they had procured from every niche and corner of the country. These contracts are a revelation in themselves. One of the provisions of the contracts taken by the attorneys representing the so-called Mississippi Choctaws provides:

> That in consideration of the premises, the party of the first part contract and agrees to pay and assign, transfer, and convey to the parties of the second part 30 per cent of all sums of money, lands, and property that may be received of the right claimed.

This is certainly illuminating. The Indians assign, transfer, and convey to the attorneys 30 per cent not only of money that might be recovered, but convey 30 per cent of the lands that may be involved in a final distribution. One of the attorneys interested in the project estimated the value of a share of an individual Indian reduced to a cash basis to be about $3,000. Ten thousand such claims would amount to $30 000,000; a contingent fee upon this per cent would be $9,000,000, an insignificant attorney fee. The fee of $750,000 received by Mansfield, Murray & Cornish sinks into utter insignificance. What tremendous benefits are to be received by the stockholders of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. for the amount invested! For Congress to lend assistance to this gigantic, nefarious scheme would be to stultify itself. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute in which to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POST] a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that the dispute is between the enrolled Choctaw Indians of Oklahoma and the Choctaw Indians of Mississippi?

Mr. POST. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. And is it your opinion that the Indians of Mississippi ought not to participate in this fund, because they did not remove there?

Mr. POST. I think they are undoubtedly limited to the terms of the agreement made by the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman for his answer.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have 40 minutes, and I think it will be consumed in one speech, and therefore I would like to put it off until later.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] use some of his time now?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I assumed that the side over there would use some time first.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have used 10 minutes in favor of my motion.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] here?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Dakota does not desire to use time right now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. I stated to the gentleman that probably the time allotted to me would be taken up by one speech, and I would like to put it off to the last. I made the motion, and I think I should have that right.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has a preferential motion pending, and certainly some one on that side ought to use time. I suppose it is not intended that one gentleman will use an hour and twenty minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we have used 11 minutes on my side.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOWARD). The time is running.

Mr. MANN. The time is not running, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POST] puts his reason for this amendment to be voted out of this bill on the proposition that the Choctaws of Mississippi remained in that State and did not go to the territory or to the reservation set aside for them. Every man who is familiar with the Dancing Rabbit treaty and with the whole transaction, and with the conduct of Mr. Ward, the Government's agent, who imposed upon the credulity of the Mississippi Choctaw Indians, knows in his heart that they have never received a square deal from the Federal Government. The Mississippi Choctaws were the Indians who stood by the white man. They marched with old Andrew Jackson down to New Orleans. They stood up in blood and fought for the American flag, and when the gentlemen from Oklahoma want to take all of this money and give it to the Indians in that territory they propose to do an inequitable and dishonorable act to the Choctaws of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. QUIN. No; I can not yield to you, sir. You know the RECORD bears me out.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to correct the gentleman.

Mr. QUIN. You know that those Indians in the State of Mississippi have been cheated out of their rights. You know that those $3,000,000 that you Oklahomans are endeavoring to distribute now among the Indians of that territory should be held intact until the Choctaws and their descendants of the State of Mississippi have been enrolled. They are entitled to receive their part of it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not time to yield.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman ought not to make misstatements.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. QUIN. I want to say that the fight of these Mississippi Choctaws has just now started. You can never have that money distributed among the Oklahoma Indians until you give to the Mississippi Choctaws and the Louisiana Choctaws their rights under the law. They have never yet had one penny. Regardless of that, you stand upon technicalities and require certain writings and acknowledgments from the Mississippi Choctaws yonder, who could neither read nor write. Do you expect them to read and write just like all the readers and writers of that time? You understand the conditions that existed there. The facts have been fully set out, and still you want to hold those Choctaws off the roll.

They are all over that country. They know what is going on, and I believe that those people who live in other States ought to come to the rescue of these poor Choctaws of Mississippi and Louisiana who have not, thus far, been awarded justice by this Government. It is up to the membership of this House to stand by them in good conscience. We do not want any wrong done to the Oklahoma Indians. We simply want right and justice done to the Indians of Mississippi and Louisiana. They are, as I say, all over that country. Representatives of that country receive letters every day pleading and begging to have justice done to the Choctaws of that section, and still you find the fight carried on against us.

You understand from the records here that some attorneys from Oklahoma have been hunting around here like a regular lobby in Washington City endeavoring to fool Congress and fool the people of the United States. I ask you, gentlemen, on this proposition to give justice and right to the helpless, to those who have been held back and deprived of their rights ever since the signing of the Dancing Rabbit treaty down to this good hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not the time to yield. The gentleman knows I have not any time to spare. What little time I have, sir, I propose to put in for my good friends the Choctaws of Mississippi and their descendants. [Applause.] I do not believe you would try to stand up and get all this money for your own country, but I say that these poor people back yonder in Mississippi who have been deprived of their rights should receive justice at your hands, even though you, coming from the State of Oklahoma, can not give justice to those Indians in my State.

Mr. CARTER. Who got the land?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. QUIN. I want to say that your Indians got the land that belonged to my Indians, and you are trying to cheat these Mississippi and Louisiana Indians out of the money that they are entitled to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to use some time?

Mr. CARTER. Not now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman from South Dakota desire to use some?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would prefer to have expressed the views of those who represent the Mississippi end of the controversy.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have used 11 minutes, Mr. Chairman, and if no gentleman wants to speak I think I shall ask that we proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, please notify me when I have proceeded for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is not my purpose at this time to enter into any very exhaustive discussion of the Mississippi Choctaw matter. For a great many reasons I have very pronounced convictions on the subject, having given some years, I might properly say, of study and investigation to it; but personally I do not think this occasion is one where my own views should be exploited or where they would be of any particular value in the consideration of this matter. However, inasmuch as the general question of the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws in and to some property belonging to the Choctaws of the recognized nation in Oklahoma is involved, it may be well to make one or two general statements that to my mind are quite convincing and conclusive.

There is a great deal of dust raised whenever the Mississippi Choctaw matter is mentioned. A great many immaterial, collateral, and, to my mind, unimportant facts are presented, which should have no weight or bearing on the matter at all. Starting at the beginning, we find that the Mississippi Choctaws, and all the Choctaws, in fact, lived in the State of Mississippi. By two treaties, that of 1820 and that of 1830, they yielded to the constant pressure of the whites in the effort to get them out and away from the land they held and owned. For many, many months they completely resisted every importunity, every urging known to the skilled agents of the United States Government, to get them to consent to remove west of the Mississippi, until it was agreed that article 14 of the treaty should be written.

That article 14 has been the subject of all the controversy since, and it is one that we should well look to at the beginning when we start a consideration of the question. That article contemplates, plainly and squarely, that not all of the Mississippi Choctaws shall move west. Yea, more; it contemplates that the major part of them shall not remove west, but shall remain in the State of Mississippi on their reservation. Furthermore, it contemplates, whether they move west or not, that they shall still be citizens of the Choctaw Nation. It says so specifically, in pointed terms.

It was only after that paragraph was written that the Indians signed and consented to the treaty. Then the next step is without question. Those who desired to remain in Mississippi could do so by indicating their desire. To whom was that desire to be indicated? To the agent of the Government. All the world knows that the man who represented the United States Government for that work at that place was the most consummate, heartless, merciless, conscienceless scoundrel that ever acted under the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

Now, all the country is not to blame for what he did; but, nevertheless, he did it. This is not hearsay. It is not conjecture. His acts were investigated by the Department of War, of which he was a member. Later on they were investigated by committees of Congress, and the reports were always the same.

Whenever an Indian tried to indicate his desire to remain in Mississippi he was practically prevented and prohibited from doing it. And to tell the story in a word, mighty few of the Mississippi Choctaws within the State, who desired in every way they could to express their preference to remain, were permitted to do so. As a consequence they were thwarted from realizing the benefits of the fourteenth article of the treaty, and that was the part of the treaty the writing of which induced them to sign the whole.

A good many did move west of the Mississippi. All would have been better off if they had removed. They did not know it then. Subsequent treaties were had between the Choctaws and the United States looking to redress for the unquestioned wrongs that were perpetrated upon these Indians. For 80 years nobody has ever stood up and said anything but that mistreatment was given to the Indians at that time.

In 1855 in particular a treaty was made, the object of which was to settle these controversies and to have a proper payment made, as far as it could be made, for the wrongs that had been done.

To my mind that which should concern Congress is whether or not these various steps looking to reparation have been adequate, whether or not they have reached the purpose for which they were taken. The question is not whether a wrong was committed, but whether the reparation has been adequate and complete.

I listened with some degree of interest to the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. POST]. I would have been vastly more interested if he could have had the time to speak fully upon the subject, because I know he has carefully thought out and presented the subject. That feature which struck me particularly was his conclusion that the Choctaws resident in Oklahoma had at various times invited their brethren in Mississippi to come there, and that is true. There is no criticism whatever upon them in that respect. Their attitude was always all right.

Further, it had been agreed that in order to enjoy citizenship in the Choctaw Nation west, and to have a right to participate in their property, it was necessary that the Indians all remove to and live in Oklahoma. But did the gentleman from Ohio or anybody else ever stop to think who made that agreement? Not a man representing the Choctaws in Mississippi made the agreement or had one word to say about it. That was an agreement entered into between the Choctaws of the West and the United States Government, by which it was agreed that the Choctaws living in Mississippi should move west in order that they might be enrolled and become citizens.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. I will in a moment. Let me finish this.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. MILLER. I will in a moment, but not at this point. That would have been all right, too, if we had provided them with the means of removing. Now, we recognized that fact, because an appropriation of $20,000 was made by the Choctaws for the purpose, and they did remove a few hundred of them. But, of course, that sum was totally inadequate. You might just as well tell a newborn babe that he has a gold mine in Alaska if he will go there and take physical possession of it as to have told a Mississippi Choctaw during those times to go to Oklahoma, take a piece of land, and he would become a member of the tribe. They were physically and financially incapable of performing the act.

I understand that that is not true as to all individuals. I am speaking as to the general class, who are now asking for some relief. It is true that some did go. There were various associations organized for the purpose of getting them there. Such Indians have no complaint, because they were properly enrolled.

Mr. POST. I understood the gentleman to state awhile ago that the treaty of 1830 was made between the United States Government and the Choctaws of the West.

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not so state.

Mr. POST. I so understood.

Mr. MILLER. I referred to the treaties subsequent to 1830—in 1855 and 1866.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desired the Chair to notify him when he had occupied 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the Chairman. I desire to proceed for five minutes more.

There is one other thing to which I want to direct the attention of the committee, and I hope the committee will not for a moment imagine that I am trying to make a full presentation of all the intricate facts involved in this situation.

I would like to direct the thought of the membership of the House to those salient features which I think when determined will conclude this entire and eternal controversy.

The treaty of 1855 was designed to settle and end all these difficulties. The Senate had elaborate hearings. Under that treaty they were to sit as a court of arbitration. And after taking into consideration all the wrongs perpetrated upon the Mississippi Choctaws, or the Choctaws as a whole—of course, the only wrongs were upon the Mississippi Choctaws—they thought that about $8,000,000 would be a proper compensation for those wrongs, and they made an order that something over $8,000,000 should be paid to the Choctaws for these wrongs which had been perpetrated, beginning with this Indian agent back in 1830. From the sum of $8,000,000, however, there should be deducted the cost of removing the Choctaws who had gone west, and that sum amounted to about $5,000,000, leaving a net balance of $2,980,000. They actually appropriated $250,000 for this purpose in 1859, and expected to appropriate $250,000 each year thereafter; but the war then broke out, which stopped the proceedings, and nothing further was ever appropriated.

After the war was over the matter was renewed, and away in the eighties we find it again up and active. It would not down. This time it was sent to the Court of Claims to be rehashed from one end to the other.

The conclusion of the Court of Claims was that the Choctaws, by reason of the attitude of agents of our Government, had been defrauded in Mississippi; that wrongs had been committed; but after the great lapse of time that had then occurred it was impossible to arrive at anything like a just measurement of the extent of the fraud and the amount of damage in dollars and cents; and the court said that probably the most reasonable method of settling it was to adopt the award made by the Senate of $2,980,000, and that they did.

Now, to whom was that paid? That was paid to the Mississippi Choctaws west, although it was for the injury done to the Choctaws east.

I was occupied for many weeks trying to find from the records of this Government whether any Choctaws living in Mississippi ever received a penny of this award of $2,980,000. I found that not a dollar was ever paid to a Mississippi Choctaw in Mississippi.

It all went to the Choctaws west, living in the State of Oklahoma. I think it is entirely proper to advise the House what the Choctaw Nation west did with that money. They first said, "We will give 20 per cent to a committee of our own men," and their names are mentioned, whom they thought had been instrumental in getting through legislation or getting through the measure in some way. Twenty per cent of a little more than $3,000,000—because there was interest added to the sum—amounted to $650,000. They said, "We will give 30 per cent to our attorneys." That made up 50 per cent. There remained 50 per cent, or about a million and a half, which was turned over to the fiscal agent of the Choctaws west, who was ROBERT L. OWEN. He was given $900,000 in one sum, $200,000 in another sum, and $338,000, I think is the exact sum, in another sum, as agent for the Choctaws. The Choctaw Nation west appointed a little court of their own, consisting of three men, to try and determine to whom should be paid these sums. I would not take the time of the committee on this occasion to describe the proceedings of that committee, nor the names of those to whom they paid the sums; but I will say, generally, that the method of payment and the way in which the beneficiaries were ascertained does not reflect great credit on the honesty and public spirit and character of the persons handling the fund. I do not say that to reflect on any one individual, because no person whose name I have mentioned was a member of that commission, but I am speaking of the method in handling the fund that was then turned over.

Unquestionably the United States Government at that time recognized its duty to make compensation, to make reparation, by this lump sum, and yet the sum did not go to the individuals who had been most injured. Now, those are the salient facts that you can not get around.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman says "Choctaw Nation west." There was no nation in Mississippi.

Mr. MILLER. That is entirely proper in one sense.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The Indians who lived in Mississippi after the treaty became citizens of Mississippi under the treaties of 1820 and 1830.

Mr. MILLER. It is correct to say that more and more of the Choctaws moved west until the only organized government among the Choctaws was in the nation west.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. And there has been none since the removal west in 1830.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is correct, but there never was any official removal of the government.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Under the treaty of 1830, the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty, article 14 provided that even if they ever did move west they should not share in the annuities.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. And the money the gentleman refers to was paid out by the Choctaw Nation, which was the government west, and would not go to the Mississippi Indians under the terms of the treaty.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman does not call that an annuity, does he?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Certainly it was. Does the gentleman refer to the lands sold in Mississippi?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman would not argue that a lump sum to pay for injury done was an annuity. There was an annuity of a very small amount, but it was an entirely different sum.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If that was the fund got from the land sold in Mississippi, why, the gentleman is right.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is right.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The land in Mississippi was sold by the Government, and part of it at 2½ cents an acre; and later the Government gave more than 4,000 Indians land scrip, by which they could take up land in Mississippi or elsewhere.

Mr. MILLER. That is so; but they could not go any place where they could take up the land.

The next salient fact is that in all the later acts of Congress and the Choctaw west intended to relieve the Choctaws in Mississippi, conditions were prescribed impossible for the Mississippi Choctaws to perform.

Now, gentleman, I am fighting no one's battles, because I have no personal interest in it. All the years I have been considering Indian affairs nothing has impressed me so strongly as that there are a large number of Indians in Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas who have not received their just deserts, and I think it should be the attitude of Congress and the attitude of the representatives of the Indian tribes in Oklahoma to meet squarely, honestly, and fairly the situation, try to arrive at a just accounting with these people, and to take care of their interests. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, there are men in the House who know much more about the Choctaw Indians both in Oklahoma and Mississippi than I do, but I have known something of them all my life and have known intimately of them for the last dozen years.

To intelligently bring this matter to the attention of the House it necessitates going into the matter historically for almost a hundred years. At the outset I want to assert that neither in law, equity, or good morals do the Choctaw Indians residing in Mississippi have any claim against the Choctaw Indians residing in Oklahoma. My assertion standing alone would not be of great value to this House; neither would it be of great value to those who sought to look it up, for assertions standing alone are often idle, empty, and without foundation in fact. But in the time allotted me I shall deal with the matter, first, historically; second, I shall debate the legal phase of the question; third, I shall debate the equities, morals, and justice of this proposition; and fourth, I shall show that much, if not all, of this commotion is brought about by unprofessional, unworthy, scheming, degenerate attorneys, who, by means of disreputable agents, three of whom are negroes, went into the fence corners, byways, and secluded places and by fraud, deception, and fiction secured thousands of contracts providing for exorbitant attorney fees from parties who are not Indians by blood at all, from those who have no right to enrollment, the ultimate purpose of these attorneys being the enrichment of their own pocketbooks through graft, fraud, deceit, and misrepresentation.

HISTORICAL DATA.

Ninety-four years ago, in 1820, the Choctaw Tribe of Indians in toto resided in the State of Mississippi. They owned 15,000,000 acres of land in Mississippi. By the treaty of 1820 they traded 4,000,000 acres of that land for what now comprises the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation, in the State of Oklahoma, an area in the treaty described by metes and bounds, then Indian Territory, now a part of Oklahoma.

The treaty contained a provision which provided for the removal of the Choctaws from the State of Mississippi west, leaving 10,000,000 acres of their land behind in Mississippi.

Ten years later, in 1830, the treaty of 1830 was entered into between the Choctaw Indians and the United States Government, which was a treaty intended to more effectually carry out the provisions of the treaty of 1820, and which contains the fourteenth article, which is the sole and only basis for the pretended claim of those Indians, who have for almost 100 years refused to remove from Mississippi west to the then Indian Territory. They still refuse to remove there and are still residents of Mississippi.

The total number of Choctaws in 1830 was 18,200. Of these, 15,000 removed as per the terms of the treaty; approximately 4,000 of them remained behind in Mississippi. The 4,000 Indians that remained in Mississippi from 1830 to 1842 had the right to take up residence and be allotted land on the 10,000,000 acres in Mississippi as fast as they could be identified, allotted, and so forth. Only 143 families were induced to take lands from the 10,000,000 acres in Mississippi, while 3,885 for some cause refused to take allotments during this 12-year period. These Indians were, by the Federal Government, later given land scrip, 640 acres for each and every head of a family, 320 acres for every child over 10 years of age, and 160 acres for every child under 10 years of age, one-half to be delivered to them in Mississippi by the Federal Government and the other half after they removed from Mississippi to the then Indian Territory.

The muster rolls show that land for one-half of this scrip, as provided for, was in truth and in fact delivered to the Indians, and a list of their names can be found in the files of the Indian Office, and also by consulting House Document No. 898, Sixty-second Congress, second session. The other half, or the remainder of the scrip, was capitalized at $1.25 per acre and paid to these Choctaw Indians in person by the Indian agent for the Federal Government. See muster rolls of the Indian Office and vouchers, which show precisely that the Indians first received the land, and, second, the money.

The total amount of the money paid to the Indians was $872,000 for the last half of the scrip.

So it will be observed that the Indians who remained in Mississippi really received more land, more money, and had a larger patrimony than the Indians who moved on to the frontier at the instance of the Government into what then was a wild, savage country, where they suffered the hardships of the outrages committed by the wilder tribes of Indians who then lived upon the prairie, preyed upon their peaceful neighbors, and committed all manner and sorts of offenses against them. It will be remembered that the Choctaws were always a peaceful, civilized people, and never warlike, as were other tribes.

Of those who remained in Mississippi the muster rolls show that from 1838 to 1855 of the 4,100 Choctaws who remained in Mississippi 3,400 emigrated and took up residence in the then Indian Territory, thus leaving only 700 behind at that time. See House Document No. 898, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

These 3,400, who during that time emigrated to the then Indian Territory, now the State of Oklahoma, were enrolled and became full-fledged members of the Oklahoma Choctaw Tribe of Indians. See muster rolls of Douglas Cooper in the Indian Office.

From 1830 to 1889 any Mississippi Choctaw who would come to Oklahoma was not only welcome but was urged both by the Mississippi people and by the Choctaws of the then Indian Territory and by the Federal Government to go west and join the Indian Territory Indians to be enrolled, adopted as members of the tribe, and in fact to become full-fledged members in every respect.

During this period no Choctaw who ever in good faith moved to Indian Territory and took up bona fide residence there was refused admission to the tribe or driven away, but in each and every instance was accepted in full fellowship as a part of the Indian Territory Choctaw Tribe of Indians.

On March 4, 1890, Congress sent the Dawes Commission to Oklahoma to negotiate agreements for the winding up of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. By so doing Congress stepped in and by act of Congress said: "We will make your rolls; we will allot your land; we will distribute your money per capita; we will sell your town sites, surplus lands, build up cities among you, increase the values of your land, and thereby help you prosper and improve your conditions."

This Dawes Commission was composed of a board of three lawyers eminently qualified from the standpoint of intelligence, legal ability, honor, and integrity to go to Oklahoma and perform the work of determining who was entitled to enrollment on the Choctaw rolls and who should be refused enrollment, and to decide how the affairs of these Indians should be wound up, how their lands should be allotted, and, in short, Congress empowered them to do any and all things necessary, looking to the final closing up and winding up of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

From this time on it will be distinctly understood that the Choctaw Indians themselves were shorn of power to manage their rolls and the Federal Government stepped in, and whatever occurred from this time on was by act of the Federal Government, rather than by act of the Choctaw Indians, in the then Indian Territory.

The attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws and those contending for them base their entire claim on the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. This treaty is now 84 years old and has been construed by Federal commissions sent there with full power to construe it, by Federal courts vested with full power and final jurisdiction to pass upon it. Numerous acts of Congress have been passed specifically construing it, always holding that no rights of citizenship should accrue unless they removed west to Indian Territory. The fourteenth section of the treaty itself provides for a section of land of 640 acres for each head of a family, a half section of 320 acres for each child over 10 years of age, and a quarter section of 160 acres for each child under 10 years of age in Mississippi, and the record shows they got the land and the money and that it was actually delivered to them.

I shall incorporate in my remarks the section 14, upon which the Mississippi Choctaws base all their claims. It is as follows:

Each Choctaw head of a family being desirous to remain and become a citizen of the States shall be permitted to do so by signifying his intention to the agent within six months from the ratification of the treaty, and he or she shall thereupon be entitled to a reservation of one section of 640 acres of land, to be bounded by sectional lines of survey; in like manner shall be entitled to one-half of that quantity for each unmarried child which is living with him over 10 years of age, and a quarter of a section to each child as may be under 10 years of age, to adjoin the location of the parent. If they reside upon said lands, intending to become citizens of the States, for five years after the ratification of this treaty, in that case a grant in fee simple shall issue. Said reservation shall include the present improvement of the head of the family, or a portion of it. Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity.

In July, 1896, 66 years after the treaty of 1830 was entered into, Jack Amos and 97 other Mississippi Choctaws appealed to the Dawes Commission for enrollment as Choctaw citizens of the full blood, residing in Mississippi. On December 1, 1896, the Dawes Commission rejected the claim of Jack Amos and other Mississippi Choctaws by blood on the ground that they were not residents of the Choctaw country west. This decision was appealed to the United States District Court for the Central District of Indian Territory, and the court sustained the Dawes Commission in an elaborate opinion entitled "Jack Amos v. The Choctaw Nation" (report of Commission to Five Civilized Tribes, 1899, p. 92), in which Judge Clayton held as follows:

Adopting these rules in the interpretation of article 14 of the treaty of 1830, I arrived at the conclusion that the "privilege of a Choctaw citizen" was the right to renounce his allegiance to the Commonwealth of Mississippi, move upon the land conveyed to him and to his people, and there, the only spot upon earth where he could do so, renew his relations with his people and enjoy all the privileges of a Choctaw citizen, except to participate in the annuities.

He held, in effect, that those who had not so removed were barred by failure to remove.

This decision of Judge Clayton was virtually affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, which held that the act of Congress gave final jurisdiction to the district court, and that the act itself was constitutional. See Stephens v. Cherokee Nation (174 U. S. Rept., p. 445). In the Supreme Court of the United States the matter was expressly argued in the case of Emma Nabors and others, appellants, against the Choctaw Nation, appellee, at the same time with the Stephens case, October term, 1898.

It will be remembered that the Dawes Commission was a Federal commission, provided for by Congress, and the members of which were appointed by the President. It will be remembered that none of the members were local men, and could therefore not be subjected to any sort of local influence. It will be remembered that they were men of great responsibility and appointed with that in view, so that their decision with reference to this enrollment matter is entitled to the greatest weight. However, it is not necessary to stop here to show that this fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty has been finally passed upon, but the Federal court in Oklahoma, by the act of June 10, 1896, was given final jurisdiction on appeal from the Dawes Commission to finally pass upon all these enrollment cases.

The decision of the Federal court, Judge Clayton as Federal judge, is clear, unequivocal, straight to the point, and deals with the precise question now at issue. The construction of this particular section is so well set forth in the year 1896 in the Jack Amos et al. case that I am going to insert the exact language at this point for the consideration of the House. It is as follows:

In the third article of the treaty the Choctaws agreed to move all of their people within three years, and the United States intended that they should go. But, by the fourteenth article of the treaty, provisions were made whereby those who should decide to remain and become citizens of the State of Mississippi, in the event that, because of the intolerance and persecutions of the whites, which they themselves had so bitterly experienced, or for any other cause, they might become dissatisfied with their altered conditions and their new citizenship and desire to follow them to their new homes and thereafter exercise with them in their own country the privileges of citizenship they could do so, except that they were not to participate with them in their annuities, the lands which they were to receive in Mississippi being deemed a compensation for that.

When the fourteenth article of the treaty was framed the negotiating parties understood that the policy of the United States was that the Choctaws were to be removed. The Choctaws, in article 3, had just agreed that they should all go. The ink was not yet dry in article 2, whereby the condition was placed in this grant to the lands that they should live upon them or they should be forfeited, and that no privilege of citizenship could be conferred or enjoyed outside of the territorial jurisdiction of their newly acquired nation. Understanding these conditions, the latter clause of article 14 was penned:

"Persons who claim under this article shall not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever remove—that is, if they ever place themselves on the land and within the jurisdiction of the nation whereby those privileges may become operative—are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."

In other words, if they ever remove, they are to enjoy all of the privileges of a Choctaw citizen except that of participating in their annuities. If this be not the meaning to be attached to the word "remove" as used in the clause of the treaty under consideration, it must be meaningless. But in the interpretation of statutes it is the duty of the court to so interpret them as to give every word a meaning, and in doing so it must take into consideration the whole statute, its objects and purposes, the rights which are intended to be enforced and the evils intended to be remedied; it may go to the history of the transaction about which the legislation is had and call to its aid all legitimate facts proven or of which the courts will take judicial notice in order to find the true meaning of the word as used in the statute. Of course, the same rule of interpretation applies to treaties. Adopting these rules in the interpretation of article 14 of the treaty of 1830, I arrive at the conclusion that the "privilege of a Choctaw citizen" therein reserved to those Choctaws who shall remain, thereby separating themselves, it may be forever, from their brethren and their nation, becoming citizens of another sovereignty and aliens of their own, situated so that it would be impossible while in Mississippi to receive or enjoy any of the rights of Choctaw citizenship, was the right to renounce his allegiance to the Commonwealth of Mississippi, move upon the lands conveyed to him and his people, and there, the only spot on earth where he could do so, renew his relations with his people and enjoy all of the privileges of a Choctaw citizen, except to participate in the annuities.

As an evidence that the Choctaw people themselves took this view of the question, attention is called to the fact that their council has passed many acts and resolutions inviting these absent Choctaws to move into their country, and on one occasion appropriated a considerable sum of money to assist them on their journey; and until the past two or three years have always promptly placed those who did return on the rolls of citizenship, but never enrolled an absent Choctaw as a citizen.

On December 24, 1889, the General Council of the Choctaw Nation passed the following resolution:

"Whereas there are large numbers of Choctaws yet in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana who are entitled to the rights and privileges of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation; and

"Whereas they are denied all rights of citizenship in said States; and

"Whereas they are too poor to immigrate themselves into the Choctaw Nation: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the General Council of the Choctaw Nation assembled, That the United States Government is hereby requested to make provisions for the emigration of said Choctaws from said States to the Choctaw Nation," etc.

The language is not that they are entitled to the rights and privileges of Choctaw citizenship in the States named, but "who are entitled to all the rights and privileges of citizenship in the Choctaw Nation," and the prayer is that because of the fact that they are denied the rights of citizenship in the States that the United States will remove them to a place—their own country—where the rights of Choctaw citizenship may be enjoyed by them.

I would also suggest that you look at the report of the Five Civilized Tribes Commission, at page 89, wherein the matter is set forth fully, carefully, and to the point. It will here be observed that the Federal commission and the Federal court both construed this article to mean that the Indians who did not remove west from Mississippi to the Indian Territory, there to take up their residence, were forever and unalterably barred.

Due notice was given to the Mississippi Choctaws, who have all these years steadfastly refused to go to Oklahoma to take up their residence there, that unless they did so their rights would be forfeited. Still the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, in a spirit of fairness and in strict compliance with the treaty of 1866, gave them due notice, not alone in Oklahoma, but all through Mississippi, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Alabama, and wherever there was a possibility that they could have strayed or wandered.

Notice of the rights of the citizens was to be given wide publicity, and by article 13 of said treaty it is provided:

The notice required in the above article shall be given, not only in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, but by publication in newspapers printed in the States of Mississippi and Tennessee, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, and Alabama, to the end that such Choctaws and Chickasaws as yet remain outside of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations may be informed and have opportunity to exercise the rights hereby given to resident Choctaws and Chickasaws: Provided, That before any such absent Choctaw or Chickasaw shall be permitted to select for himself or herself or others, as hereinafter provided, he or she shall satisfy the register of the land office of his or her intention, or the intention of the party for whom selection is to be made, to become bona fide resident in the said nation within five years from the time of selection; and should the said absentee fail to remove into said nation and occupy and commence an improvement on the land selected within the time aforesaid the said selection shall be canceled, and the land shall thereafter be discharged from all claim on account thereof.

It will be remembered that in 1830 all the Choctaws resided in Mississippi, and it will be remembered they traded 4,000,000 acres of their land in Mississippi for a strip of country then in Indian Territory, and on March 3, 1842, the President of the United States executed a deed or patent to the Choctaw Nation, and particularly did he make sure to incorporate in the deed the same limitation that was found in the treaty of 1830, which provided that in the event the Indians did not live upon the land and remain upon it the title should forfeit to the Government of the United States. This provision in the patent is as follows:

That the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in execution of the agreement and stipulation in the aforesaid treaty, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto the said Choctaw Nation the aforesaid "tract of country west of the Mississippi"; to have and to hold the same, with all the rights, privileges, immunities, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature thereunto belonging, as intended "to be conveyed" by the aforesaid article, "in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure them, while they shall exist as a nation and live on it," liable to no transfer or alienations except to the United States or with their consent.

This constitutes a base or determinable fee, and it is inconsistent with the manner in which the title to this land was held that the Indians who renounced their Choctaw citizenship and refused to continue their identification with the nation and share the responsibilities and burdens of citizenship should be entitled to share in its benefits. No one prior to the closing of the rolls has ever objected to the absentee Choctaws reidentifying themselves with the nation and being readmitted to the benefits of citizenship; and, on the other hand, they have been requested and urged to return to the fold on every occasion.

If the Dawes Commission, created by Congress, had not held adversely to these nonresident Choctaws; if the Federal court, Judge Clayton presiding, had not held adversely to the enrollment of nonresident Mississippi Choctaws; if it were not historically true that citizenship in any tribe or in any nation, whether savage or civilized, always depends upon bona fide residence, the provision incorporated by the President of the United States in the patent which transferred the Indian Territory land to the Indians would make it no longer a question of doubt, but one of certainty that no Indian, whether he moved west in 1820 or in 1830 or any other time to take up land, he must of necessity reside upon it and continue to reside upon it; otherwise it was a defeasible estate that would revert to the Government.

To adopt the contention of the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws would be to hold that the Choctaw Indians who removed west and took up residence on the land and bore all the hardships incident to the frontier at that time and then moved away, would give up every vestige they had and allow the Mississippi Choctaws to have rights to the land, even though they never lived upon the land at all. Such a contention is so preposterous that no one will ever live to see the day when it will not be criticized.

The Dawes Commission held that residence on the land was essential before the Indians could be allotted, and surely no one will ever criticize the Federal court, which by the Congress of the United States was given power to pass upon the matter for holding as they did that no Mississippi Choctaw residing in Mississippi, who refused to move west and take up his residence with his brethren in the Indian Territory, could share in the estate. Any other conclusion would work a greater wrong and inflict a greater injustice upon the Oklahoma Choctaws than any just Congress, court, or citizen would care to sustain.

Again, let me present the eloquent words of Judge Clayton, who passed upon this identical fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830. In the case of Jack Amos et al. versus the Choctaw Nation, supra, the court further says:

I am disposed to the opinion, however, and will so hold that the descendants of the Mississippi Choctaws, by virtue of the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, are entitled to all of the rights of Choctaw citizenship, with all of the privileges and property rights incident thereto, provided they have renounced their allegiance to the sovereignty of Mississippi by moving into the Choctaw Nation in good faith to live upon their lands, renewing their allegiance to that nation, and putting themselves in an attitude whereby they will be able to share in the burdens of their government. The reason for this conclusion is, to my mind, made morally certain when it is remembered that ever since the treaty of 1830, now for the period of nearly 67 years, with the exception of the past two or three years, the Choctaw Nation, by its legislative enactments, and by its acts so long continued that by custom they have become crystallized into law, have universally admitted all who should remove to this country and rehabilitate them in all of the rights and privileges of citizenship enjoyed by themselves.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have a very short time, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I simply want to ask a question. Could the Mississippi Choctaws now move to Oklahoma and participate in these funds?

Mr. FERRIS. No; because Congress passed an act formally closing the rolls after they had been open for nearly 100 years. But we do not have to stop with the Dawes Commission, which is a Federal commission, or with the Federal court, upon which you must rely, and you can not say that there is Oklahoma influence there, but a solemn act of Congress was passed in 1906, which took effect March 4, 1907, which forever closed these rolls.

It said in substance and effect the Oklahoma Choctaws have undergone all of the annoyance, have undergone all of the outrages and grafts that can be heaped upon them in connection with their tribal rolls, and the rolls are closed. So if this amendment be adopted, which went on in the Senate without consideration in any committee, you would, first, overturn the Dawes Commission; you would, second, overturn the Federal court; and you would, third, overturn the Congress of the United States, which said on March 4, 1907, seven years ago, that these rolls were affirmatively and forever closed.

Can any statement of facts be more clear than the language of the Federal court in the Jack Amos case, above mentioned? Can anyone say that this Federal judge, who by the Congress of the United States was given final jurisdiction to act, would misconstrue, misstate, or misinterpret the law as it stands? Can anyone respectfully and properly go behind the decision of the Federal court and overturn Indian treaties, Indian history, Indian laws, and Indian customs for almost a hundred years? To adopt such a contention as is sought by the amendment to open the rolls in Oklahoma would work a greater injustice than for one citizen to leap upon his weaker brother and take away from him the property that rightfully, lawfully, and honestly belongs to the weaker brother.

I can not believe the Congress of the United States will put in on the floor of the House an amendment of such far-reaching character that has never even been considered by any committee of either the House or the Senate, and thus ruthlessly override, upset, and destroy all that has been done in almost a hundred years for a proud, honorable, peaceful people, who in the first instance were the owners of that once grand estate. To even think of doing such a thing is so preposterous that I can not believe it will be countenanced or done.

But if it were necessary to determine what the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws were under the fourteenth article of the treaty prior to April, 1906, certainly that is not true now, for by the act of April, 1906, Congress stepped in and solemnly closed the rolls, which took effect on March 4, 1907. So to adopt the position of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and his colleagues, it would be necessary to disregard, repeal, and overthrow this act of Congress; it would be necessary to overturn two treaties between the United States and the Oklahoma Choctaws, which specifically provide that the Government will distribute the land and property belonging to the Choctaws among the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma and to those found to be entitled to enrollment by the Federal commission and the Federal court charged with that duty. For verification of this statement, see the Atoka agreement and supplemental agreement between the United States and the Oklahoma Choctaws, which is clear, forceful, and direct to the point.

It has not been kept by this Government. It deserves to be kept. Surely what has been done should not now be overturned.

Feeling that I have shown conclusively that, first, the Dawes Commission; second, the Federal court; third, Congress itself; and, fourth, two solemn treaties, have all held that the nonresident Mississippi Choctaws who have for almost a hundred years refused to come and take up residence in Oklahoma are not entitled to participate in the funds or property of the Oklahoma Choctaws, I shall not stop at that, but I shall call your attention to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 19, 1914, at page 11651, wherein a Senator of the United States, to wit, Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, who is leading this fight in the Senate in behalf of the adoption of this amendment, admits openly, clearly, and emphatically that legally the Choctaws in Mississippi have no rights to enrollment. I will quote his language verbatim directly. You will then observe that a Senator who was contending that the Mississippi Choctaws ought to be enrolled in Oklahoma himself agrees they have no legal right. His exact language is as follows:

> I am not contending here that the Mississippi Choctaws, in the face of all that legislation and in the face of these decisions, have any right here that is enforceable in a court of law, but I am trying to get the legislative branch of this Government to change that law which was enacted against them and construed against them.

Continuing, Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS says:

> So far as the construction of the court was concerned, I hardly see how the Supreme Court could have come to any other conclusion. * * * I am not talking now, however—and I can not be thrown off the right scent—about what are their rights in court to-day. I am talking about what their rights ought to be. * * *

I say, can any Member of Congress, can any man out of Congress, can any tribunal anywhere under any conditions afford to ignore all law adjudicating the rights as between two bands of Indians, both of which are wards of the United States and both of which are dependent people? Can Congress to-day afford by an undigested amendment to do so much mischief, repeal so many treaties, so many decisions of courts and tribunals, which have spent years of painstaking efforts in arriving at conclusions about them? No; I can not believe Congress will reach any such preposterous conclusion as that, and I can not believe that this amendment will, in keeping with law, justice, and good morals, ever be agreed to by the Congress of the United States.

EQUITY OF THE CASE.

Having, as I believe, shown conclusively that the Mississippi Choctaws have no rights to enrollment or participation in the funds or property of the Oklahoma Choctaws under the law, I think I can show they have no right in equity to participate in the same for the following reasons:

1. For 94 years the remnant bands of Mississippi Choctaws residing in Mississippi have refused to obey the solemn treaties made between the Choctaws and the Federal Government by moving west and taking up their residence with their people.

2. There were 10,000,000 acres of land reserved in Mississippi for the purpose of allotting and proving for such of the Mississippi Choctaws as remained there. Only 143 families accepted allotments from this area, although the right of all who remained was open continuously and uninterruptedly from 1830 to 1842, a period of 12 years.

3. Of those who refused to take allotments in Mississippi and who refused to move west under the provisions of the treaties land scrip was given them under the act of August 23, 1842, which could be attached and cause their rights to be exercised in any one of four States, to wit, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, or Tennessee. One-half of this scrip was delivered to them by the Indian agent acting for the Federal Government in Mississippi, the balance was to be given them when they removed to Oklahoma or what was then the Indian Territory. There has been some intimation that this scrip never actually reached them or came into the possession of the Mississippi Choctaws; but this intimation is wholly untrue, without foundation, and the files of the Indian Office will prove to anyone who will take the trouble to go there and look it up that the scrip did reach them. See also House Document No. 898, Sixty-second Congress, third session, wherein appears a complete list of the names of those to whom this scrip was actually delivered. The last half of the scrip was finally capitalized and delivered to the Mississippi Choctaws in money, amounting to the sum of $872,000. For justification of this statement see act of March 3, 1845, Fifth Statutes at Large, page 777, also the files in the Indian Office, which show conclusively that the pro rata share of the money was actually delivered to them, so that in justice, good morals, and in good conscience they were given rights superior to the Oklahoma Indians.

4. They should not participate in the funds or the property of the Oklahoma Choctaws after the long lapse of time, even though they have squandered, first, their allotments, and second, their scrip, and third, their money which was actually delivered to them by the Government of the United States. The Oklahoma Indians certainly are not responsible for the squandering of the funds of the Mississippi Choctaws, if they were squandered, and it is assumed they were.

5. The Mississippi Choctaws who for almost a hundred years have refused to come and take up residence with their brethren in Oklahoma have become an alien people to the Oklahoma Choctaws, and there is nothing in common between them.

6. The personnel of the Indians who participated in the treaty of 1820, 94 years ago, is extinct, all of them, of course, having died since that time.

7. The succeeding generation has ceased to have anything in common whatever with the Oklahoma Choctaws; the Mississippi Choctaws of to-day know nothing of the traits of the Oklahoma Choctaws, follow none of their customs, and but for the constant intermeddling of outside attorneys and runners, who go among the Mississippi Choctaws creating excitement among them, their happiness in Mississippi would be complete.

8. The Choctaws residing in Mississippi should not now be enrolled in Oklahoma, because the Oklahoma Choctaws did not make the rolls, construe the rolls, or close the rolls, and do not have any unallotted land remaining. In view of these things, the Oklahoma Choctaws are entitled to their peace after the above acts have transpired and these things done for them by the Federal Government.

9. The Choctaws in Oklahoma every day did their full duty while the matter was in their hands; every day they urged their Mississippi brethren to come and live among them; they even passed resolutions beseeching, for years and years prior to the closing of the rolls by Congress, the Mississippi Choctaws to come and take up residence in Oklahoma, and appropriated money out of their own funds as an inducement to get the Mississippi Choctaws to come to Oklahoma before Congress finally closed the rolls.

10. The Oklahoma Choctaws never refused to adopt any Choctaw who came to take up residence with them during the time they had control of their matters for a period of 71 years. This is good faith on their part. Will Congress now override their own acts in closing the rolls, overthrow the solemn treaties they made with the Choctaws?

11. The Mississippi Choctaws should not be enrolled and permitted to participate in the property of the Oklahoma Choctaws, for the reason that the Federal Government can not afford to break two solemn treaties made with the Oklahoma Choctaws, thereby dissipating the funds that belong to the Oklahoma Indians. For corroboration of this see Atoka agreement and supplemental agreement between the United States and the Choctaw Nation.

12. It would be an injustice to enroll the Mississippi Choctaws who have never lived upon the land at all when the very patents issued by the United States to the Oklahoma Indians prescribed that the land must be resided upon and that removal from it would constitute a forfeiture of thei. rights.

13. The injustice of having the Federal Government deed to the Choctaw Nation certain lands and to administer their affairs for almost a hundred years and then take their property from them and give it to another people, who from years of absenting themselves are as alien to the tribe as another independent race. Such a procedure would amount to a wrong so great the like of which Congress never has in the past resorted to, and which it is hoped Congress will not now or at any time in the future resort to.

14. The Mississippi Choctaws should not now be enrolled with the Oklahoma Indians or be permitted to share in the funds of the Oklahoma Choctaws, for the reason that the Federal Government can not afford to break their own treaty with the Oklahoma Choctaws, to wit, first give the land to them and then take it away.

15. The Mississippi Choctaws should not be enrolled from the very facts, that must be patent to all of us, that the Indians who participated in the treaty of 1820 and the treaty of 1830, both of which were agreed to almost a hundred years ago, are all dead, and their descendants have intermingled with other tribes of Indians and other races to such an extent that there are few, if any, now remaining who have any considerable portion of Choctaw Indian blood coursing through their veins. In addition to this, the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi, by refusing to obey the treaty stipulations, have forfeited every vestige of any right or claim to share in the property of the Oklahoma Choctaws. To permit the Mississippi Choctaws to go to Oklahoma at this late day, there to share in the property or funds of the Oklahoma Choctaws, would be a procedure identical with the case of the two brothers, one of whom remained in the East on the farm and acquired nothing in the way of possessions, and the other who pushed his way into the West, endured the hardships of the frontier, and finally accumulated a fortune, after which the brother who had remained in the East sought to share in the fortune acquired by his brother in the West, who had pressed out and braved the hardships of the frontier.

MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAW AGITATION CAUSED BY UNPROFESSIONAL SHYSTER ATTORNEYS.

It must of necessity be the desire of every Member of this House to know what has caused this continual agitation for the enrollment of an alien, foreign people upon the Oklahoma Choctaw Indian rolls.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, there is a reason for this agitation, and the House is entitled to know it. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has likewise had a desire to know what caused this commotion. In order to get at the real truth, in order to get at the real cause, and in order to know what brought about this constant agitation, the Indian Office took occasion to detail one of its oldest and most competent inspectors, Maj. James McLaughlin, out into the field to make a thorough and complete investigation.

Maj. McLaughlin submitted his report of the investigation on June 29, 1914, approximately only a week ago. It is the result of a long, patient, and painstaking investigation. In this most interesting report he gives the reason in such a manner that no one will longer be in doubt about it. I shall present this report to this House in toto and then take occasion to comment upon it. It is worthy of reading, and every Member of this House ought to read it, so as to ascertain for himself what is actually going on among those defenseless people, and then judge for himself what ought to be done in the premises. The report is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1914.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: Under departmental instructions of the 13th ultimo, I have the honor to report my investigation concerning the representations made and methods adopted by certain solicitors in securing contracts from individual Indians who claim the right to enrollment as members of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribe of Indians, and respectfully submit the following conclusions relative to same:

In my tour of investigation I visited Columbus, Ohio; St. Louis, Mo.; Muskogee, Poteau, Wilburton, and McAlester, Okla.; San Antonio and Houston, Tex.; Lake Charles, Baton Rouge, and New Orleans, La.; and Gulfport, Miss., inquiring into the matter and interrogated numerous persons who had knowledge of the representations made and methods adopted by the soliciting agents in obtaining contracts from the class of claimants referred to.

From my investigation I ascertained that during the past four years several persons have been engaged in soliciting contracts from Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians and freedmen of those tribes, and that one Alexander P. Powell, who claims to be a Choctaw Indian and a lineal descendant of one of the parties to the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of September 27, 1830, has been actively engaged in canvassing a large extent of country, chiefly in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas, in procuring the names of unenrolled persons who claim to possess Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood, and obtaining contracts from them to prosecute, on a contingent fee, their right to share in the distribution of the funds and property of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma; and while, as above stated, there were several persons engaged in procuring contracts of similar character from unenrolled Indians of these tribes, it appears from the record that said A. P. Powell obtained more contracts from the class of claimants referred to than all of the other solicitors combined, notwithstanding the fact that he did not solicit contracts from any of the freedmen.

I failed to meet this man Powell during my tour of the localities in which he has been operating very extensively the past four years, and therefore can not speak of him from personal knowledge, but have been told by many who know him that he shows a decided strain of Negro blood, is large of stature, prepossessing in appearance, shrewd and plausible, which, with his posing in the communities he visits in soliciting contracts as a very important person, has succeeded in arousing great enthusiasm among the people of the localities canvassed by him, and has thus procured contracts with little or no difficulty from all persons who believed they possessed or were led by Powell to believe they possessed any Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood.

From what I was told by reputable persons at Lake Charles and Baton Rouge, La., and Gulfport, Miss., it would appear that said Powell was interested chiefly in procuring a large number of contracts, regardless of the ancestry of the applicants, as Mr. Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., told me that to his personal knowledge Powell obtained contracts from several families, the ancestry of whom as supplied by Powell was absurdly erroneous. It is also alleged that Powell took contracts from any persons claiming to have Indian blood, and from many who had never claimed to possess Indian blood until told by Powell that they were descendants of Indians who were parties to the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of 1830 and therefore entitled to certain benefits under that treaty.

Mr. C. R. Cline, an attorney of Lake Charles, La., and Hon. Isaac C. Boyd, of Leesville, La., also an attorney, a member of the present Louisiana Assembly, and who claims to possess Choctaw Indian blood, both informed me that there are about 300 persons living in the neighborhood of Kinder, Allen Parish, La., who are of mixed descent, being of French, Spanish, Portuguese, and Negro blood, with a very few of them possibly possessing some Indian blood, and the name "Red Bone" was given those of them who were supposed to have any Indian blood; that prior to Powell's visit to Kinder soliciting contracts with Indians it was regarded a great insult to be called a "Red Bone," thus classing them as of Indian blood, but a number of them were advised by Powell that they were of Choctaw descent, as shown by a book which he possessed and by which he traced their ancestry, as eligible to enrollment, and it is alleged that he thus obtained contracts from all of them, and since Powell thus recognized those people, the name "Red Bone" is no longer objectionable, but, on the contrary, all are desirous of being thus classed, and to be now called a "Red Bone" is exceedingly pleasing to each and all of them, as they believe that the cognomen fixes their status as of Indian blood, and entitles them to share in the property of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma.

Hon. Isaac C. Boyd, of Leesville, Vernon Parish, La., above referred to, stated to me that in 1911 he was induced by one Mrs. Ella Taylor, of Leesville, La., to enter into contract for Mississippi Choctaw rights, said Mrs. Taylor representing herself an authorized agent of A. P. Powell and Luke W. Conerly, whose headquarters were then at Gulfport, Miss., engaged in obtaining contracts from Choctaw claimants, for the prosecution of their right to participate in the funds and property of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma; said Mrs. Taylor stating to him that each beneficiary would be entitled to receive 320 acres of land or double the value of it in money, also anywhere from $5,000 to $10,000 in cash from the Choctaw funds, but that in order to participate in this distribution claimants must enter into contracts without delay, as the time limit would soon expire, therefore promptness in executing contracts for same was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Boyd, who is of Choctaw blood, a lawyer by profession with quite a lucrative practice, and who is also a member of the State Assembly of Louisiana, feels chagrined in having fallen to the flattering presentation of the matter by Mrs. Taylor, resulting in his entering into a contract for himself and his sister and for which he paid Mrs. Taylor $7.50 for executing each of said contracts.

Mr. Boyd stated that Mrs. Taylor procured a great many similar contracts at Leesville, La., and surrounding country, and that he has little doubt but that she thus realized in the neighborhood of $3,000 from her charge of $7.50 to applicants for each contract obtained. Mr. Boyd further stated that after realizing he had been victimized in the sum of $15, through the enthusiasm aroused by a plausible talk, he, in order to have the solicitors prosecuted, if possible, made diligent inquiry of persons who had entered into similar contracts to ascertain if any of them had represented themselves as Government officials, and was unable to find any person to whom they represented themselves as being in any way connected with the Government or an official of the Choctaw Nation, but that the impression prevailed among the claimants that A. P. Powell and his assistants were fully empowered to procure the contracts they were engaged in soliciting from Choctaw claimants.

Mr. Boyd still further stated that having talked a great deal against these solicitors, denouncing them as frauds and fakirs, that Powell never visited Leesville, La., to solicit contracts, but established himself for a short time at De Ridder, 21 miles distant, and sent notices to Leesville applicants to proceed to De Ridder for that purpose.

I made particular inquiry as to whether or not Powell or any of the other solicitors had been ever heard to represent themselves as Government officials or officials of the Choctaw Nation, but did not meet any person who stated that they had ever heard any of those solicitors make such a statement. On the contrary, many of the persons whom I interrogated with reference thereto stated that they had frequently heard Powell say that he was fighting the Government to have the rightful claims of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians allowed; but notwithstanding the fact that Powell when questioned regarding the matter invariably denied that he had any connection with the Government in the work he was engaged in, the impression prevailed, as expressed by Attorneys Cline and Boyd and Mr. Luke W. Conerly, especially among the more ignorant persons, that Powell represented some high authority in the premises, he being engaged in executing contracts with claimants, using printed blank forms therefor, and this impression prevailed as to the several other solicitors engaged in obtaining similar contracts.

When assigned to this investigation, the Indian Office furnished me, for my information, a voluminous file of correspondence with reference to this matter, which file embraced report of Special United States Indian Agent W. W. McConihe, dated May 2, 1911, with accompanying exhibits, from which record, together with what I ascertained in my investigation, the facts appear to be as follows:

1. The citizenship rolls of the Choctaw Nation, embracing those Indians entitled to share in the property of the tribe, was closed March 4, 1907 (act of Apr. 26, 1906; 34 Stat. L., 137, sec. 2).

2. That there were possibly some persons omitted from the citizenship rolls who, because of the limitations imposed by the law as to time, were unable to produce the proof of their right to participate in the funds of the Choctaw Nation under article 14 of the treaty of September 27, 1830.

3. The possibility that there were some Mississippi Choctaw Indians whose right to enrollment had not been recognized induced a firm of attorneys—Messrs. Crews & Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.—to undertake the securing of legislation that would permit the reopening of the rolls for the purpose of establishing the rights of those who had previously failed to establish their right or had failed to take advantage of the opportunity to do so.

4. Messrs. Crews & Cantwell employed Alexander P. Powell, who asserts that he is a Choctaw Indian, to procure the names of unenrolled Mississippi Choctaw Indians and produce evidence by tracing the ancestry to establish their right to enrollment and to obtain contracts from them for the prosecution of their claims.

5. Associated with Messrs. Crews & Cantwell was one S. L. Hurlbut, a banker, residing at El Campo, Tex., who financed the project in the beginning by paying Powell $150 per month salary and his expenses.

6. Powell, while employed by Crews & Cantwell, procured the names of about 4,200 persons, who claimed or were led to believe by Powell that they were entitled to participate in the funds of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, and from each of whom he obtained a contract authorizing Crews & Cantwell to act as their attorneys in all legal proceedings in presenting to the Interior Department or any court such evidence as he or she might be able to produce in establishing a right to participate in the distribution of the fund and property of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians of Oklahoma, which contracts provided that Crews & Cantwell were to receive 30 per cent of all sums of money, lands, and property that might be received by reason of the right claimed. Powell did not make any charge to the claimants while operating under the above stated salary, until a short time previous to severing his connection with Crews & Cantwell, when he commenced charging the claimants $1.25 for each contract executed, and while engaged in this work in the employ of Crews & Cantwell it appears from the record that Powell received $2,971.02 from them, $900 of which was for salary and remainder for expenses incurred by him as shown by letter from Mr. S. L. Hurlbut's office, dated March 8, 1911, copy herewith Exhibit A.

7. Powell's connection with Crews & Cantwell appears to have terminated in March, 1911, and he then commenced soliciting contracts for William B. Matthews, at attorney of Washington, D. C., with office in the Evans Building, and the contracts procured by Powell in the name of Mr. Matthews are similar in every respect to those he obtained for Crews & Cantwell, except as to name of the attorney.

The Crews & Cantwell contracts contain the stipulation that their appointment as attorneys is joint, and that in the event of the death of either, the survivor shall succeed to all rights and benefits, and perform all the duties imposed by the contract upon the attorneys. This same stipulation is contained in the printed form of contract taken in the name of William B. Matthews [copy herewith], and the fact that it does so appear would indicate that Mr. Matthews had nothing to do with the drafting of the form, but that the wording of the Crews & Cantwell contract was probably adopted by A. P. Powell, simply substituting the name of William B. Matthews, as attorney, for that of Crews & Cantwell, and Powell thus continued procuring contracts from any and all persons whom he met, who believed, or were led to believe, that they possessed Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood, and from each of whom he collected $2.50 for his services in executing the papers.

8. After Powell discontinued securing contracts for Crews & Cantwell and started soliciting for Attorney William E. Matthews and charging applicants $2.50 for each set of papers executed, it is alleged he procured contracts from a number of persons residing in and around Kinder, Allen Parish, La., who did not claim to be of Choctaw descent, but were advised by Powell that he possessed a book which enabled him to trace the ancestry of every living person who possessed any Choctaw blood, and that he had traced those people entitled to enrollment as descendants of certain persons appearing as beneficiaries under the Choctaw treaty of 1830. As to the book referred to as possessed by Powell, which is said to have been produced in evidence by him very frequently, I was informed by Mr. Luke W. Comerly, of Gulfport, Miss., who was for some months associated with Powell, that he carried with him for reference in tracing the ancestry of applicants for enrollment a copy of volume 7, American State Papers, which contains the names of 19,554 Choctaw Indians who were parties to the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of 1830, as per roll made by F. W. Armstrong, special agent, under date of September, 1831, which volume was published in 1860.

10. Crews & Cantwell, as attorneys for a number of these claimants, with evidence as to some of the unenrolled Mississippi Choctaws to an equitable right to share in the funds of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, have sought legislation to reopen the rolls to permit them to prosecute the claims of these persons with whom they have contract.

11. The financing of the project to secure reimbursement of Crews & Cantwell and S. L. Hurlbut for previous expenditures was effected by incorporating the "Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co.," chartered under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, November 14, 1911. The articles of incorporation provide for a capital stock of $100,000, or 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, the directors of the company as incorporated being S. L. Hurlbut, of El Campo, Tex.; H. Masterson and W. A. Smith, of Houston, Tex.; and T. B. Crews and H. J. Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.; and the principal stockholders are T. B. Crews and H. J. Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.; Clifford Greve and S. L. Hurlbut, of El Campo, Tex.; H. Masterson, L. Bryan & Co., J. J. Sweeney, and W. H. Gill, of Houston, Tex.; and J. H. Kempner, of Galveston, Tex.

Two hundred and fifty shares of the 1,000 shares of the stock of this company were sold at par value of $100 per share, thus realizing $25,000 in cash, with which Crews & Cantwell and S. L. Hurlbut were reimbursed for previous expenditures and a contingent fund created to meet future expenses as incurred.

12. Crews & Cantwell turned over to the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. the contracts procured for them by Alexander P. Powell, numbering about 4,200, and received in cash from the fund realized from the 250 shares of the stock sold reimbursement for their previous expenditures in connection with their Mississippi Choctaw contracts, and leaving the 750 unsold shares in the treasury as common property of the company.

In promoting the organization of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. flattering figures of prospective returns to investors therein appear to have been sent out to prominent persons throughout the country, as evidenced by letter of Mr. C. B. Moling, of Houston, Tex., under date of June 12, 1911, to Hon. W. L. Dechant, of Middletown, Ohio, which reads as follows:

HOUSTON, TEX., June 12, 1911.

Hon. W. L. DECHANT,
Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: In 1820 the United States Government made a treaty with the Choctaw Indians, then living in Mississippi, whereby the Government bought 5,000,000 acres of the Indians, and in return gave to the Indians all the lands lying in the Indian Territory north of Red River up to the Canadian and east of the ninety-eighth meridian, and paid for moving as many of the Indians out to this land as desired to go.

The Choctaws still had 10,000,000 acres left back in Mississippi, and in 1830 the Government made another treaty with them whereby the Government purchased the remaining lands for $8,000,000. In this treaty it was agreed that the remaining Indians were to be protected in the community property or the original lands in Indian Territory granted them by the treaty of 1820.

The Government still holds approximately 3,450,000 acres of these original Territory lands, as well as several millions in cash, in trust for the Choctaws who have not as yet been allotted their share.

A reputable and responsible firm of attorneys, with offices in St. Louis and Washington, D. C., have secured contracts with 4,200 Choctaw Indians to secure them their allotment of lands and money upon a percentage basis. The contracts provide that the attorneys are to receive 30 per cent of all lands and money received. These 4,200 contracts are each signed by the Indian, two witnesses to his signature, and acknowledged before a notary public.

These contracts, providing for this contingent fee, have been recognized by the Government, and Congress passed a resolution making all such contracts a first lien upon the property of the Indian. This insures direct payment to us of our fee.

For financing the project, such as hunting up the Indians and securing the proof of each individual Indian to his right of participation and the attorneys for working the bill through Congress, one-half of the profits to go to the attorneys and the other half to those who financed it.

It is estimated that each Indian's share of the estate is worth $8,000. The attorneys' contract calls for 30 per cent of this, or $2,400, of which we are to get one-half, or $1,200.

We are organizing a syndicate to take over 1,000 of these contracts at $25 per contract. We will not accept subscription for less than 20 contracts, or $500. The estimated value of 20 contracts, if we win, will be approximately $24,000, or a profit of $23,500 upon each $500 investment.

The proofs of these claims for these 4,200 Indians have all been secured and have been presented to the congressional Committee on Indian Affairs and reported favorably. This committee consists of 19 Members of Congress.

At this next session of Congress the bill will be introduced and voted upon, and as there are several precedents identical to this proposition, wherein the other Choctaws secured their rights, we have every reason to believe that the bill will pass.

* * * * * * *

We are unable to go into all the details of this proposition in this letter to you, but I have spent several days investigating it, and conclude that the chances for defeat are no greater than in the ordinary course of business. I believe the estimated results herein will be obtained, or substantially so.

I expect to give the matter my attention and to look after the interest of those who come into the deal at my request, and to take a proper assignment of the contracts and place them in the hands of some local trust company or bank, with authority to make the collection and disburse the receipts to the subscribers in the amounts to which each subscriber would be entitled at same; it will be safer for the subscribers.

My charges will be about 20 per cent of whatever profits you may make on the deal: if none are made, you owe me nothing. I would like to have you take a flier in this, say, for $500 or $1,000, and to notify me of your intentions promptly. Should you happen to lose, I think you will agree with me that it was, at least, a good bet, as the prospective returns justify taking the chance.

Awaiting your prompt reply, either by letter or wire, I am,

Yours, very truly,

C. B. MOLING.

To the foregoing communication of Mr. Moling, Mr. Dechant replied as follows:

MIDDLETOWN, OHIO, July 24, 1911.

C. B. MOLING,
432 Mason Building, Houston, Tex.

MY DEAR MR. MOLING: Your letter of June 12 was received in my absence, hence delay in answering.

I have gone over same carefully and note what you say, and it would seem to me if Congress has taken the steps enumerated by you the proposition is a good one, and on further investigation I might be induced to come in, everything appearing in good shape.

Who is the firm of attorneys representing you and located at St. Louis and Washington, and what is the name of the member of the firms looking specially after the matter?

Can you refer me to the reports wherein the Government has recognized the contracts referred to providing for a contingent fee, etc., in these specific cases; also, can you further refer me to the congressional reports, where the Congress recognized such contracts and made them a valid first lien on the Indians' property?

What Congress passed this resolution, legalizing these contracts as liens, and is it the present Committee of Congress on Indian Affairs to whom the proofs of the 4,200 claims you refer to were presented and reported favorably?

What is the name of the attorney who represented the matter to the Indian Affairs Committee of Congress and secured the passage of the favorable resolution?

On receipt of a letter from you in reply to the above I will take the matter up more fully and advise you at once what I will do. Thanking you for bringing this matter to my attention.

I am, as ever, yours,

W. L. DECHANT.

To the inquiries contained in the foregoing letter of Judge Dechant Mr. Moling replied as follows:

HOUSTON, TEX., July 28, 1911.

Hon. W. L. DECHANT,
Middletown, Ohio.

MY DEAR JUDGE: I have your letter of the 24th in regard to further information regarding the Choctaw Indian contracts, etc.

I sent for Mr. S. L. Hurlbut, who owns the contracts, and gave him your letter and asked him to give me the information desired, and I herewith hand you his dictated letter, as also the brief he refers to with the clippings attached.

In regard to the brief and the clippings, he requests that you take care of them, as they are all he has here in Houston.

It might be a good idea for you to write to Mr. Cantwell in Washington, as he is thoroughly familiar with all the details, and then the information would come to you first handed.

I am not personally acquainted with Mr. Cantwell or his partner, Mr. Crews, in St. Louis, but from what I learned they are very capable men in their line of business and have worked other similar contracts through Congress; but I knew Mr. Hurlbut for several years; he is all right, and I consider him straight and reliable; my dealings with him have all been in the real estate line and all very satisfactory; he stands well in this community.

It might also be a good idea to get in touch with the chairman of the present Committee on Indian Affairs; he ought to know all about it.

As stated in my letter of June 12, I think it's a good bet, for the reason I believe the Government will carry out the terms of its treaty made with them in 1820 and 1830; if they do, then these contracts will be good.

Awaiting your further advices, I am,

Very truly, yours,

C. B. MOLING.

The presentation of the matter as above set forth by Mr. Moling to Judge Dechant for financing the project was so flattering as to justify the average speculator in taking a chance, and it would appear, from the sale of one-fourth of the stock of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. at its par value, that no great difficulty was experienced in promoting and consummating this financing of the project.

About a year subsequent to the organization of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. for financing the project of handling Mississippi-Choctaw Indian contracts taken in the name of Crews & Cantwell, Mr. Albert J. Lee, of Ardmore, Okla., a member of the law firm of Ballinger & Lee, claiming to represent a large number of persons who claim a right in the tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma, on a contingent fee of from 12½ to 40 per cent, and which do not conflict with the claims handled and represented by the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co., but are in a line with them, desired, as shown by certain correspondence relative thereto, to raise a fund of $16,000 to meet indebtedness incurred in the prosecution of their Indian claims and with which to continue the fight for their clients, and to show that persons engaged in handling the claims of nonenrolled Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians have succeeded in interesting many prominent persons in such claims, I submit copy of tabulated statement of said Albert J. Lee, dated October 17, 1912, setting forth the prospective profits that he calculates upon deriving from his handling of said claims, together with an indorsement of same by Mr. Harris Masterson, an attorney of Houston, Tex., who is a prominent financier and promoter of projects of this character, which statement of Attorney Lee and indorsement of Mr. Masterson read as follows:

OCTOBER 17, 1912.

Mr. HARRIS MASTERSON, Houston, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Webster Ballinger and I represent some 13,000 persons who claim a right in the tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma. Of the above number of persons represented by us, there are some 3,738 who are conclusively, as shown by the Government records, entitled to share in the distribution of the tribal property. An individual share is estimated at $3,000 cash. We represent these people under contracts providing for a contingent fee of from 12½ to 40 per cent of the value of each share. I am attaching a statement showing the value of our fees. The statement also shows the amount of said fees we have already contracted for.

You will observe that my individual share of said fee will amount to $850,911, based upon the cases I consider certain; and that if we succeed in one-third of the cases that are uncertain, or rather if we succeed in enrolling 3,000 out of the 10,000 doubtful cases, my individual share of the fee would be $2,065,911.

I am in urgent need of funds with which to meet indebtedness incurred in the prosecution of these claims, and with which I may be enabled to continue the fight for our clients, and I want to raise $16,000, which I will agree to return with interest, and will assign the people furnishing the money 40 per cent of my individual share of the fee. Estimated upon the cases considered certain, this would return about $22 for every dollar subscribed, and upon the basis of one-third of the uncertain cases going through in addition to those that I consider certain, the estimated return would be about $120 for every dollar advanced.

The following pages will give you some idea of the nature and basis of the claims.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW LANDS, AND OTHER PROPERTY.

In southeastern Oklahoma, in what was formerly the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, are nearly 3,000,000 acres of land, which the Federal Government will offer for sale from day to day from November 12 to December 23, this year. These lands are classed as follows: 900,000 acres agricultural, 445,000 acres agricultural surface, with deposits of coal and asphalt, 1,500,000 acres pine and hardwood timber.

In addition to the above lands the coal and asphalt deposits are shortly to be sold. The United States mine inspector has estimated that the coal is worth in royalties to the Choctaw and Chickasaw people at least $70,000,000. There is now on deposit to the credit of these two tribes something like $1,000,000, derived from the sale of town sites.

VALUE OF PROPERTY.

It is reasonable to assume that the Federal Government will be able to get for the coal deposits at least one-half of the amount that said deposits are estimated to be worth in royalties, which would be, in round numbers, $35,000,000.

Should the 3,000,000 acres of land bring an average price of $10 per acre, which is a very reasonable estimate considering the fact that there is standing timber on 1,500,000 acres thereof, $30,000,000 will be derived from this source.

There is no accurate estimate of the value of the asphalt deposits, but they are worth several hundred thousand dollars. Eliminating the value of the asphalt deposits, we have the following values:

On deposit	$10,000,000
Value of the coal	35,000,000
Value of the surface and timber	30,000,000
Total value of the property	66,000,000

OWNERS OF THE PROPERTY.

The above property belongs to the citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians under a grant made by the Federal Government under the terms of the treaty of September 27, 1830. The grant conveyed to said Indians all the lands lying between the Canadian and Red Rivers, the Arkansas line, and the one hundredth parallel west. All of said land, however, with the exception of the 3,000,000 acres above referred to, has been parceled out to the individual Indians in allotments of 320 acres of average value land.

As the property belonged to the citizens of the tribes of whom the Federal Government was the guardian, it became the duty of the Federal Government, upon the dissolution of the tribal governments, to ascertain who were the citizens entitled to share in the distribution of the property. This the Federal Government undertook to do. The tribal governments agreed to such action upon condition that each citizen be allotted 320 acres of average value land and should then share in the proceeds derived from the sale of any lands remaining undisposed of after all allotments had been made. It was also agreed that certain town sites, coal deposits, asphalt deposits, and timberlands should be withheld from the allotment scheme.

Congress passed seven different acts, under which the citizenship of the two tribes should be determined and the distribution made. The acts were act of June 10, 1896; act of June 7, 1897; act of June 28, 1898; act of May 31, 1900; act of July 1, 1902; act of March 3, 1905; and the act of April 26, 1906. The latter act provided that the question of citizenship should be finally closed upon March 4, 1907, and since that date no person has been added to the rolls of those Indians entitled to share in the property. Assistant Attorney General J. W. Howell stated to the House Committee on Indian Affairs that the above-mentioned acts were "inheritently defective" and "administered so as to prevent a full realization of their purpose." (Hearing on H. R. 19279, 61st Cong., 2d sess., p. 265.)

WHY THE CLAIMANTS WHOM WE REPRESENT WERE OMITTED FROM THE ROLLS.

1. Sufficient time was not given to do the work. The Department of the Interior was forced to act pro forma upon the claims of more than 2,000 persons during the week preceding March 4, 1907.

2. The commission created by act of Congress was incompetent and composed of laymen who conceived the idea that it was their duty to oppose the applicants and restrict the number of persons entitled to share to the fewest possible. This commission suppressed records and failed to transmit the full case of applicants to the Secretary of the Interior, who had a supervisory authority and right of review. Upon charges filed against officers of this commission, two of them were forced to resign. (S. Doc. 357, 59th Cong., 2d sess.)

3. The tribal officials who had control of tribal funds sought at all times to restrict the number of persons enrolled, in order that the share of each would be greater.

4. The attorneys, Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, employed under Government sanction to represent the tribes, for an extra consideration of $750,000 paid out of tribal funds, and which latter employment was unknown to the Government officials, succeeded in defeating the claims of nearly 4,000 persons who had been enrolled by judgments of the United States courts rendered in cases appealed from the action of the commission to the Five Civilized Tribes under the provisions of the act of June 10, 1896. This action was investigated by the committee of Congress, and, with respect to the persons enrolled by judgments of the United States courts, this committee said: "There was no way by which persons so enrolled—locally known as court citizens—could be eliminated lawfully from participation in the tribal estate."

These tribal attorneys succeeded, however, in eliminating from the citizenship rolls the persons placed thereon by judgment of the United States courts by lobbying through a provision of law which became part of the agreement entered into by the Government and the tribes contained in the act of July 1, 1902, with reference to the distribution of the property, by having created a special court to review the judgments of the United States courts, and a committee of Congress has reported upon the manner in which this court was created, as follows:

"After the agreement had been duly signed by the representatives of the two nations and by the representatives of the Government, and after it was transmitted to Congress for ratification and approval, sections 31, 32, and 33 were inserted at the request of McMurray, which sections are predicated on the assumption that the United States courts in the Indian Territory, acting under the act of June 10, 1896, had admitted persons to citizenship in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations without notice to both of said nations. It was contended by the nations that in such proceedings notice to each of said nations was indispensable, and they claimed and insisted that the proceedings in the United States courts in the Indian Territory, under the act of June 10, 1896, should have been confined to a review of the action of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes upon the record in each case and should not have extended to a trial de novo of the question of citizenship. These sections authorized the two nations jointly, or either of said nations acting separately and making the other a party defendant, by a bill in equity filed in the citizenship court, to bring a suit for the purpose of testing the validity of all such decisions of the United States courts. It further provided that 10 persons admitted to citizenship or enrollment by the United States courts, with notice to but one of said nations, should be made defendants to a suit as representatives of the entire class of persons similarly situated. In other words, it authorized the bringing of a test suit, and provided that in the event said citizenship judgments or decisions were annulled or vacated, any party thereto, within 90 days thereafter, by a written application, might have his case transferred to the citizenship court by the court where the judgment was entered and that the citizenship court should have jurisdiction therein as if no judgment or decision had been rendered by the United States court. It was provided that the judgment of the citizenship court should be final.

This act provided that it should not be effective until submitted to and ratified by a vote of the two nations, but exception was made as to sections 31, 32, and 33, creating the citizenship court, but which became effective upon the passage and approval of the act.

Immediately following the passage of the act ratifying the agreement of 1902, the judges authorized to be appointed to constitute the citizenship court were appointed, as follows: Spencer Adams, of North Carolina; Henry S. Foote, of California; and Walter L. Weaver, of Ohio. Judge Foote appears to have been appointed upon the recommendation of Senator Stewart, who was then chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and Judge Adams, on the recommendation of Senator Pritchard, of North Carolina. Judge Foote was the brother-in-law of Senator Stewart. The law creating this court is without legislative parallel; the manner of its enactment was extraordinary, and the authority which it conferred upon the court it created is without precedent in American jurisprudence.

As soon as this court was created and organized, the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish proceeded to bring before it a very large number of claims of "court citizens," and they succeeded in eliminating from the rolls between 3,500 and 4,000 persons. They then claimed a fee of 9 per cent on a basis of $4,800 per person, as provided in the contingent-fee contract made in 1901, before referred to, which had not been approved in accordance with law. (H. Rept. No. 2273, 61st Cong., 2d sess.)

It was reported, and commonly accepted as a fact, that Judges Foote and Adams received a part of the fee paid Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish, and in the case of Adams v. Butler, in which case Adams sued ex-United States Senator Butler, of North Carolina, for libel, it was shown that Adams received $50,000 of the fee. While the committee was considering the evidence upon which the above report was made Judge Adams cut his throat with a razor. Judge Foote died shortly after the fee was paid Foote was a confirmed drunkard.

5. There are many other reasons impossible of explanation in this short statement.

CONGRESS NOW CONSIDERING CLAIMS.

Since the closing of the rolls those whose names appear thereon and the Representatives in Congress from Oklahoma have constantly pressed for legislation directing the Secretary of the Interior to finally wind up the affairs of the tribes and to distribute the funds to those enrolled. This Congress has refused to do, and at each session has considered the enactment of legislation that would place upon the rolls all meritorious cases. The hearings upon such proposed legislation has progressed to the point where it now seems certain that action will be taken at the coming session of Congress. The Secretary of the Interior, on February 12, 1910, recommended that Congress give him authority to add to the rolls two classes of persons who had been omitted. (App. hearing on H. R. 19279, 61st Cong., 2d sess.) And during the last session of Congress the Secretary advised Congress that there were several different classes of cases which should be reheard before the estates were finally wound up, and suggested that Congress give him authority to hear the cases and to add the names to the rolls of those persons found entitled to be placed thereon.

It is our purpose to continue the fight for our clients until definite action is taken by Congress. We have been strong enough at all times to prevent a final settlement and distribution of the property. The opposition now realizes that, in order to get their own shares of the property, they must consent to legislation giving our clients their rights. I have spent a great deal of money and have given all of my time since March 4, 1907, in the work of securing justice for our clients, and I shall continue to do so until some final action is taken by Congress.

ESTIMATED VALUE OF EACH CLAIMANT'S SHARE OF PROPERTY.

As the lands have all either been allotted or ordered to be sold, the persons added to the rolls will have to take their share of the estate in cash, and it has been tentatively agreed that each person so enrolled is to receive $3,000 in cash.

Yours, very truly,

ALBERT J. LEE.

CLAIMS IN CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW ESTATE.

Below is the list of the number of persons claiming a share of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal estates, represented by Ballinger & Lee, attorneys, and the basis of their employment.

The value of an individual share in the estate is estimated at $3,000 in cash.

Total of Ballinger & Lee's fee	$3,244,223
Less estimated expense of collection	$150,000
	$3,094,223
Per cent with which assistance was contracted	45
Estimated cost of assistance	$1,392,400
Net fee	$3,094,223
Less cost of assistance	$1,392,400
Net fee to Ballinger & Lee	$1,701,823
Net fee to Lee (one-half)	$850,911
Per cent proposed assignment	40
Fee which will go to owners of the 40 per cent to be sold	$340,364

In addition to the above cases, we represent about 10,000 people whose records do not conclusively show that they are entitled to share in the distribution of the property, but if Congress permits proof to be made in these cases, I estimate that at least 3,000 of them will be good. Our fee in these cases is 40 per cent, and in the event of success in the 3,000 cases indicated, my individual fee would approximate $2,065,911. My proposed assignment includes all of these cases.

ALBERT J. LEE.

MASTERSON & MASTERSON, ATTORNEYS AT LAW,
Houston, Tex., October 17, 1912. (Received Apr. 20, 1914.)

To whom it may concern:

I have carefully read the statement of Albert J. Lee, of the law firm of Ballinger & Lee, in his letters of the 17th instant, relating to the claims of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, represented by his firm, and from my own knowledge of the facts, the manner in which the estate of these Indians was administered by officers of the Federal Government, and the steps that are now being taken to protect the interests of the claimants, I know that Mr. Lee's statement is substantially correct. The claims represented by Mr. Lee are meritorious; however, he does not by half set forth the merits of the claims, nor does his statement fully cover the injustice that has been perpetrated upon the class of Indians whom he represents. It would be impossible for him to fully deal with the merits of these claims in a brief letter.

The records in these cases are so plain and so clearly disclose fraud and incompetent administration that I am firmly convinced that Congress will restore the claimants to their rights. I therefore believe that money advanced to Mr. Lee in aid of his cases will return a big profit within the next two years, and that such profits will not be less than a return of $20 for every dollar advanced him.

On the 7th day of this month I furnished $2,000 to Mr. Lee in order to afford him temporary relief in connection with the Indian claims represented by him, and in addition thereto I am subscribing $2,000 to the fund of $16,000 which he is now endeavoring to raise, notwithstanding the fact that I am largely interested in similar claims of the Choctaw Indian descendants.

Of my own knowledge—for I have investigated many of the claims of the clients of Mr. Lee before deciding to invest $4,000 in the enterprise—I know that the claims of the Indians so investigated, whom Messrs. Ballinger & Lee represent, are full of merit. I therefore consider the $2,000 already invested and subscription of $2,000 to be in the nature of a fine speculative investment. It is hoped, and I think reasonably certain, that the Choctaw claimants will be given relief during the coming session of Congress.

These claims do not conflict with the claims handled and represented by the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co., but are in line with them.

Yours, very truly,

H. MASTERSON.

I visited Muskogee, Okla., where I conferred with Commissioner Wright and Supt. Kelsey with reference to persons soliciting contracts from the Indians of Oklahoma, and then proceeded to Poteau, Okla., where I met T. V. Sprinkel, an attorney of that town, whom I learned had been obtaining contracts from certain Indians, and upon interrogating him relative thereto, he stated with apparent frankness that he has been engaged at intervals the past three years in procuring contracts from Choctaw Indians who are interested in what is known as the Glenn-Tucker claim, and that he has not solicited contracts in any other Indian claim; that there are about 700 Choctaw families interested in said claim; and that he has procured contracts from 75 of the leading families interested, and only from those of them with whom he has been acquainted for many years past.

He stated that to meet the expenses incurred by him in executing the contracts and preparing the case he charges each family $10 who employ him, this being the total charge he makes to each family regardless of the number in the family, and that his contracts provide for payment to him of a 25 per cent contingent fee of whatever he may recover for them. He further stated that he has been engaged in this work since 1911, during which time he has made two trips to Washington, D. C., in the interests of his clients, and that up to the present time the total received by him from the 75 families with whom he has contracts amounts to only $129.

He also stated that Webster Ballinger, Walter S. Field, and W. W. Wright, attorneys of Washington, D. C., have a large number of similar contracts with Choctaw Indians.

While at Poteau I learned that a colored man named Robert L. Fortune, of Wilburton, Okla., had been soliciting contracts for Crews & Cantwell from Choctaw freedmen residing in the vicinity of Poteau, and I obtained from Mr. Felix Bird, a notary public of Poteau, one of the contracts, which said Fortune had left with the notary for acknowledgment when the freedman represented therein appeared to execute it, and after concluding my business at Poteau I proceeded to Wilburton, where I met said Robert L. Fortune and interrogated him with reference to the matter.

Said Robert L. Fortune resides in the town of Wilburton, Okla., and bears a good reputation in the community. He stated to me that he is 48 years of age, and was for 16 years, terminating in 1906, a deputy United States marshal for the eastern district of Indian Territory, now a part of Oklahoma, and that about three years ago he was employed by a negro lawyer, named J. Milton Turner, to canvass certain localities in eastern Oklahoma and procure contracts from Choctaw freedmen for Crews & Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.; that said Turner employed two other colored men as subagents in this work, whose names were J. E. Eubanks and H. A. Guess, respectively, and that Turner, in directing the work, maintained an office first at McAlester, Okla., and subsequently at Fort Smith, Ark.; that he (Fortune) procured about 700 contracts for Crews & Cantwell from Choctaw freedmen, including minors, but took no contracts from minors except when executed by legal guardians; that he delivered all of the contracts thus procured by him to J. Milton Turner, who paid him $1.25 for each duly executed contract delivered, and that the contract provided for a 35 per cent contingent fee to Crews & Cantwell.

Said Robert L. Fortune stated that in no instance while engaged in this work did he represent himself as a Government official, but invariably as a subagent of J. Milton Turner, in procuring contracts for Crews & Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.; that H. A. Guess, another of Turner's subagents, who was a negro attorney, then residing at McAlester, Okla., was given a much larger and better territory to operate in than that assigned to him by Turner, in consequence of which, as stated by Fortune, Subagent Guess procured about double the number of contracts that he (Fortune) obtained, and which, with the contracts procured by J. E. Eubanks, another of Turner's subagents, a colored man, and said to be a lawyer, whose field of operation was in the southeastern part of Oklahoma and adjoining territory in Arkansas, and Fortune stated, as an estimate, that about 2,300 contracts were obtained for Crews & Cantwell from Choctaw freedmen by himself and the two other subagents operating under the direction of said J. Milton Turner.

On the 23d ultimo I called upon Mr. Harris Masterson, attorney at law, at his office in the Chronicle Building, Houston, Tex., and had a very pleasant interview with him relative to his connection with certain attorneys engaged in prosecuting Mississippi Choctaw Indian claims, and he was exceedingly courteous throughout our conference.

Mr. Masterson is a very affable gentleman, and stated quite freely his interest in the claims handled by Crews & Cantwell, in which he said he became interested by having the case presented and explained to him by Mr. S. L. Hurlbut, of El Campo, Tex., and that after investigating the matter he concluded to go in on it as a speculative investment, and that he took an active part in promoting the organization of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co. to finance the project.

The organization of said company and financing of the project is set forth on pages 12 and 13 of this report, based upon the statements of Mr. Masterson to me with reference thereto.

Mr. Masterson further stated that he also promoted the raising of a fund for Attorney Albert J. Lee, of Ardmore, Okla., to enable him to continue the prosecution of certain Choctaw-Chickasaw Indian claims that are being handled by Ballinger & Lee, which do not conflict with those handled by Crews & Cantwell.

Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., being frequently referred to in the communications contained in the file of papers furnished me by the Indian Office for use in my investigation, and his name appearing in the correspondence as an active solicitor in obtaining contracts from Mississippi Choctaws, therefore I proceeded to Gulfport, Miss., to meet him.

I reached Gulfport the afternoon of the 27th ultimo, and learning that Mr. Conerly lived out in the country about 3 miles from Gulfport, I got into telephone communication with him and he immediately came in to meet me at the Great Southern Hotel, where we were over three hours in conference, and he returned about 9 o'clock the following morning, accompanied by Henry Wilson and Carl Wilson, two prominent members of the Mississippi Choctaws, and remained until near noon discussing Choctaw matters generally and A. P. Powell particularly.

The said Luke W. Conerly is 73 years of age and a lawyer by profession, but has not practiced in the courts for several years past. He is quite intelligent, bears a good name in the community, and is well spoken of by those who know him. He claims to be a lineal descendant of one of the leading Choctaw families who participated in the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of 1830, and stated that he is now regarded by all the Choctaws living outside of Oklahoma as their captain and recognized leader; also that it was he who first interested Congressman HARRISON, of Mississippi, in Choctaw matters and got him to introduce the bill for reopening the Choctaw rolls; that he had interested United States Senators WILLIAMS and VARDAMAN, of Mississippi, in the Choctaw claim; also Congressman MORGAN of Louisiana, in whose district many Choctaws reside.

I had a very pleasant interview with Harry Wilson, president chief council, Society of Mississippi Choctaws, together with his son, Pearl L. Wilson, secretary of said council, both of whom reside in Gulfport, Miss., and they corroborated substantially the statements of Luke W. Conerly regarding Mississippi Choctaw matters.

Mr. Conerly stated that he assisted A. P. Powell in writing up contracts with Mississippi Choctaws in 1910, when Powell was working on a salary for Crews & Cantwell, and that again in March, 1911, he commenced assisting Powell in writing up contracts for W. B. Matthews, an attorney of Washington, D. C., and for whom Powell procured 2,258 contracts and had charged the claimants $2.50 each for executing. He further stated that he was in Washington, D. C., in February, 1912, and suggested to Mr. Cantwell, who was also in Washington, the advisability of Crews & Cantwell purchasing the Matthews contracts, as Mr. Matthews had never done anything toward furthering the Choctaw case before the committees of Congress or elsewhere, and that Mr. Cantwell was so favorably impressed with the proposition that he authorized him (Conerly) to call upon Attorney Matthews and endeavor to bring about a transfer of his contracts to Crews & Cantwell, which he (Conerly) proceeded to carry out, resulting in Mr. Matthews transferring the 2,258 contracts that were procured in his name to Crews & Cantwell for a cash consideration of $1,300, together with Mr. Matthews retaining a certain per cent interest in the contingent fee provided in the contracts, and that he (Conerly) supervised the legal transfer of said contracts from Matthews to Crews & Cantwell and carried them from Mr. Matthews's office in the Bond Building to Crews & Cantwell's office, then in the Munsey Building.

Mr. Conerly further stated that A. P. Powell in his deal with W. B. Matthews was to receive a certain per cent of the contingent fee provided in the contracts, and in order to eliminate Powell, and that he would have no further interest in these 2,258 contracts, Mr. Cantwell paid Powell $300 in cash; this payment to Powell, as stated by Mr. Conerly, was that he might thus be gotten rid of in a friendly way and with the understanding that he (Powell) was not to return to Mississippi to engage in soliciting contracts with Choctaw or Chickasaw claimants.

Mr. Conerly stated that he was then engaged by Crews & Cantwell to procure contracts for them, and that arrangements were subsequently made by which Powell assisted him for a time, and that during 1912 and early part of 1913 he (assisted by Powell) procured about 1,300 contracts for Crews & Cantwell and turned the same in to them; that Powell then commenced taking contracts in his own name, and his present whereabouts are unknown to Conerly.

Mr. Conerly still further stated that since March, 1913, he has been in the employ of Mr. T. B. Crews, of the firm of Crews & Cantwell, in procuring Choctaw contracts, and had on the 28th ultimo about 1,800 executed contracts all indexed and ready to turn in, thus approximating about 9,558 of this class of contracts controlled by Crews & Cantwell, apart from any they may have obtained through parties whom he (Conerly) has no knowledge. To the above-stated total may be added the 2,300 Freedmen contracts as estimated by Robert L. Fortune, of Wilburton, Okla., who was one of the solicitors obtaining contracts from freedmen for Crews & Cantwell.

Mr. Conerly stated to me that he had obtained contracts from Mississippi Choctaws residing in 15 different States and that there are now so many influential persons interested in this claim that he has great hope of the early enactment of legislation directing the reopening of the Choctaw and Chickasaw rolls.

With reference to the representations made and methods adopted by A. P. Powell in obtaining contracts from Mississippi Choctaw applicants, Mr. Conerly stated that he had been associated with Powell at intervals, from 1910 to the early part of 1913, in writing up contracts for Choctaw claimants, and that during all that period he had never heard Powell represent himself as a Government official; on the contrary, had often heard him tell applicants that he was in no way connected with the Government, but that the impression prevailed among the people in general that Powell represented some high authority in canvassing for and executing the contracts he was obtaining; that he never heard Powell state that he was a lawyer, but knows that the impression prevailed in general that he was an attorney.

Mr. Conerly stated that he has not met Powell during the past year and did not know where he is at the present time, but had heard that he is still engaged in soliciting contracts from Choctaw claimants, taking the contracts in his own name on a 20 per cent contingent fee and charging each applicant $2.50 for executing their papers, and he (Conerly) expressed the belief that Powell has realized several thousand dollars through the $2.50 fee invariably received by him from each of the many claimants from whom he obtained contracts since severing his connection with Crews & Cantwell in 1911.

Mr. Conerly remarked with reference to A. P. Powell that he regarded him as a shrewd individual who made a good impression upon persons meeting him casually, but that from having acquired a very thorough knowledge of Powell's characteristics, he (Conerly) would not wish to be associated with him in any business transaction.

As pertinent in the premises, I transmit herewith as "Exhibit B" copy of statement of said Luke W. Conerly, made under oath to Special Indian Agent W. W. McConihe at Jackson, Miss., on April 26, 1911; the original of which I submitted to Mr. Conerly at Gulfport, Miss., on the 28th ultimo and which he verified as true and a correct statement of matters therein referred to up to the time the said statement was made and sworn to by him.

There is also transmitted herewith as "Exhibit C" letter of Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., addressed to me under date of 17th instant, to which is attached a printed circular of Crews & Cantwell, dated February 16, 1912, accompanied by printed copy of an affidavit of A. P. Powell, dated November 6, 1911, which has reference to the discontinuance of A. P. Powell by Crews & Cantwell and the employment by them of said Mr. Conerly to continue the work of procuring contracts from Choctaw claimants who desired to be represented by Crews & Cantwell.

I also transmit, as "Exhibit D," copy of affidavit of said A. P. Powell, asknowledged at Jackson, Miss., by W. W. McConihe, special United States Indian agent, on April 27, 1911, wherein Powell states that he took about 4,000 applications and made no charge for them, after which he charged applicants $1.25 each; that he made this charge because the money that had been advanced by Crews, Cantwell & Hurlbut was exhausted; that he sent all these claims he was making a charge for to Crews & Cantwell; that he took about 100 applications at Monticello, Miss., for Crews & Cantwell and charged $2.50 each there; that he took a few names at Biloxi, Miss., and charged $1.25 for each applicant there, and that these claims were for Crews & Cantwell; that he also visited Meridian, Miss., and took about 88 applications there for Crews & Cantwell, but for which no charge was made; and that he had taken no applications for Crews & Cantwell after his association with Matthews (meaning Attorney W. B. Matthews, of Washington, D. C.).

From the foregoing statements of Powell in his said affidavit he doubtless took contracts for Crews & Cantwell from approximately 4,200 claimants, as stated on page 13 of this report, and also as shown on page 14 hereof, by copy of Mr. C. B. Moling's letter of June 12, 1911, to Hon. W. L. Dechant, of Middletown, Ohio, which, with the 2,258 contracts taken by Powell for W. B. Matthews and subsequently transferred to Crews & Cantwell, and as stated by Luke W. Conerly (assisted by Powell), 1,300 turned into Crews & Cantwell during 1912 and early part of 1913 (see p. 37 of this report), together with about 1,800 additional contracts which Mr. Conerly has recently procured and ready to turn in to Mr. Crews (see also p. 37 of this report), approximates 9,558 of this class of contracts on a 30 per cent contingent fee, controlled by Crews & Cantwell and their associates of the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co., and which, with about 2,300 contracts obtained for Crews & Cantwell from freedmen on a 35 per cent contingent fee, as stated by Robert L. Fortune (see pp. 30–32 of this report), brings the number of claimants represented by them up to 11,858, approximately.

I transmit herewith five forms of blanks used in executing these contracts. "Exhibit E" being the form used by A. P. Powell in procuring contracts for Crews & Cantwell while working on a salary for them. "Exhibit F" was the form used by said Powell while procuring contracts for W. B. Matthews. "Exhibit G" is the form now being used by A. P. Powell in taking contracts in his own name. "Exhibit H" is the form used by Luke W. Conerly in writing up contracts for T. B. Crews. "Exhibit I" was the form used by the three subagents of J. Milton Turner in procuring contracts from Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen for Crews & Cantwell, and "Exhibit J" contains copies of five notices circulated by A. P. Powell in soliciting contracts; also specially prepared press dispatches for distribution, with the evident object of thus arousing enthusiasm in the Mississippi Choctaw matter.

In conclusion I desire to state that from a careful perusal of the numerous letters of claimants from whom A. P. Powell had obtained contracts seeking information with reference thereto, as contained in the file of papers furnished me by the Indian Office for reference in this investigation, together with my having interrogated numerous persons as to the representations made to claimants by Powell and other solicitors, it appears that Powell did not represent himself as an official of the Government nor of the Choctaw Nation, and thus therefore avoided violating the statutes in that respect, notwithstanding which, as stated by many persons, the impression undoubtedly prevailed, especially among the more ignorant, that he was a lawyer and represented the Government in some manner in soliciting contracts from Choctaw claimants.

Many persons whom I interrogated regarding the matter asserted that Powell had invariably denied being in any way connected with the Government and was only endeavoring to get the rolls reopened, that the unenrolled Choctaws might receive their rightful shares, which, as stated by him, would be 320 acres of land and about $2,500 in cash to each claimant, less 30 per cent contingent fee to the attorneys.

I return herewith the file of papers furnished me by the Indian Office for reference in this investigation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JAMES MCLAUGHLIN, Inspector.

GULF COAST LAND & INVESTMENT CO.,
STATE BANK BUILDING,
El Campo, Tex., March 8, 1911.

A. P. POWELL,
Bay St. Louis, Miss.

DEAR SIR: Your letter addressed to Mr. Hurlbut, under date of March 6, has just reached us, and as Mr. Hurlbut is away from the office at this time and as you seem to have a wrong idea of the amount that has been spent for contracts, or rather for the actual expense of taking contracts up to the present time, we think it advisable to supply you with the figures, as shown on our books, for the money already paid out for field work, for the actual expense of taking the contracts, not to say anything of that used by Crews & Cantwell, in getting ready for proving up.

Powell has received, to cover expenses, to date	$2,006.02
Powell has received salary for taking contracts	900.00
Nickols has received for helping in taking Oklahoma contracts	125.00
Turner has received for helping in taking Oklahoma contracts	165.00
Hurlbut has been to an expense in going to Oklahoma and taking contracts there	327.00
Or there has been a total spent on taking contracts of	3,523.02

So you will see that, instead of as you say, when you make the statement that you have used only $1,800 yourself you have really used $2,906.02, and this does not include the $65 given you by Cantwell while you were in Washington the last time. And you will see by this that Mr. Hurlbut was exactly right when he stated that about $7,000 has already been spent.

Mr. Hurlbut will no doubt answer the part of your letter where you refer to his paying you $122 when he returns to the office, and I think this matter will be fixed up between you and him in a satisfactory manner, as he wishes to do exactly what is right by you.

Yours, very truly,

L. S. HURLBUT.

STATEMENT OF MR. LUKE WARD CONERLY.

Mr. Luke Ward Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., station "A," made the following statement to Special Agent McConihe at Jackson, Miss., April 26, 1911, under oath:

"I know A. P. Powell. He is engaged in writing up Choctaw claims in Mississippi. I am working with Mr. Powell now. Have been with him at Tylertown, Pike County, Bay St. Louis, and I am now engaged at McComb City, Pike County. I was not with him all the time at Bay St. Louis. I have been present when large numbers of persons appeared before Mr. Powell, and I never heard him say he was a Government official or agent, or make any statement that could lead others to think so.

"I met Powell about July and asked him what he was doing, and he said he was getting up claims for Mississippi Choctaws under the treaty of 1830. I understood that he had been before Congress with the claims. He said that Crews & Cantwell were getting up the claims to present to Congress, the courts, or the department. Powell said he was getting the claims for that firm. I do not know what he gets out of it. I have never heard Powell say that he was representing the Government, nor have I ever heard anyone say that they heard or was told by Powell that he was a United States official, or was representing the Government. At Bay St. Louis he was making no charges at first for his work. Powell required every applicant to show up his ancestry.

"At Bay St. Louis he ran out of blanks and had some more printed, and afterwards charged them $1.25, including notary fee. Powell sent me to Tylertown to work there getting up claims, and I made a charge of $2.50 for each application written up, and paid him $1 for blanks. I wrote up about 150 applications. The charge was to cover expenses. I represented to the people that they were entitled to put in claims against the Government under the provisions of the treaty of 1830, subject to such legislation by Congress as might be determined, and that they would have to enter into a contract if they wanted to put in a claim on a 30 per cent contingent fee, as shown by the contract with Crews & Cantwell, who were the lawyers having charge of the matter, who would present the claims to Congress. I have been at McComb City working up claims since March 21, and making a charge of $2.50 for each application. I pay Powell $1 for a set of blanks of two, and keep $1.25 and pay the notary 25 cents. I am taking all these applications in the name of William B. Matthews, of Washington, D. C. Last December 19 I closed at Tylertown and went to Bay St. Louis and brought him all the applications I had left. These were the last I wrote up for Crews & Cantwell. I wrote no more after that until about March 13, when I met him at Columbia, where he was writing up claims for W. B. Matthews. He gave me to understand that he no longer represented Crews & Cantwell, but gave me no reason for the change. He gave me 100 sets of blanks to take to McComb and open an office there. Our agreement was that I should write 25 claims and send them to him with the $25. I have sent him 50 contracts and $50. I was not at Jackson with Mr. Powell. I made $1.25 on each application at McComb. I tell the people this is for my expenses."

I certify that the above statement was made to me under oath.

W. W. MCCONIHE,
Special Indian Agent.

EXHIBIT C.

GULFPORT, MISS., June 17, 1911.

Maj. JAMES MCLAUGHLIN,
Inspector, Indian Office, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: While you were in Gulfport I promised you I would send you a circular sent out by Crews & Cantwell from Washington in reference to A. P. Powell and also my employment by them in February, 1912. You will note that during the engagement of myself by Crews & Cantwell, in which Mr. Masterson was concerned, I was forbidden to charge even a notary fee against those who appeared before me.

Mr. Masterson refusing after the 1st of February, 1913, to furnish any more money to cover my expenses, I took contracts during that month for that firm at my own expense. After February, 1913, say, 1st of March, 1913, I entered into an agreement with Thomas B. Crews to take contracts in his name, he to cover my expenses, except I reserved the right under the Mississippi laws to charge my notary fee of 50 cents each against those able to pay, and I have made it a rule not to charge a widow or a woman dependent on her own resources for a support, nor a cripple, nor anyone else not able to pay the 50 cents notary fee.

Not being allowed any traveling money in 1912 by Crews & Cantwell and Mr. Masterson, in some instances, in order to save the expense of coming to Gulfport, where there were groups of claimants, they volunteered to cover my expenses to their neighborhoods and return. In no instance whatever have I made a charge against persons putting in claims through me; neither have I appointed any subagent, nor allowed anyone, if I could help it, to charge for making out proof and contracts for others where I furnished the blanks, but I can not say this was not done in some instances without my knowledge.

I have always been careful to explain the situation of our case before the Committee on Indian Affairs, as I was present at the opening of the case before the subcommittee, February, 1912, and understood the situation, and have tried to impress upon the minds of all that the rolls could not be opened; nor could the Secretary of the Interior do anything without the enactment of a law to authorize it; and especially have I urged people not to annoy the Interior Department, nor our lawyers and Congressmen, with letters—to be patient and wait.

So anxious have our people been to get their claims in and to secure their rights that they would willingly have paid me a cash fee for the work of getting up their ancestral records and proof and preparing their papers for their attorneys, and I could have reaped thousands of dollars in the last two years; but, instead, I have expended a thousand dollars of my own earnings going to them to do the work for them free of charge, besides money furnished me by my associates and employers, Crews & Cantwell. Knowing the hard contest before us in Congress on account of powerful opposition, I was opposed to the charge of a petty fee against the claimants when their attorneys were doing their work for a contingent fee subject to modification and approval of the Secretary. By a special arrangement with Mr. Cantwell and also with Thomas B. Crews I own a number of contracts in my own right, taken in the name of Crews & Cantwell, and I am trying, and have been all the time, to conform to my instructions from them as outlined in the circular inclosed sent out by them in February, 1912.

Yours, sincerely and truly, LUKE W. CONERLY.

OFFICE OF CREWS & CANTWELL, 420 MUNSEY BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1912.

To the Mississippi Choctaws:

We inclose herewith a copy of an affidavit made by A. P. Powell, which explains itself. The occasion for sending this affidavit to you and for the statement which follows arises by reason of the fact that all relations between A. P. Powell and the firm of Crews & Cantwell are now severed.

A short history of our relations with him may not be improper. In the month of May, 1910, Mr. Cantwell had some business before the Committee on Indian Affairs with relation to citizenship claims in the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribe, and made an argument before the committee on that day. At the conclusion of his argument, Powell made to the committee a statement of his claim as a Mississippi Choctaw. (A copy of the statement of Mr. Powell made at that time is herewith inclosed for your information.) Mr. Cantwell had had no occasion to investigate the claims of the Mississippi Choctaws prior to that time, but upon a casual examination of the matter he became impressed with the idea that there was much more foundation for the claim of rights of the Mississippi Choctaws than had been stated by Mr. Powell before the committee, and upon a full investigation he became convinced that the claim of rights of the Mississippi Choctaws was well founded, and thereupon our firm employed Powell upon a salary to go to Mississippi and secure contracts for us and in our name as attorneys to represent the claimants. Powell gave us to understand at that time that the number of claimants would be about 2,000, and the money was provided for all the expense of taking that number of contracts. There were many more claimants than we were led to believe existed, and after nearly 3,000 contracts had been taken the money provided for that purpose became exhausted. Mr. Cantwell requested Powell, who was then in Washington, to return to Mississippi and stop the work of taking contracts until arrangements could be provided for funds to pay the expenses of taking more contracts, and Powell was paid his expenses to return to Mississippi. Powell at that itme suggested to Mr. Cantwell that the claimants would pay the expenses themselves, but as no bill had been introduced for the relief of the Mississippi Choctaws, and as it was uncertain at that time whether any legislation would be enacted, Mr. Cantwell felt that to charge claimants for making out the papers, or to permit them to pay the cost of doing so, might cause the enemies of the Mississippi Choctaws to designate the efforts to get them together as a scheme of graft for these fees, and our firm was not willing to have the cause injured by permitting any occasion for such charges. Powell then went to Mr. W. B. Matthews, a lawyer of Washington, D. C., and represented to Mr. Matthews that there were a large number of claimants in Mississippi who were willing to pay for writing up their contracts, provided they could get a lawyer to represent them.

Mr. Matthews consented to represent them in the event that Powell could secure the contracts, and quite a number of contracts were taken by Powell in the name of W. B. Matthews under this arrangement, the claimants paying a fee for writing the contracts. The firm of Crews & Cantwell had absolutely no connection with this whatever, and during all this period Powell was not in our employ and not in anywise connected with us. During all this time, however—that is, while Powell was taking contracts for Mr. Matthews—no contracts were taken for us or in our name, although we were doing all the work of preparing the law governing the case of the Mississippi Choctaws. Powell had up to this time still retained a contingent interest in the fee which might be eventually recovered by us, and desiring to eliminate him from all connection with our contracts, he was paid the sum of $2,400 in cash and he then relinquished all interest, contingent or otherwise, in the contracts which he had secured for us. This payment was in addition to the sum of $150 per month and his expenses, which had been fully paid him during the time he was taking contracts for us. Later—that is, within the last two months—Mr. Matthews, having then investigated the matter, became convinced that we were in a better position to present the case of the Mississippi Choctaws and to handle their interests than anyone else, transferred all the contracts which had been secured in his name to us and substituted our names as attorneys in accordance with the power given him by each individual contract.

From the beginning of this work we have been entirely willing to give Powell all the credit to which he may be entitled by reason of the fact that, without knowing upon what legal ground the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws depended, he remained in Washington, almost friendless and alone (up to the time that he met Mr. Cantwell), insisting that he, as a Mississippi Choctaw, had some rights which had been disregarded. We have always regarded Powell as the instrument of Providence in keeping alive the claim of at least one Mississippi Choctaw after the closing of the rolls in 1907 up to the time when the work was commenced at our expense in Mississippi. For his energy after his return to Mississippi in keeping up the interest of the people there in their rights (although he was paid therefor a much higher salary than he had ever earned before in his life), we have always been willing to concede him full credit and honor. Unfortunately, however, Powell now seems to have the impression that he is a lawyer, that he should direct this campaign, and he has been particularly restless and sensitive about the few mild criticisms which we have indulged in regarding certain misrepresentations which he had ignorantly made to the people in Mississippi.

Some two weeks ago we engaged Powell upon a salary to go back to Mississippi to assist Mr. Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., in taking such contracts as might still be obtainable from claimants, with the express provision that Powell and Conerly should be paid a salary and that no charge should be made the claimants. While we do not regard it as anything improper for the claimants to pay the expenses necessarily incident to making contracts for the protection of their rights, yet, having defrayed all the expenses of taking contracts for us before and desiring to prevent any reflection upon the agitation for those rights as being a means by which a petty profit might be made, we have steadily opposed the idea of taking any contracts except at our own expense.

A telegram has just been received from Powell in Mississippi saying that "Our deal is off." Owing to his peculiar impulsive disposition, we are led to fear that he may be indulging in some misrepresentation as to what is now being done in Washington, and that he contemplates some arrangement by which he may continue to charge claimants for taking their contracts as he had heretofore done with the Matthews contracts.

We desire to say to the claimants that a bill for their full and adequate relief has been introduced in the lower House by Mr. HARRISON, of Mississippi; that all the members of the Mississippi delegation and Mr. Wickliffe, of Louisiana, are enthusiastically supporting the bill; and that Congressman HARRISON and Mr. Cantwell are now engaged in making arguments before the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs in Congress, making a full presentation of the case, and that everything is being done that can be done for the relief of these claimants.

Mr. Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., who is himself a Mississippi Choctaw claimant, will return to Mississippi from Washington in a few days, and any of your friends or relatives who are not now represented by us who desire attorneys to represent them may procure blank contracts and blank memoranda of evidence from Mr. Conerly. All those who apply to him at Gulfport, Miss., will have the memorandum of their evidence filled and the contracts prepared and acknowledged without charge, and upon giving him the preliminary information by mail, the papers will be prepared by him and returned to you at your home in the event that you can not get to Gulfport. In case the papers are acknowledged at your own home, however, the claimant would be expected to pay the notary fee, which, in any event, would not be more than 50 cents.

We repeat we have never had any desire to take away from Powell the credit for whatever work he has done. He is in the habit of looking upon himself as the "father" of the Mississippi Choctaws. We have been reliably informed that Powell has heretofore represented throughout Mississippi that he was the attorney who presented this matter before Congress. In order to gratify his vanity we had inserted in the first contracts a recognition of Powell's services, but the copy of the statement and the only statement which Powell has ever made before any committee of Congress is herewith inclosed, from which each claimant can easily determine for himself that if the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws had depended upon Powell's efforts alone, they would not have gotten very far toward being recognized. The statement itself shows that Powell did nothing except call attention to his own claim, and a comparison of his statement with the voluminous brief of Mr. Cantwell shows how imperfectly even his own rights were stated. Whatever Mr. Powell may do can not affect the rights of the claimants. Their rights will be fully protected in any event, and this letter is sent you only for the purpose of thoroughly acquainting you with the situation in order to prevent the possibility of any wrong impression being created in regard to your claim.

CREWS & CANTWELL.

STATE OF MISSOURI, City of St. Louis:

A. P. Powell, upon his oath, deposes and says that in the month of May, 1910, at the city of Washington, D. C., he was employed by the firm of Crews & Cantwell to secure contracts for them for their employment as attorneys by persons claiming rights as Mississippi Choctaws under the treaty of 1830; that his instructions from Mr. Cantwell were to write the contract of no person who was not a bona fide claimant under said treaty, and to write contracts with no person except those who had record or evidence by tradition of their pedigree as a descendant of a person entitled to lands under the treaty of 1830; that he was paid a salary of $150 per month and all of his expenses, and had a contract for a contingent interest in the fees that might be recovered by Crews & Cantwell; that all of the expenses of securing about 3,800 contracts, including the acknowledgments, were paid by the firm of Crews & Cantwell, and that no charges were made by him against any of the claimants for any of his services in writing contracts for Crews & Cantwell; that after Crews & Cantwell stopped taking contracts the affiant was besieged by other persons who had had no opportunity up to that time to have their contracts written, and that affiant, upon his own responsibility, took contracts with about 300 persons, in the name of Crews & Cantwell, charging the applicants a fee of $1.50 for each contract; that after communicating to the firm of Crews & Cantwell the fact that these last 300 had been taken, for which this charge had been made, Mr. Cantwell first declared that, as they had made no charges for the other contracts, they did not want these contracts at all, but realizing that this would put the claimants in a bad position and that their rights might be neglected, the contracts were finally accepted by Crews & Cantwell; that Mr. Cantwell instructed this affiant to return the $1.50 charge made by this affiant, and that Crews & Cantwell then paid this affiant his expenses while taking these last-mentioned contracts; that over 3,800 contracts had been taken prior to that time, for which no charges had been made; that under no circumstances and at no time did Crews & Cantwell, or any one of them, authorize or request that any contracts be taken for which a charge should be made, and that the only contracts taken in their name for which charges were made were as above detailed and under the above circumstances, which was after Crews & Cantwell had notified this affiant that they did not wish to go further on taking contracts.

That at no time and under no circumstances did Crews & Cantwell, or any one of them, ever instruct this affiant to take the contract of any person who did not claim to be a lineal descendant of an Indian entitled to lands under the treaty of 1830.

Affiant further states that he has taken no contracts with full-blood negroes; that until within the last six weeks neither Crews nor Cantwell had any knowledge of the large number of persons with negro blood in Mississippi claiming such rights, although Mr. Cantwell had stated to this affiant that he did not regard the presence of negro blood as a sufficient bar to destroy the legal right of one who had undoubted Indian blood and is an undoubted descendant of an Indian claiming rights under the treaty of 1830, although Mr. Cantwell had stated to this affiant on several occasions that the fact that one had negro blood would make it very difficult to establish the heirship. This affiant states that out of over 4,000 contracts taken there are not more than 20 per cent who have any negro blood whatever.

Affiant further states that in consideration of the sum of $2,400 paid him in cash, he has relinquished and conveyed to Crews & Cantwell all his contingent right in the fees in the contracts above referred to, and hereby cancels said contract; and that this affiant has no further financial interest in the fees or the contracts made in the name of Crews & Cantwell.

Affiant further states that he has not heretofore assigned his right to a contingent interest in the fees aforesaid to anyone.

JACKSON, MISS., April 27, 1911.

Alex. P. Powell, being first duly sworn by Special United States Indian Agent W. W. McConihe, deposes and says as follows:

I reside at Homer, Okla. My present occupation is getting up claims among the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of 1830. I was first employed by Crews & Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo. I went before the Committee of Indian Affairs in Congress at Washington, April 2, 1910, and they gave me a hearing on the claims of these Indians. Mr. Harry J. Cantwell was present at the hearing, and after I got through my talk with the committee Cantwell came to me and asked me how much money I wanted to take the claims in Mississippi. I said it would take at least $5,000. Cantwell wired S. L. Hulbert, of El Campo, Tex., to come to Washington at once. Hulbert came to Washington and arranged with Cantwell, and Hulbert guaranteed to put up $5,000 for getting the work of the applications.

I first opened an office at 315 Farish Street, Jackson, Miss., and began to take applications. I put an advertisement in the paper at Jackson inviting all persons who were descendants of the Choctaw-Chickasaws under the treaty of 1830 to appear before me and make proof of their rights and descent. I took about 700 applications at Jackson and made no charges to the applicants therefor. I next went to Bay St. Louis and opened an office there near the railroad depot and put an advertisement in the Sea Coast Echo of that city, being the same as I put in the papers at other places. I took about 4,000 applications and made no charge for them. After the 4,000 were registered more applications came in and I charged them $1.25 each. I made this charge because the money that had been advanced by Crews, Cantwell, and Hulbert was exhausted, and they refused to put up any more money for taking applications. This charge by me was to cover expenses of continuing the work of getting applications. I sent all these claims that I was making a charge for to Crews & Cantwell. I went from Bay St. Louis to Washington to see Mr. Cantwell and tried to get Hulbert to put up more money, and Hulbert notified me at Jackson, Miss., that he had put up $7,000, and that we had to take proof of the same, and he was willing to put up the $7,000 for that purpose. He has not put it up yet.

We went to Columbia, Miss., and took about 100 applications there. The contracts that we wrote there were made in the name of William D. Matthews, of Washington, D. C. I have associated myself with Matthews for the reason that Crews & Cantwell said that they had enough claims and that Hulbert would not put up any more money for claims. My agreement was made with Matthews that he was to appear before the committee of Congress with me; and our contract with the applicants was for 20 per cent of all amounts recovered, and not for 30 per cent, as was printed in the contract, which is an error and which has been corrected in the written applications. I went to Monticello and took applications for Crews & Cantwell, and charged $2.50 each there. I took about 100 names there. I took a few names at Biloxi, and charged $1.25 for each applicant there. These claims were for Crews & Cantwell. I also visited Meridian and took about 88 applications there for Crews & Cantwell, but for which no charge was made. I have taken no applications for Crews & Cantwell since my association with Matthews.

I am working at Philadelphia, Miss., now and have taken about 100 applications for Matthews, and am charging $2.50, and the applicants are very willing to pay the amount. I am making this charge because Matthews has put up no money for me and my expenses, and I have to use the money to pay for my clerk hire, office rent, and other expenses in connection with the work of taking applications.

Mr. Luke Conerly is employed by me at McComb City, Miss., to get applications. He charges each applicant $2.50. I get a dollar out of this $2.50 for my expenses and the printing of blanks which I furnish him. I have paid expenses of Conerly out of this money when he was traveling, board bill, telegraphing, and other incidental expenses he has incurred.

No one is working for me in Oklahoma or Arkansas. I do not know J. Eubanks, and he is not associated with me in any way in the work I am doing.

I have never at any time, or to any person, said that I was a Government official in any respect. I have only represented that I am acting and representing my people before Congress, and I am getting up these claims for that purpose.

When at Jackson in June, 1910, I had a circular sent out, and meant to say that I was a representative of my tribe and obtaining applicants for their rights as Choctaws and Chickasaws, but by an error my clerk said that I was a practicing attorney before the committees of Congress. That was not my intention to have it so stated, and I am not responsible for the error.

The contract forms used by me were worded and made up by Crews & Cantwell, and I am not responsible for anything in such wording.

I, Alec P. Powell, do solemnly swear that the foregoing statement was made voluntarily by me, and that it is true in every respect, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAW CONTRACT.

This agreement, made this 5th day of September, 1910, by and between Louis Joseph Ryan, now residing at the town of Biloxi, in the county of Harrison, State of Mississippi, party of the first part, and Thomas B. Crews and Harry J. Cantwell, jointly, parties of the second part, witnesseth:

That, whereas the party of the first part is entitled, as a Mississippi Choctaw or as a descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw, under the laws of the United States, to certain rights in the distribution of the tribal property of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indian Tribe in Oklahoma; and

Whereas the party of the first part has been heretofore denied enrollment or has had no opportunity to make application for proper enrollment in said rolls as a Mississippi Choctaw; and

Whereas it is necessary that the party of the first part shall secure the lawful professional services of attorneys for the purpose of presenting such evidence as the party of the first part may have of his status and right as a Mississippi Choctaw or a descendant of a Mississippi Choctaw, so entitled to the rights aforesaid, and for other necessary legal services in establishing and securing his rights in the premises; and

Whereas the party of the first part is without any means or funds to compensate such attorneys and counsel;

Now, therefore, the premises considered, the parties of the second part jointly agree:

First. To represent the party of the first part as attorneys and counsel in presenting to the Interior Department such lawful evidence as the party of the first part may collect to establish the facts of his pedigree and status, and such other facts as may be necessary to establish the right claimed.

Second. To represent as attorneys the party of the first part in all legal proceedings before any court, commission, or department of the Government of the United States or the State of Oklahoma, wherever and whenever such right may be properly and legally tried.

Third. To present before the committees of Congress proper legal argument in support of the right so claimed or in support of any measure tending to provide a remedy for the right so claimed.

Fourth. To furnish party of the first part necessary information for the purpose of enabling him to select to the best advantage any lands that he may be entitled to by reason of said right.

Fifth. To collect all sums of money, lands, and property that may properly be collected, selected, and received hereafter by reason of said right, and to faithfully pay over and account to said party of the first part for all such sums of money and property after deducting the compensation hereinafter provided for.

In consideration of the premises and the agreement of the parties of the second part as aforesaid, and of services heretofore rendered by them, the party of the first part contracts and agrees to pay and assign, transfer, and convey to the parties of the second part 30 per cent of all sums of money, lands, and property that may be received by reason of the right claimed, and hereby irrevocably appoints the parties of the second part his true and lawful attorneys in fact, to do any and all acts in his name, place, and stead as fully and completely as he might do in person in and about the subject matter of this agreement, and to execute such receipts, discharges, and releases as the party of the first part might lawfully do, hereby ratifying and confirming all that his said attorneys in fact and in law may do in the premises.

The party of the first part hereby revokes all powers of attorney, if any, heretofore made by him to any person or persons whomsoever, touching said rights or interests, and requests that the Interior Department of the United States recognize the parties of the second part as his exclusive agents and attorneys in the premises.

And it is hereby specifically agreed that the appointment herein of Thomas B. Crews and Harry J. Cantwell is joint, and that in the event of the death of either the survivor shall succeed to all rights and benefits of this agreement, and shall perform all of the duties hereunder.

It is further agreed that by reason of the legal services rendered prior to and at the signing of this agreement, in advising the party of the first part as to his legal rights, and in consideration of the services heretofore rendered by A. P. Powell before the committees of Congress in presenting the claims of the class of persons to which the party of the first part belongs, said parties of the second part having compensated said A. P. Powell therefor, and in further consideration of the absolute agreement herein of the parties of the second part to perform the services herein, that the powers herein granted are powers coupled with an interest; and it is agreed that the parties of the second part may jointly designate, substitute, and appoint, in writing, any competent attorney or attorneys at law to assist in the performance of the duties of the parties of the second part hereunder, and to clothe said person or persons with all the powers herein granted to the parties of the second part, the parties of the second part hereby guaranteeing the efficiency and integrity of any and all persons who may be thus appointed, it being distinctly understood that the compensation of such persons for such assistance shall not be paid by the party of the first part.

It is further understood and agreed that, in the event it becomes necessary under any law now existing or hereafter enacted, that this contract shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; then, in that event, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, modify the terms of this contract as to the compensation to be paid the parties of the second part, without invalidating this contract, and said contract as modified by said Secretary of the Interior shall be binding upon the parties hereto, provided always that the compensation fixed by the Secretary of the Interior shall in no event exceed the percentage above stated.

Executed in duplicate.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that I, Alexander P. Powell, a representative of the Choctaw Tribe of Indians now engaged in soliciting contracts with Mississippi Choctaws for services to be rendered in prosecuting their claim before the different branches of the Government, in order to secure for them a reopening of the rolls of those entitled to share in the tribal property belonging to the Choctaw Tribe in the State of Oklahoma, am acting in my individual capacity and for the benefit of myself and those associated with me in this effort to secure the right of said Indians in said property.

I further certify that I am in no manner employed or engaged by the United States Government to solicit any contract with said Indians or perform any duty in connection therein.

Respectfully,

ALEXANDER P. POWELL.

NOTICE TO INDIANS.

This is your last chance in connection with William B. Mathews, attorney at law, Evans Building, Washington, D. C. I am engaged in writing up claims of all Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants who remain in Mississippi after Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty with the United States Government in 1830.

I will remain here for a few days only; I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries; we intend to submit all claims to the Sixty-second Congress, which convenes in Washington, D. C., April 4, 1911. I am Indian and Spaniard, and my grandfather was a signer of the great treaty concluded September 27, 1830.

NOTICE TO INDIANS AND THEIR DESCENDANTS—IN CONNECTION WITH HON. HARRY PEYTON, ROOM 420 BOND BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

This is your last chance to secure benefits under the bill introduced by Hon. PAT HARRISON, of the sixth district of Mississippi, now pending before the Sixty-second Congress, for the relief of Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the treaty of 1830.

I am an Indian and a Spaniard and my grandfather was a signer of the treaty of 1830.

I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries, and I have in my possession a record that will enable you to trace your ancestors back to 1780.

Those with negro blood need not apply.

I will be at ———— Miss., on the —— day of ————, 1912.

(This paper was sent to Indian Office by Mrs. Viola Strickland, of Meridian, Miss., No. 1400 Tenth Avenue, under date of Sept. 16, 1912.)

THIS IS YOUR LAST CHANCE—NOTICE TO THE ONCE MIGHTY TRIBE OF RED MEN WHO ONCE OWNED THIS COUNTRY AND TO THEIR DESCENDANTS.

In connection with Hon. Harry Peyton, room 408, and Hon. Oliver A. Phelps, room 619, Bond Building, Washington, D. C., I am still engaged in writing up all Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty with the United States Government, concluded September 27, 1830.

The treaty of 1830, known as the treaty of "Perpetual friendship," provides that the Indian Territory shall go to the red man and his descendants "as long as water runs and grass grows"; the treaty furthermore provided that our descendants that did not see fit to go to the Territory then, at any time that they may take a notion to come on and join the tribe in the Territory, they shall share in this distribution as long "as water runs and grass grows." If your ancestors were born east of the Mississippi River, call on me; it is possible that some of them may have been at the treaty mentioned above.

I am an Indian and a Spaniard, and my grandfather, Nita, was a signer of the treaty of 1830.

I have in my possession a record of the old aboriginal that will permit you to trace your Indian ancestry back as far as 1780.

All Mississippi Choctaw cases are now pending before Committee on Indian Affairs, Sixty-third Congress, first session, waiting for report and decision. I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries.

Those with negro blood need not apply.

I will be at W. J. Nelson's, 802 Second Street, Lake Charles, La., on September 5.

NOTICE TO MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

In connection with Harry J. Cantwell, Thomas L. Crews, and William B. Matthews, attorneys, of Washington, D. C., I am still engaged in writing up claims for the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty with the United States Government. I am a member of the Choctaw Tribe of Indians, and my grandfather was a signer of the great treaty made September 27, 1830. I will be glad to communicate with any beneficiary at my office in Bay St. Louis, Miss.

"INDIANS" LIVING IN OLD MISSISSIPPI.

"All Mississippi Choctaw Indians and their descendants are asked to meet at the county courthouse next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The object of the meeting is to further the rights contained in the treaty of 1830 between the United States and Choctaws. (Biloxi Herald.)"

To which is answered: Such a meeting as is scheduled as per the above would be "nuts" for some moving-picture company, provided such meeting is attended by all the people who have filed claims as descendants of the tribe of red men known as Choctaws. They are of all shades and color, running from the real Indian to the coal-black, thick-lipped, flat-nosed, kinky-headed negro, with a good sprinkling of whites, in whose veins no one but themselves ever suspected that a drop of Indian blood flowed. But anything goes in this day and generation when the thought of "easy money" presents itself. Uncle Sam's coffers will scarcely be opened for the motley crew, however just may be the claims of some of the pure-bred Choctaws. (Gulf Coast Progress.)

HOUSTON INVESTORS MAY GET MILLIONS FROM INDIAN CLAIM.

A Houston organization, in which more than $2,500,000 is at stake and the hereditary rights of the Choctaw Tribe of Mississippi is the merchandise, has received quite a boost in a telegram received by Judge Harris Masterson. Many Houstonians are interested in the enterprise. The telegram reads as follows:

"Subcommittee report of Friday last was unanimous and recommends admission of all full bloods, also all others who can prove descent from one who either received or should have received patent under fourteenth article, treaty of 1830. Meetings are executive and no arguments being heard."

To those who are not interested in the venture the telegram needs interpretation. It comes from Washington and has to do with a bill introduced by Mr. HARRISON, of Mississippi, in behalf of the admission to enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaw Indians and their descendants to participation in the money and lands belonging to the Choctaw Tribe.

Some time ago Judge Masterson was instrumental in forming an organization to urge the claim of the Choctaw Tribe in a participation of certain lands in the Territories and moneys in the United States Treasury. Many of these Indians were his clients. Going rather deeply into the matter, he banded over 4,000 of these claimants together and became their representative and legal advisor.

Money was needed to carry the enterprise through, and a company was formed. Between 50 and 60 men came into the company, and many of these are prominent Houstonians.

Judge Masterson says that the venture is one which promises tremendous returns for the amount invested by the stockholders, and that he is confident Congress will give assent to the recommendation of the subcommittee.

WOULD RESTORE CHOCTAW INDIAN PENSION BILLS.

[Associated Press.]

WASHINGTON, December 13.

The bill introduced in the House last session by Representative HARRISON, providing reopening of rolls of the Chickasaw-Choctaw Indian Tribes, came up for consideration in the House yesterday. A vote was not reached. In his speech in favor of the bill Mr. HARRISON said, in part:

"The Mississippi Choctaws have been woefully neglected and unmercifully treated. They acquired rights under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830 that the United States Government has never fairly and justly recognized. Every act of Congress passed with respect to the Mississippi Choctaws has violated the spirit and the letter of that article of the treaty.

"The Oklahoma Choctaws were permitted by act of Congress in 1881 to sue the United States Government, in which suit they recovered from the Government $8,000,000 for damages done to the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi. Scheming attorneys, representing the tribe, dictate agreements, suggest, lobby for, and have passed laws that not only make it impossible for the Mississippi Choctaws to be enrolled upon tribal rolls, but through their influence they have actually created courts to prevent or exclude the Mississippi Choctaws from being enrolled. One of the blackest spots in the history of the administration of the Choctaw Nation is the escapades practiced in the citizenship court.

"The Mississippi Choctaw is a part of that great Indian nation which never raised a tomahawk against an American citizen. Thousands of her warriors displayed their heroism under Jackson at New Orleans."

I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a document which shows that a firm of attorneys in St. Louis, known as Cantwell & Crews, employed three negroes, if you please, one named Robert Fortune, one by the name of Turner, a negro as black as your hat, out in St. Louis, and another negro down somewhere in Mississippi by the name of A. P. Powell, to go around with an alleged fictitious roll and make people believe that they were Indians, so that they could get on the rolls. These people explained to them in a casual and plausible way, "If you will sign up this contract, we will enroll you and we will go to Congress and you will get $8,000, less 40 per cent of attorney fees provided for." I can not read carefully in the few minutes allotted me the report of Maj. McLaughlin, one of the oldest Indian inspectors in the United States, but I have it here in my hand, and I state that in the history of this country no such graft was ever sought to be perpetrated on Congress. I know my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is referred to frequently all through this brief as being the man who introduced their bills, the man who helped them, does not sanction this irregular business; but whatever he may assert for himself, whatever I may assert in his behalf, the fact remains——

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will not take up much time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not. I was just going to say that that investigation was made at the instance of the Louisiana and Mississippi Congressmen, asking the department to make that investigation.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I understand who brought it about, but what it brought forth you did not ask for.

Mr. HARRISON. It is a state of fact; the statement is true.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, it will raise every hair on every head in this House if you will listen to this report. I often heard before I came to Congress that there lurked around these galleries and these halls crooked, scheeming, shyster attorneys who were trying to rob not only the Indians but Congress as well. I hold in my hand positive proof of that. Listen to this letter from one of the attorneys who expects to profit by this amendment. This letter shows what is going on:

OCTOBER 17, 1912.

Mr. HARRIS MASTERTON,
Houston, Tex.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Webster Ballinger and I represent some 13,000 persons who claim a right to the tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma. Of the above number of persons represented by us there are some 3,738 who are conclusively, as shown by the Government records, entitled to share in the distribution of the tribal property. An individual share is estimated at $3,000 cash——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield me five minutes more? I do not want to leave part of this letter unread and uncommented upon.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. FERRIS. Can I get a little more time from the gentleman from Minnesota? I feel this matter ought to be brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. MILLER. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for seven minutes additional.

Mr. FERRIS. I want the House to listen to this. Here is what you read about in story papers here in fact. Such a revelation can scarcely be fathomed or understood. Further quoting from Attorney Lee's letter:

We represent these people under contract providing for a contingent fee of from 12½ to 40 per cent.

Think of that—ranging from 12½ to 40 per cent. But just observe what else these thrifty, patriotic attorneys say in their letters of prospectus. Their hearts fairly bleed for the Choctaw. I continue to read:

From 12½ to 40 per cent of the value of each share. I am attaching a statement showing the value of our fees. The statement also shows the amount of said fees we have already contracted for. You will observe that my individual share of said fees will amount to $850,911, based upon the cases I consider certain, and that if we succeed in one-third of the cases that are uncertain, or rather if we succeed in enrolling 3,000 out of the 10,000 doubtful cases, my individual share of the fee would be $2,055,911.

Is this House going to sit here and put an amendment into this bill to override the Committee on Indian Affairs, an amendment that was put in on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman there pause for an interruption?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not do so; the gentleman has 40 minutes of his own. This prospectus, which is a part of the Maj. McLaughlin report, says:

I am in urgent need of funds—

And this is only one of the group of attorneys representing them. I expect he is in need of funds, but if this Congress does its full duty he probably will still be in need of funds. How patriotically he is interested in the down-trodden Choctaw. I read:

I am in urgent need of funds with which to meet indebtedness incurred in the prosecution of these claims and with which I may be enabled to continue the fight for our clients.

My friends, these attorneys are going around buttonholing people and talking to them in the committee rooms with sobs in their voices for the Choctaws, all the time asserting that they are going to save and conserve the rights, and so forth, of these few Choctaws in Mississippi. What a eulogy my distinguished friend Mr. QUIN passed upon the Mississippi Choctaws, and yet they do not even allow the Choctaws in Mississippi to vote. This letter of these philanthropist attorneys who need money goes on to say:

And I want to raise $16,000.

Yes; money is nice to have. I presume he does need money. He also proceeds to get it by means fair or foul. I read further:

I want to raise $16,000, which I will agree to return with interest, and will assign the people furnishing the money 40 per cent of my individual share of the fee.

You gentlemen of the House have heard before you came here that there had been a lot of graft going on around this Capitol, but you did not believe it, and I did not believe it, and I can now scarcely believe my eyes; but this report from Maj. McLaughlin, of the Indian Service, only a few days old, is based on months of careful study. It is true. It portrays the facts. No one dares deny them. What will you do with them? It goes on:

Estimated upon the cases considered, certain this would return about $22 for every dollar subscribed, and upon the basis of one-third of the uncertain cases going through in addition to those that I consider certain, the estimated returns would be about $120 for every dollar advanced.

Is not that a nice propaganda to flaunt in the face of Congress? And if there were nothing else to convince us, that would be sufficient. Let me read the statement of the basis of estimated fees this one firm would get. This, of course, is only one set of them. Crews & Cantwell will get much more. I again read:

Lee's proposed sale of 40 per cent of his individual shares, or fee, is figured as follows:

Persons	2,051
Value of individual share	$3,000
Total value of shares of 2,051 persons	$6,153,000
Per cent basis of fee	40
Estimated fee	$2,461,200
Persons	487
Value of share	$3,000
Total value of shares of 487 persons	$1,461,000
Per cent basis of fee of Ballinger & Lee	12½
Total estimated fee of Ballinger & Lee for 487 persons	$183,023
Persons	1,200
Ballinger & Lee's fee per person	$500
Total estimated fee for 1,200 persons	$600,000
	$183,023
	$600,000
Total of Ballinger & Lee's fee	$3,244,223
Less estimated expense of collection	150,000
	$3,094,223
Per cent with which assistance was contracted	45
Estimated cost of assistance	$1,392,400
Net fee	$3,094,223
Less cost of assistance	$1,392,400
Net fee of Ballinger & Lee	$1,701,823
Net fee to Lee (one-half)	$850,911
Per cent proposed assignment	40
Fee which will go to owners of the 40 per cent to be sold	$340,364

Now, I very much dislike to call attention to these things; I dislike to say anything that will reflect upon any practicing attorney or anybody else. I would prefer to deal in eulogy with honest and good men who are engaged in the practice of law; but when Maj. McLaughlin, a man who has had many long years of efficient service in the Indian Department, brings to me a report such as this, I must read it, and when read I feel it my duty to present it. I wish these facts were not true. I am sorry to reveal them. I know the House dislikes to hear them or to know of them. However, can we sit and allow the funds of the Indian wards prostituted and devoured by a lot of scheming attorneys? It is time all this business is stopped. It has gone too far already. It is the duty of all of us to frown on this.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman not aware that he or I, either one of us, in a moment's time can write an amendment to any measure that will give relief to the Mississippi Choctaws and that will make all these big millions vanish?

Mr. FERRIS. I know they can not. That has been tried too often, with usual failure. You can not knock out or affect the right of a preexisting contract.

Mr. MILLER. I know they can; and I would be willing to take the contract.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman can do it in his own time. A contract entered into and acknowledged by two witnesses that is not of itself illegal can not be changed in this Congress or in any Congress that will follow. Rights under a preexisting contract can not be changed. And the gentleman may roll that around until he is tired. Now, listen. Let me present a little more of this report:

The total fee of Ballinger & Lee is $3,244,223, from which they deduct $150,000 as an estimate for expenses of collection.

Now, down below he figures out how much net fee Lee & Ballinger will get, which is $1,701,823. I want to know what Congress is doing, and I can not believe that any Member of this House knows what this contract is. Let me read a little further. I want to show you a little more about this.

Down in Mississippi there is one of these negroes by the name of A. P. Powell——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. I thank the gentleman very much. I am under great obligations to him. Down in Mississippi one of these negro agents that is going around gathering up contracts is one A. P. Powell, and I want to show you what he says when he gets his contract. He came to see me several years ago when he himself was trying to be enrolled, and he said, "I'se a Portuguese and Indian." I rubbed my hand over his hair, and he was as much of a burr-headed negro as any that work in these cloakrooms. Here again is McLaughlin's report:

He said that he failed to meet this man Powell, and therefore could not speak of his personal knowledge of him, but he said he had a decided strain of negro blood. I think the ex-chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, Mr. BURKE, knows A. P. Powell, and knows whether he is an Indian or Portuguese or negro. The McLaughlin report also says he was large of stature and prepossessing in appearance—with which I do not agree. He also says in his report that he was shrewd and plausible, and that while in the communities he visited in soliciting contracts he posed as a very important person—you know these negro persons are very important persons if intrusted with a little power—and succeeded in arousing great enthusiasm among the people of the localities canvassed by him, and had thus procured contracts with little or no difficulty from all persons who believed they possessed, or were led by Powell to believe they possessed, any Choctaw or Chickasaw Indian blood.

Maj. McLaughlin, one of the oldest inspectors in the Indian Service, further says:

From what I was told by reputable persons at Lake Charles and Baton Rouge, La., and Gulfport, Miss., it would appear that said Powell was interested chiefly in procuring a large number of contracts, regardless of the ancestry of the applicants.

Listen to that. He picked up every dirty-faced mixed breed in the country that had even heard of an Indian, secured a contract from him, got fees out of him, and then began to try to get money out of our Oklahoma Indians for him. Here is our friend HARRISON, one of the most distinguished Members of this House, who finds himself mixed up with this band of juggling attorneys, who are trying to get $6,000,000 of fees out of an Indian tribe. This is but another case of old dog Tray.

The McLaughlin report says further:

It would appear that said Powell was interested chiefly in securing a large number of contracts, regardless of the ancestry of applicants, as Mr. Luke W. Conerly, of Gulfport, Miss., told me that to his personal knowledge Powell obtained contracts from several families, the ancestry of whom, as supplied by Powell, was absurdly erroneous.

Listen to that. Maj. McLaughlin says that Powell knows that these people that Powell contracted with were people whose ancestry was absurdly erroneous. Further quoting from the report:

It is also alleged that Powell took contracts from any persons claiming to have Indian blood, and from many who had never claimed to possess Indian blood until told by Powell that they were descendants of Indians who were parties to the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty of 1830, and therefore entitled to certain benefits under that treaty.

Mr. C. R. Cline, an attorney of Lake Charles, La., and Hon. Isaac C. Boyd, of Leesville, La.——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman give me sufficient time to finish this extract from the report?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. FERRIS. The report says:

They both informed me that there are about 300 persons living in the neighborhood of Kinder, Allen Parish, La., who are of mixed descent, being of French, Spanish, Portuguese, and negro blood, with a very few of them possibly possessing some Indian blood, and the name "Red Bone"—

This negro, A. P. Powell, undoubtedly got a lot of Portuguese negroes, half-breeds, and dirty-faced whelps and hitched them together and told them that they belonged to the "Red Bone" Tribe and that he could get them so many thousand dollars out of Oklahoma if they would sign up, and so forth. The report further says:

The name "Red Bone" was given those of them who were supposed to have any Indian blood; that prior to Powell's visit to Kinder soliciting contracts with Indians it was regarded a great insult to be called a "Red Bone," thus classing them as of Indian blood; but a number of them were advised by Powell that they were of Choctaw descent, as shown by a book which he possessed, and by which he traced their ancestry, as eligible to enrollment, and it is alleged that he thus obtained contracts from all of them.

In the best of good humor, I do not know whether my good friend HARRISON has joined the "Red Bones" or not.

No, gentlemen, this whole matter is wrong in law, wrong in equity, wrong in good morals, wrong in fact. A lot of unprofessional attorneys, in their mad quest for riches which do not belong to them, have employed negro agents, negro runners, and people who are without responsibility, who act without regard for truth and justice, to go among the ignorant, defenseless people who have long ago squandered their patrimony and who, from long separation from the Indians, have developed into half-breeds—and in fact and truth many of them are not Indians at all—and get them to sign contracts they could not fathom or understand. It will be observed from the preceding report read into the RECORD that these designing attorneys were even able to capitalize their contracts and to raise large sums of money upon them. One firm was able to secure at least $25,000 and another $16,000 through the sale of stock based on these contracts, and the whole proceeding is founded on irregular transactions in an effort to secure rights for a people who are barred by treaties, acts of Congress, laches, court decisions, and so forth.

Before closing my remarks I want to again recur to this man Powell, who gathered up 4,200 of these contracts, and who, as an agent of these attorneys, is the cause of bringing about most of this abnormal activity. I want you to observe the following notices, which I shall read and which were printed in the different newspapers of the communities wherein these ignorant, dependable, mixed breeds lived, so that the House may know just what is going on. They are as follows:

NOTICE TO INDIANS.

This is your last chance in connection with William B. Matthews, attorney at law, Evans Building, Washington, D. C. I am engaged in writing up claims of all Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty with the United States Government in 1830.

I will remain here for a few days only; I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries, we intend to submit all claims to the Sixty-second Congress, which convenes in Washington, D. C., April 4, 1911. I am Indian and Spaniard, and my grandfather was a signer of the great treaty concluded September 27, 1830.

I am an Indian and a Spaniard, and my grandfather was a signer of the treaty of 1830.

I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries, and I have in my possession a record that will enable you to trace your ancestors back to 1780.

Those with negro blood need not apply.

THIS IS YOUR LAST CHANCE—NOTICE TO THE ONCE MIGHTY TRIBE OF RED MEN WHO ONCE OWNED THIS COUNTRY AND TO THEIR DESCENDANTS.

In connection with Hon. Harry Peyton, room 408, and Hon. Oliver A. Phelps, room 619 Bond Building, Washington, D. C., I am still engaged in writing up all Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty with the United States Government, concluded September 27, 1830.

The treaty of 1830, known as the treaty of "Perpetual friendship," provides that the Indian Territory shall go to the red man and his descendants "as long as water runs and grass grows"; the treaty furthermore provided that our descendants that did not see fit to go to the Territory then, at any time that they may take a notion to come on and join the tribe in the Territory, they shall share in this distribution as long "as water runs and grass grows." If your ancestors were born east of the Mississippi River, call on me; it is possible that some of them may have been at the treaty mentioned above.

I am an Indian and a Spaniard, and my grandfather, Nita, was a signer of the treaty of 1830.

I have in my possession a record of the old aboriginal that will permit you to trace your Indian ancestry back as far as 1780.

All Mississippi Choctaw cases are now pending before Committee on Indian Affairs, Sixty-third Congress, first session, waiting for report and decision. I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries.

Those with negro blood need not apply.

I will be at W. J. Nelson's, 802 Second Street, Lake Charles, La., on September 5.

NOTICE TO MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

In connection with Harry J. Cantwell, Thos. L. Crews, and William B. Matthews, attorneys of Washington, D. C., I am still engaged in writing up claims for the Choctaw-Chickasaw Indians and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the Dancing Rabbit Creek treaty with the United States Government. I am a member of the Choctaw Tribe of Indians and my grandfather was a signer of the great treaty made September 27, 1830. I will be glad to communicate with any beneficiary at my office in Bay St. Louis, Miss.

A. P. POWELL,
Seabrook Hotel, Bay St. Louis, Miss.

"INDIANS" LIVING IN OLD MISSISSIPPI.

"All Mississippi Choctaw Indians and their descendants are asked to meet at the county courthouse next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The object of the meeting is to further the rights contained in the treaty of 1830 between the United States and Choctaws. (Biloxi Herald.)"

To which is answered: Such a meeting as is scheduled as per the above would be "nuts" for some moving-picture company, provided such meeting is attended by all the people who have filed claims as descendants of the tribe of red men known as Choctaws. They are of all shades and color, running from the real Indian to the coal-black, thick-lipped, flat-nosed, kinky-headed negro, with a good sprinkling of whites in whose veins no one but themselves ever suspected that a drop of Indian blood flowed. But anything goes in this day and generation when the thought of "easy money" presents itself. Uncle Sam's coffers will scarcely be opened for the motley crew, however just may be the claims of some of the pure-bred Choctaws. (Gulf Coast Progress.)

HOUSTON INVESTORS MAY GET MILLIONS FROM INDIAN CLAIMS.

A Houston organization, in which more than $2,500,000 is at stake and the hereditary rights of the Choctaw Tribe of Mississippi is the merchandise, has received quite a boost in a telegram received by Judge Harris Masterson. Many Houstonians are interested in the enterprise. The telegram reads as follows:

"Subcommittee report of Friday last was unanimous and recommends admission of all full bloods; also all others who can prove descent from one who either received or should have received patent under fourteenth article treaty of 1830. Meetings are executive and no arguments being heard."

To those who are not interested in the venture the telegram needs interpretation. It comes from Washington and has to do with a bill introduced by Mr. HARRISON, of Mississippi, in behalf of the admission to enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaw Indians and their descendants to participation in the money and lands belonging to the Choctaw Tribe.

Some time ago Judge Masterson was instrumental in forming an organization to urge the claim of the Choctaw Tribe in a participation of certain lands in the territories and moneys in the United States Treasury. Many of these Indians were his clients. Going rather deeply into the matter, he banded over 4,000 of these claimants together and became their representative and legal advisor.

Money was needed to carry the enterprise through, and a company was formed. Between 50 and 60 men came into the company, and many of these are prominent Houstonians.

Judge Masterson says that the venture is one which promises tremendous returns for the amount invested by the stockholders, and that he is confident Congress will give assent to the recommendation of the subcommittee.

I think I do not say too much when I say this Alexander P. Powell ought to be apprehended by the Department of Justice for fraud upon these defenseless people. I am not at all sure but what the attorneys who employed J. Milton Turner, Robert Fortune, and A. P. Powell, all negroes, to go out and make these false and fraudulent representations ought to be investigated, looking to their disbarment from the practice of the profession in which they are engaged. I can not believe the law should be reduced to any such level, but I think any casual reader who will read the McLaughlin report and will study it and understand what is being done, and who will read of what practices are being carried on by these negro agents and these promoters, will feel the necessity that something should be done and that without much longer delay.

I want to at this point insert extracts from a letter dated at Houston, Tex., June 12, 1911, addressed to W. L. Dechant, Middletown, Ohio, and signed by C. B. Moling, a promoter, of Houston, Tex., who is trying to help these negro agents to dispose of these contracts, or rather to raise money upon them to further carry on and promote this gigantic scheme. After dealing with the matter historically, the letter read as follows:

A reputable and responsible firm of attorneys, with offices in St. Louis and Washington, D. C., have secured contracts with 4,200 Choctaw Indians to secure them their allotment of lands and money upon a percentage basis. The contracts provide that the attorneys are to receive 30 per cent of all lands and money received. These 4,200 contracts are one signed by the Indian, two witnesses to his signature, and acknowledged before a notary public.

Is not this a nice transaction to ask Congress to promote:

These contracts, providing for this contingent fee, have been recognized by the Government, and Congress passed a resolution making all such contracts a first lien upon the property of the Indian. This insures direct payment to us of our fee.

For financing the project, such as hunting up the Indians and securing the proof of each individual Indian to his right of participation and the attorneys for working the bill through Congress, one-half of the profits to go to the attorneys and the other half to those who financed it.

It is estimated that each Indian's share of the estate is worth $8,000. The attorneys' contract calls for 30 per cent of this, or $2,400, of which we are to get one-half, or $1,200.

We are organizing a syndicate to take over 1,000 of these contracts at $25 per contract. We will not accept subscription for less than 20 contracts, or $500. The estimated value of 20 contracts, if we win, will be approximately $24,000, or a profit of $23,500 upon each $500 investment.

The proofs of these claims for these 4,200 Indians has all been secured and has been presented to the congressional Committee on Indian Affairs and reported favorably. This committee consists of 19 Members of Congress.

At this next session of Congress the bill will be introduced and voted upon, and as there are several precedents identical to this proposition wherein the other Choctaws secured their rights, we have every reason to believe that the bill will pass.

What a flattering proposal this is? Is not this frenzied finance in all the term implies?

We are unable to go into all the details of this proposition in this letter to you, but I have spent several days investigating it, and concourse of business. I believe the estimated results herein will be clude that the chances for defeat are no greater than in the ordinary obtained, or substantially so.

I expect to give the matter my attention and to look after the interest of those who come into the deal at my request, and to take a proper assignment of the contracts and place them in the hands of some local trust company or bank with authority to make the collection and disburse the receipts to the subscribers in the amounts to which each subscriber would be entitled at same; it will be safer for the subscribers.

My charges will be about 20 per cent of whatever profits you may make on the deal; if none are made, you owe me nothing. I would like to have you take a flier in this, say, for $500 or $1,000, and to notify me of your intentions promptly. Should you happen to lose, I think you will agree with me that it was at least a good bet, as the prospective returns justify taking the chance.

Awaiting your prompt reply, either by letter or wire, I am,

Yours, very truly,

C. B. MOLING.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, what is the equation here? We are asked to agree to an amendment and instruct the conferees to agree to an amendment which will turn the pages of Indian progress in Oklahoma back a hundred years. It would overrule the solemn judgment of the Indian Committees of both the House and Senate, both of which have steadfastly refused to open these rolls or to agree to any such unjust amendment. The adoption of this amendment would break two solemn treaties between the United States and the Oklahoma Indians, wherein the Government promised to give them their lands and to administer their affairs. It will overthrow and in effect repeal the act of April, 1906, which took effect on March 4, 1907, by which Congress closed the rolls; it will overthrow the judgment of the Dawes Commission, which was a commission of high-class lawyers who went West to investigate into and adjudicate these affairs; it will overthrow the decision of Judge Clayton, of the Federal court, who passed upon this matter in the Jack Amos et al. case. It would be an act of broken promises and blasted faith to the Oklahoma Choctaws; it would mean the rewarding of unfaithful, unscrupulous attorneys, who have sought to graft the Indians out of millions of dollars in attorney fees which they did not earn; it would bring reproach upon Congress and the Government; and, in short, it would work a greater wrong and greater mischief upon the Oklahoma Indians than any just man or body of men would hope to accomplish.

I ask that this item be refused and be sent to the conference, so that the committees having proper jurisdiction over it may properly deal with it.

I thank the gentlemen of the House for the attention and consideration I have received at their hands in this important matter.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. I thank the gentleman for seven minutes.

The treatment which the Choctaw Indian has received in Mississippi is no worse than the treatment which the Indian has generally received at the hands of the white man. But it is not the fault of the Indian that there has been an injustice forced upon him. It is the fault of the Congress of the United States, the guardian of the Indian. The diatribe that we have just listened to, by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], is no more a reflection on the history of Congress than it would be now if Congress should pass this bill without safeguarding the funds.

Now, gentlemen, this denunciation does not answer the proposition that we assert here, that there are now 1,072 full-blood Indians in Mississippi in poverty and in ignorance.

Not only that, but the gentleman from Oklahoma says they are not permitted to vote in Mississippi. That may be true, but every Indian who applies to the registration board and can qualify under the terms of the law can vote. He must, under our constitution, either be able to read or write or to understand a clause of the constitution when it is read to him, and it is no insult to the Indian that he is in that condition and can not help himself. If Congress has left him there, and the Indian agents have imposed upon him, it is no answer to denounce this condition in my State. No Indian is denied, under the laws of the State of Mississippi, the right to vote, nor is any other man, by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, denied the right to vote in my State. We did not even have, as some State constitutions do, the grandfather clause in our constitution, and the Supreme Court of the United States has twice declared that there is not a line or a syllable in that constitution that violates one single provision either of the fourteenth amendment or the fifteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution.

All that talk about the treatment of an Indian is not a fact, except that his condition is the condition that Congress leaves him in; and if he can not vote it is because he has been neglected, when he ought not to have been neglected.

Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma speaks of this man Powell. I know nothing about Powell except that I have seen him once or twice. He looks very much like a negro to me. I have never talked to him a moment in my life. If what my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] says is true, these attorneys ought not to be permitted to receive anything from these Indians; and that contract that they have can be rendered void by a proviso or a law that this money shall be paid to the Indian direct, or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs can fix and determine the fees, as we have generally done in reference to all matters when men have asked for attorney's fees and the money comes out of the Treasury by act of Congress.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman pardon me right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. I believe that the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish attempted to charge $1,200,000 for services rendered to the Indians in the State of Oklahoma. Is it not a fact that Secretary Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, reduced that amount to $750,000?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know about that; but if I had the time I would like to give a statement concerning the fees that certain Indians have received in Oklahoma who have since been honored with public office by the people of Oklahoma; and it would be interesting to set out the number of attorneys who have got to be enormously rich and live in Oklahoma and who now claim to be so patriotic.

The chief of these 1,072 Indians who want to be enrolled came to my office. I wish I had time to go into the details as to the whole history of the Choctaw question and then show fully the opportunities they have had to go to Oklahoma, so as to convince the House that they really had no opportunity. Heretofore the House stood, by an overwhelming vote, by the Mississippi Choctaws when this matter had been discussed here on portions of two days, with the Representatives from Oklahoma doing all on earth they could to prevent it. By an overwhelming majority this very Congress a few months ago stood with the Mississippi Choctaws and determined that they had rights and ought to have a hearing; and in the Senate this amendment was put on on the floor of the Senate because the Committee on Indians Affairs there, I presume, is largely dominated by the influence of the Oklahoma people.

I am not censuring my good friends from Oklahoma for doing what they can. I am not censuring them, because I presume it is not only to their political advantage, but also to their financial advantage, and to the advantage of people in Oklahoma. But inasmuch as my time is very brief, let me read to you from the record. They say these Indians ought to have gone to Oklahoma. That may be true; but under the Dancing Rabbit treaty they had the right to remain in Mississippi, and they lost no right under that treaty by remaining in Mississippi, except the right to that small annuity. That is the only right they lost by remaining in Mississippi under the solemn treaty made in 1832, known as the Dancing Rabbit treaty. They lost no rights under it, and I assert it is the sworn duty of every Congressman here, since we have taken over the Indians and made them our wards, as it is the duty of every guardian, to see to it that these wards of ours are not chiseled out of anything, not only by the people of Mississippi, not only by the Mississippi attorneys, not only by people who may be attorneys outside of the State, but also by the Oklahoma attorneys and the Oklahoma Congressmen who represent the Indians living there. We ought to stand by the terms of that solemn treaty which we made with the Choctaws when the old chief of the Choctaws came up here and declined under that treaty to compel the Indians to live beyond the limits of Mississippi, and the provision of that treaty which induced him to agree to it was that those of them who desired to remain in Mississippi should signify their willingness and desire to remain, and over 5,000 heads of families, according to my recollection, in a few weeks decided to remain in Mississippi.

Now, they speak of that land being sold down there cheap for the Indian wards. All that strengthens the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] yield me two minutes more?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Ward and all that bunch of rascals have been visited on the Indians, but is there any reason why we should continue to visit injustice upon them? I have no interest, directly or indirectly, in the matter, because I do not believe half a dozen of these Indians live in my district. Some of them live in Alabama; some of them live in Louisiana; but most of them live in Mississippi, in the districts represented by friends and colleagues, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. WITHERSPOON, and Mr. QUIN.

Mr. FESS. How many are there, all told?

Mr. SISSON. There are 1,072, according to my recollection, full-blooded Indians, whose veins contain not one drop of anything except Indian blood. They are adjudged to have the right to property in Oklahoma. The agents appointed by the Government went down and allowed only six months to those poor Indians to get away. You might as well tell them that there were bags of gold waiting for them in the moon as to say that there was rich land waiting for them in Oklahoma. They could get there, and when there would not know what to do. The statement was made by the Indians, and was made here before this bill was up in the House before by the old chief of the Mississippi Choctaws, and some of the Indian boys have told me in my office that they were waiting and expecting the Government agents to come back for them when the time elapsed in which they could go to Oklahoma; and the $20,000 which, I believe, was appropriated for the purpose of identification and removal gave out and the Indians were waiting in vain for Uncle Sam, their guardian, to send them to Indian Territory. I refer to the 1,072 Indians who are full bloods.

I would like to show you what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs had to say about it. I put it into the RECORD at the time of the last debate.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. UNDERWOOD). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. SISSON. In one minute I can not read what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs said; but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who made this investigation, reports that the Mississippi Choctaws were not given time to remove, and he says that it was utterly impossible for the Mississippi Choctaws to comply with that act within that time. He says it is perfectly true that they have not had a square deal in this matter. I take it that every Member of Congress will feel that the obligation rests on him, as one of the guardians of the Indian, to see that he gets a square deal.

I do not care what the acts of Congress may have been in the past. The thing rises above a mere act of Congress. If we have done a wrong, we can right the wrong by repealing the law. It is the duty of every Representative here to see to it, as one of the guardians of these unfortunate people, that they be given a fair and an honest opportunity, and it is our duty to see that they get what is their own. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from South Dakota yield some more of his time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would rather the gentleman from Texas would use a little of his time; but if he is not ready to do so, I will yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, my sympathies have always been with the Indians. In every matter that has arisen in the House since I have been a Member, touching the welfare of the Indian, I have always found myself naturally inclining toward him and his rights. I find myself in the same situation here to-day. But I must select between Indians to-day—between the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws and the rights of the Choctaws in Oklahoma. I am led to that conclusion because of the action taken by the Indians themselves.

Under the treaty of 1830 the Indians in Mississippi were to go west, to take up lands, to maintain their tribal organizations, and to become there an important part of the great West. They invited all the Choctaws in Mississippi to join them.

Article 14 of that treaty provided that Indians might remain in Mississippi, and that the head of every family remaining there could choose 640 acres of land, every child over 10 years of age 320 acres of land, and every child under 10 years of age 160 acres of land, making a very attractive proposition to the Mississippi Choctaws who saw fit to remain in Mississippi. The others were to go west to the new Indian country. That same article provided that those who remained in Mississippi as Choctaws should lose no rights as Choctaws if they removed west, except the annuities. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is incorrect when he says they lose no rights at all. They must move west into the Indian Territory to have the rights of Mississippi Choctaws. It was held in the Jack Amos case and has been sustained by every commission, every committee of Congress, every court that has considered the matter—every decision of every commission, of every court, of every committee of Congress has always insisted that article 14 of the treaty of 1830 required that the Choctaws should, in order to have the rights of Choctaws in Oklahoma, go to Oklahoma and live there; that a Choctaw could not remain in Mississippi and have the rights of a Choctaw in the Indian country; a very natural and a very wise conclusion to be reached by the courts and by the committees of Congress and by the commissions that have investigated and decided upon the question.

Now, with whom shall we allow our sympathies to run? With the Mississippi Choctaws, who remained to accept the very attractive proposition made by the United States, and to have the large amount of land already referred to, or go with the Indians who went out across the swamps and rivers and through the forests on to the frontier? The trail by which the Choctaws who left Mississippi went into the Indian country is marked by the graves of 4,000 Choctaws. And yet the gentleman from Mississippi and other friends of the Mississippi Choctaws pour out their sympathies for those who remained in Mississippi with 640 acres of land for every adult, 320 acres of land for every child over 10 years of age, and 160 acres of land for every child under 10 years of age.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; if the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. BOOHER. Did those Indians who remained in Mississippi receive these allotments of 640 acres, 320 acres, and 160 acres?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The allotments were yielded to them. They had a right to receive them.

Mr. BOOHER. Was the land given to them?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Many of them received the land.

Mr. FERRIS. The first half of them did. Here is a list of all the names of those who did.

Mr. BOOHER. If they did not get it, the Government still owes it to them, does it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. At least the Choctaws in Oklahoma do not owe them anything. That is what I am urging.

Mr. FERRIS. Here is a list of the names of those who did get land.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Therefore my sympathies in this case are with the Choctaw and his descendants who went into the Oklahoma country in the early thirties and remained there with his family and made that country the Indian country. Eighty years afterwards there can not be much sympathy or much equity for the Indian who remained in Mississippi, whose descendants now insist upon a division of the estate made by the Indians who went out upon the frontier years and years ago. It would be just as fair for a man to-day who was an original joint heir of an estate out on the frontier, in Kansas, if you please, next to Oklahoma, beside the Indian country, to have remained in Massachusetts until the prairies had been subdued and tamed, and the desert converted into productive fields, where great wealth is produced to-day, and then for the Massachusetts man to come along and say, "I want half of this, I want share and share alike with you, and I have a right to it, because I am of the same blood." There would be just as much right in that sort of claim as there is to-day in the claim of the Mississippi Choctaw to a share of the Choctaw estate in Oklahoma.

But what is the milk in the coconut? Why are we constantly hounded in Congress in behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws? Ever since I came to Congress I have been followed by attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws urging their cause. The door was then open to them. From year to year they were given a little more time. They were finally given until the 4th day of March, 1907, in which to go west to comply with the conditions of article 14 of the treaty of 1830. The years passed on from 1830 until the 4th day of March, 1907, and still the Mississippi Choctaw remained in Mississippi and did not go into the Indian country to become a part of his old tribe, to participate with that tribe in the rights and benefits of a Choctaw in the Indian country, as Congress had given him the right to do, and as the Choctaws in Oklahoma had invited him to do out of the generosity of their hearts.

The trouble is that there are fabulous attorney's fees in this matter. I do not connect any gentleman who favors the Mississippi Choctaws upon this floor or upon the floor of any other body as being in any way concerned about the fees in this matter. All I insist upon is that the fees are so large that they make it a very attractive thing for attorneys, and these attorneys never cease their campaign for the enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaws so that they may participate in the distribution of the funds of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TOWNSEND). Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman know of any Mississippi Choctaw who has been enrolled as a Choctaw who has not had to pay an attorney's fee?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman advise the committee whether or not there is not now pending a case in court to determine the attorney's fees in the largest case they have ever had, and what the percentage claimed is?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think a 50 per cent fee is claimed. But these Mississippi Choctaws are represented by attorneys whose fees run from 30 to 40 per cent. Now let me read you something about that. I have here, I think, the document.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. One firm of these attorneys has collected $21,000 at one time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, here is the milk in the coconut. Let me read:

HOUSTON, TEX., June 12, 1911.

Hon. W. L. DECHANT,
Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: In 1820 the United States Government made a treaty with the Choctaw Indians, then living in Mississippi, whereby the Government bought 5,000,000 acres of the Indians, and in return gave to the Indians all the lands lying in the Indian Territory north of Red River up to the Canadian and east of the ninety-eighth meridian, and paid for moving as many of the Indians out to this land as desired to go.

The Choctaws still had 10,000,000 acres left back in Mississippi, and in 1830 the Government made another treaty with them whereby the Government purchased the remaining lands for $8,000,000. In this treaty it was agreed that the remaining Indians were to be protected in the community property or the original lands in Indian Territory granted them by the treaty of 1820.

The Government still holds approximately 3,450,000 acres of these original Territory lands, as well as several millions in cash, in trust for the Choctaws who have not as yet been allotted their share.

Now listen, you who are sympathetically inclined. Now we get down to the milk:

A reputable and responsible firm of attorneys, with offices in St. Louis and Washington, D. C., have secured contracts with 4,200 Choctaw Indians to secure them their allotment of lands and money upon a percentage basis. The contracts provide that the attorneys are to receive 30 per cent of all lands and money received.

Four thousand two hundred Indians. Where are the 1,070 Indians that the gentleman talked about?

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman want to know where those 1,070 Indians are?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am talking about the 4,200 Indians.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For a very brief question.

Mr. CLINE. Does the contract made for the collection of this money go to the real merits of the controversy as to whether they are entitled to anything?

Mr. CAMPBELL. If it were not for the attorneys' fees, you would not hear of these Mississippi Choctaws who have remained in Mississippi since 1830. The only way in which these claims are kept alive is by these large prospective attorneys' fees.

Mr. CLINE. Then there is no merit in the claim?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Absolutely no merit in thousands of them.

These 4,200 contracts are one signed by the Indian, two witnesses to his signature, and acknowledged before a notary public.

These contracts, providing for this contingent fee, have been recognized by the Government, and Congress passed a resolution making all such contracts a first lien upon the property of the Indian. This insures direct payment to us of our fee.

Do you see how this fellow's heart bleeds for the Mississippi Choctaws; how he is pleading for the enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaws so that they may participate in the distribution of the estate of the Choctaws of Oklahoma, who went west in the early days and made it possible that there should be an estate to divide?

For financing the project, such as hunting up the Indians and securing the proof of each individual Indian to his right of participation and the attorneys for working the bill through Congress, one half of the profits to go to the attorneys and the other half to those who financed it.

It is estimated that each Indian's share of the estate is worth $8,000. The attorneys' contract calls for 30 per cent of this, or $2,400, of which we are to get one-half, or $1,200.

We are organizing a syndicate to take over 1,000 of these contracts at $25 per contract. We will not accept subscription for less than 20 contracts, or $500. The estimated value of 20 contracts, if we win, will be approximately $24,000, or a profit of $23,500 upon each $500 investment.

That sounds good for the poor Indians.

The proofs of these claims for these 4,200 Indians has all been secured and has been presented to the congressional Committee on Indian Affairs and reported favorably. This committee consists of 19 Members of Congress.

I have been a member of this committee for a number of years, and I know this graft has not been reported favorably.

At this next session of Congress the bill will be introduced and voted upon, and as there are several precedents identical to this proposition wherein the other Choctaws secured their rights, we have every reason to believe that the bill will pass.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Is it not a fact that on these representations they sold $25,000 of contracts and got the money?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; I was going to say that. I will omit the next clause in the letter, but it states that one attorney made a fee of $6,000,000.

Mr. GARDNER. Why does the gentleman omit the next paragraph?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I will not omit it. I will read:

Senator OWEN has but 1,500 of these contracts with another batch of Choctaw Indians, yet he secured a fee of $6,000,000; he had a contract for one-half of what he secured, while ours is but 30 per cent. Other similar contracts have been made, and all of them have been passed by Congress; and as the Government is holding the lands and money belonging to this tribe and have no interest in it either way, we see no just reason why they should not act upon these claims favorably at the next session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that that was shown not to be so?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course, as to amount it is not so, but that is on a par with a lot of other stuff in that prospectus that is not so.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman says it is not so. There is a great deal of truth in it, is there not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; there is some truth in it. He did not get $6,000,000, however.

Mr. COX. How much did he get?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know. He received a good fee.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not yield further. The fact is, that upon the assumption that there was to be a distribution of a fabulous attorney's fee a corporation was organized under the laws of the State of Arizona, with a capital stock of $100,000, and stock was sold upon that prospectus to the amount of $25,000; and Crews & Cantrill, the attorneys, who have been prosecuting this claim for the enrollment of these alleged Mississippi Choctaws, have secured the $25,000. If they win, their fees will amount of $6,300,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PHELAN). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman four minutes more. In that time will he permit me to make the statement that Senator OWEN was the attorney for the Mississippi Choctaws, or for some band of them, before he ever came to Congress.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes; it is only fair to Senator OWEN to say that his connection with this matter was as an attorney, before he became a Member of Congress.

Mr. FERRIS. And before Congress closed the rolls.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; and before the rolls were closed.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I notice the gentleman uses this crooked dealing on the part of attorneys as an argument against this bill. Is it not a fact that the same kind of work was done on the other side?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, but the attorneys' fees on the other side were like 30 cents as compared with these fees.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not a fact that there are attorneys here lobbying against this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know of any. I have not seen any. I have seen the attorney for the Choctaws. He is working against it, as he ought to. So with the attorney for the Chickasaws.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not a fact that the attorneys for the tribes are here?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. CARTER. On a stipulated salary?

Mr. CAMPBELL. On a stipulated salary of $5,000.

Mr. ASWELL. And they are lobbying?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I have not found them lobbying; but they are getting a salary of $5,000 for representing the tribes, as against this colossal fee of $6,350,000 to one firm of attorneys for taking away from the Choctaws a part of their property. About $7,000,000 or more will go to another firm of attorneys, if they win, as they say they will in writing to their friends, in trying to raise money to further prosecute these claims before the committees of Congress and in lobbying the bill through Congress.

Let me close by saying again that if there is sympathy to be extended for the Indian in this case, it should be extended to the Indian who took his life in his hands and went into the Indian country in the early thirties, as he agreed to do in a solemn treaty with the United States, who fought for the rights of the Indians on the frontier, fighting against the elements, against unfriendly Indians and unfriendly whites, preserving the integrity of his tribe, and made a great estate there which these Mississippi Choctaws, who remained in the State of Mississippi rather than go to Oklahoma, now want to divide.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, how long has this contention been before Congress?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, it has been before Congress for years. In 1889 Congress passed a law giving these Indians the right to move to Oklahoma and enrolling with the tribe. The Mississippi Choctaw has slept upon his rights. He has had his day in court. He has had his right to go to Oklahoma. He has had his right to join his tribe. He has had his right to participate in the distribution of that estate. He has forfeited all these rights by refusing to go to the country where the Choctaw resided and where the estate was, although he now wants to participate in its distribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, how many minutes have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eight minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes of that to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to advise me when I have used five minutes, as I desire to yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. I thank the gentleman very much, but I will use that in my own time.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I am not concerned so much about what disposition is made of the estate of the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma, but there was a time when an award was made in favor of the Mississippi Indians, amounting to $3,000,000 net, which accumulated to about $8,000,000, not one dollar of which has ever been paid to the Mississippi Indians. There is no reason on earth why these Indians living in Mississippi should not receive the money which has been awarded to them as their right. Whether they ought to be permitted to participate in all of the rights of the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma I am not prepared to say.

I wish I could enter upon the discussion of this question with a feeling that there was no graft in the settlement of the Indian questions. The attorney proposition as involved in the settlement of Indian questions stinks; it is rotten. I know no man, either Indian or white man, who is interested in this proposition; but I do know that the Indians in Mississippi have been wronged. They are entitled to be paid the award that was made in their favor.

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I have only five minutes. My interest in this question relates only to my desire to see that justice is done to them. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] said that Judge Clayton had rendered an opinion in the Jack Amos case which forever settled the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. But there have been other decisions rendered besides that. Judge Townsend rendered a decision in the same case directly contrary to the opinion rendered by Judge Clayton.

Mr. FERRIS. But Judge Townsend was a judge of the Chickasaw Indians and had nothing whatever to do with this.

Mr. MADDEN. He passed on the question, and I will read his opinion into the RECORD. I am going to ask unanimous consent, at the conclusion of my remarks, to insert in the RECORD exactly what Judge Townsend said.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman deny what I stated?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is mistaken. He is touching on a matter that was not before him at all, because he never sat in a Choctaw case.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, Samuel Adams, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, whose name is signed to the paper which I hold in my hands, says to the contrary. He quotes what Judge Townsend says, and Judge Townsend said that the Mississippi Choctaws never lost any rights whether they lived in Mississippi or moved to Oklahoma. There was only $20,000 appropriated and placed at the disposal of the men who sought to remove the Mississippi Indians to Oklahoma, and $20,000 was inadequate for the purpose of removing all those Indians who wished to go from Mississippi to Oklahoma. There are nearly 1,100 full-blooded Indians in Mississippi now against whose nationality nobody raises a question of doubt. They would have moved to Oklahoma if facilities had been afforded them to enable them to move, but they were not given the facilities and they have not been afforded the opportunity except the invitation, and whether or not they have the right to participate in the division of all the money now to the credit of the Oklahoma Choctaws, they certainly have a right, an undoubted right, to the payment of $8,000,000, a verdict for which was rendered in their favor, and this question can not be settled justly until everybody agrees that this $8,000,000 be paid and until it is in fact paid. Now, I do not believe any Member of this House wishes to do an injustice to any man in the world, and I am sure that no man in the House wishes to do an injustice to these men of Indian blood living in the State of Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that he has used five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish I could enter upon a discussion of this question with a feeling that there is no rottenness in the question of contracts by which the attorneys are accepting fabulous fees for exploiting the Indians. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the opinion of Judge Townsend.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. The views of Judge Townsend are set forth in part as follows:

> In all these various treaties, solemnly entered into, there is not one line or one word to indicate that the Choctaws and Chickasaws who did not remove to the western country were not Choctaw or Chickasaw citizens and members of their respective tribes. On the other hand, in the treaty of 1830 between the Choctaws and the United States it is expressly provided that those who remained should "not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen," but if they ever remove "are not to be entitled to any portion of the Choctaw annuity."
> It has been said that they could not be put upon the roll as citizens and members of those tribes unless they lived upon the land within the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations themselves when making the treaty of 1866 does not bear out the view; and if they were Choctaws and Chickasaws in 1866, what has occurred to change their relations to those tribes? I have heard of nothing whatever.
> It is said the land was held in common, and certainly some of the tenants in common in possession could hold the possession for all their cotenants in common. The bulk of the nation living in the territory ceded and maintaining the tribal government or nation certainly met every requirement of residence and was a compliance in all respects with the treaty stipulations of living on the land.
> I shall hold that nonresident Choctaws and Chickasaws who have properly filed their application and established their membership of the tribes shall be admitted to the roll as citizens.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a similar request to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma to extend his remarks in the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible in seven minutes to deal with the legal phase of this question. The gentleman who has just preceded me referred to an $8,000,000 transaction. The facts are that the Government of the United States received 10,000,000 acres of land to equalize the property of the Mississippi Choctaws, and the Government sold the land and kept $6,000,000 of that $8,000,000 of which the gentleman spoke. They sold some of the land for 2½ cents an acre, and charged the Indians 10 cents for selling it. Let the Government pay these Mississippi Choctaw Indians that $6,000,000 it kept. I submit to this House that if the Government of the United States is the guardian of the Mississippi Choctaws, and if the Choctaw Nation should receive certain funds and the Government should not distribute those funds, as provided by the treaty and the law, is there any equity by which the Choctaw Indians in the West who furnished it should be made to suffer for the wrong of its guardians? There is neither law nor equity nor even sympathy against the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma.

Now, this treaty was made first in 1820, one year before brave Stephen F. Austin took his brave Missourians to Texas and settled it. In 1830, several years prior to the Texas revolution, the removal of these Indians was provided. At that time Arkansas and the entire West was a wilderness. The prairie tribes of the West swooped down upon the white settlements and upon the settlements of the Five Civilized Tribes and murdered them alike. They dreaded that trip, and then while realizing that it was wise to go west, if they could live there, a stipulation was made that those who remained should get certain lands which exceeded the allotments which the Indians of Oklahoma have. The trouble was that the Government did not throw restrictions around them and long ago the grafters in Mississippi got their land. The Indians got, in the West, 22,000,000 acres.

As a result of the Civil War the Federal Government took from those Indians nearly 11,000,000 acres, leaving only 11,000,000 for the Choctaws and Chickasaws in the West, while they left in Mississippi 10,000,000 acres for those who were left there. So they provided for them. The trouble was the Government did not take care of their property. Now, so far as sympathy goes, I say that neither law nor equity exists against the Indians of the West, because the Jack Amos case was decided by Judge Clayton and affirmed, and no decision of Judge Townsend or any other judge on this point was ever affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Now, as to sympathy. When these Indians in Mississippi undertook to go West and cross the uninhabited swamps of Arkansas into the wilderness, they marched. Four thousand of their dead were buried on the road. An account of that march is best told by Gen. Dale, the United States Army officer who undertook the first removal. Gen. Dale said that when they were about to leave their homes their better judgment had taught them they ought to go, but their nature revolted, and as ten to fifteen thousands of men, women, and children marched slowly each day toward the West the old Indians would steal out of camp every night to return to their former homes, to look once more upon those old cabins, to bid them good-bye. Gen. Dale said that that continued every night until they were more than 40 miles away from their former homes; that every night they would return to look once more upon those old cabins they called homes and the graves of their ancestors, once more to say good-bye. They were going into a wilderness surrounded by hostile prairie Indians whom they had to fight. Because at the invitation of the Government and out of their intuitive knowledge they have built a republic, established schools, and become strong, and because they have grown with their strength and ammassed a fortune, the Mississippi Choctaws, hampered by the Government, becoming poverty stricken, now come in and claim a part of their property.

Is it fair, is it right, since they, by their own efforts, have achieved such results? They opened their hands in 1896 to the Mississippi Choctaws and bade them come. Why did they not go? They did not have a thing in the world but a dog. They could have put out the fire and called the dog and have gone but for one thing, and that was that the peonage laws in Mississippi made them criminal if they went away and left a debt or a contract. They could not go. The result was they did not go. Why give them money now? Because even the land they had, and other moneys, long since have been taken. Why give them money now? They would not have it 12 months. It would be taken away from them. Our Indians wanted them to come west, and 1,634 went as a result of that offer, and they have land with restrictions on it, and neither a grafter in Oklahoma nor a grafter in Mississippi can take it away from them. The only aid possible is to buy them each a small home in Mississippi and put restrictions upon it. I say, gentlemen, it is unfair, because these Indians by their own efforts have a civilization to be admired, a civilization that has made them capable of self-government, and they have become an integral part of the State government of Oklahoma. Eleven of them sat in the constitutional convention of that State, and 10 in the first legislature, so great had been their advancement. But because they had amassed property, is that any reason, does judgment dictate, that they should give up what they have acquired after hardship, any more than the western homesteader who went West and settled his homestead should divide it now with the men of the East who refused to go?

Gentlemen, here is the only proposition: Will you pay out this money that the Indians ought to have and stop this Mississippi Choctaw cry, or will you tie it up and let it continue? The quicker you pay out this money the quicker this will stop. Your attorney fees will be over, because there will be nothing else to be enrolled for. We want to pay out the money. An amendment was offered in the Senate that ties it up until some time indefinitely. That amendment gives the Mississippi Choctaws nothing. It only ties up the payment of that money with the hope that the lobbyists and grafters may yet convince Congress in some way to make a division of a property to which they are not entitled.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to use some of his time.

Mr. HARRISON. There will be but one argument on this side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Our time will be used in one argument.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the gentleman has the closing argument. I prefer to wait until there is just one argument to follow.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I do not agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY], who just addressed the House, that this money should be paid out at once, because if paid out at once all claims would cease. I do not feel at all certain but that the Mississippi Choctaws may have some claim for a share in the property of the Oklahoma Choctaws. But however that may be, for myself I am very much opposed to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Mississippi that the House concur in the Senate amendment. If this provision becomes a law in the shape that it is in this bill, there will be no Member of this House or of this Congress who will escape the obloquy of scandal. You can not provide in this way for the payment of a claim involving millions of dollars, where the attorneys' fees amount to many millions of dollars, and allow those attorneys' fees without scandal. There was a great hurrah in Congress some years ago because an attorney in one of these numerous Indian matters received a fee of $700,000 or $750,000. If it had been known at the time that such a fee was to be received, the legislation would not have been enacted by Congress. I heard the payment of that fee denounced on the floor of this House by many gentlemen, and I think I never heard anyone defend it, unless it was the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] since he came into the House. But that fee would be a mere bagatelle compared with the attorneys' and agents' fees hidden behind or under this amendment, and if this proposition becomes a law, if the Mississippi Choctaw Indians are entitled to a portion of this money, they are entitled to that portion of it without paying 30 per cent of it to some attorneys or agents who have gone around and obtained the contingent contracts.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] a moment ago read a part of a letter of a syndicate organized for the purpose of financing this enterprise in part, wherein it was stated that the possible and probable return for the expenditure or investment of $500 would be over $2,300.

Now, I am not in favor of any legislation which would permit the attorneys or the agents to rob either the Indians or the Government. If these people have a claim, I see no reason why in some way we should not legislate to ascertain the fact. But if this amendment be concurred in, that is beyond us. The claim has gone past our control. Or if we pay the money out that is now in the Treasury and distribute the property, that, then, will be beyond us. I think the Government ought to retain the money until we work out in some way a settlement of the question as to whether in the opinion of Congress the Mississippi Choctaws are entitled to any share in this; and if it is said they are, we ought to have it paid to them under terms where they will not be robbed by the attorneys who now hold contracts for contingent fees amounting, in all, all the way from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON].

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, this is a controversy with regard to the distribution of a fund in the hands of the Government as a trustee for the Choctaw Indians. That fund arises under section 2 of the treaty of 1830, called the Dancing Rabbit treaty. By that section the Government conveys to the Choctaw Indians a large body of lands, which are described, and that, in connection with conveyance of other lands, constitutes this fund.

Now, I want to call your attention to the fact that that was not a gift on the part of the Federal Government, but these Indians paid the Government for that fund. And you will find in the next section, which is section 3 of this treaty, that the Choctaw Indians—who all then lived in Mississippi—conveyed to the Federal Government all the lands they owned and possessed in that State. That conveyance was the price that the Indians paid for this fund, and every Indian——

Mr. POST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. No; I am too busy to yield. I am not going to yield to anybody, inasmuch as I have but a few minutes.

Every Indian living in Mississippi was an owner of that land in Mississippi, and consequently when they conveyed it to the Federal Government every Indian in that State contributed to pay the price. And having paid for this fund, in equity and good conscience, every one of them and of their descendants is entitled to share in it. If you take a deed to a piece of land in your own name and you pay for that deed with my money, if the consideration of the deed comes from me, you may have a legal title, but I am the equitable and honest owner of the land; and if you go into any court of conscience and equity and submit the question to such a court, it will decide that your legal title amounts to nothing; that the man who pays the price is the real honest owner of it. I say that these Indians in Mississippi are part owners of this fund, because they paid the price for it, and it is nothing less than an outrage to take it from them.

But the question here is, Have they forfeited those rights because they did not move to Oklahoma? That is what the Federal Government wanted them to do, and they did not want to do it. The Government officials could not get the Indians to sign the treaty conveying all these Indian lands in Mississippi to the Federal Government; the Government officials could not get the Indians to pay the price for this fund until the Government put into the treaty a section that expressly provides that no Indian should forfeit any of his privileges or rights because he did not remove to Oklahoma. Read the last sentence of the fourteenth article, and you will find that it expressly declares that no Indian who decides to remain in Mississippi shall lose his rights as an Indian, as a member of the tribe, except one right, and that was the right of sharing in the annuities which were enumerated in the treaty and which have nothing to do with this question.

Now, we do not ask you to vote——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will my colleague give me two minutes more?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. We do not ask you to vote that the Mississippi Choctaws are entitled to share in this fund at all. You can not do it intelligently, because the facts can not be presented to you. Every speaker who has gotten up here has said that he has not the time to present this matter to the Congress. But there is a bill pending before the committee, which for some mysterious reason has been held back an unreasonable length of time, the object of which is to determine the question whether these Mississippi Choctaws have lost their rights by not removing to Oklahoma. That bill is still pending before the committee. The matter is under investigation, and all that we ask is that you shall not distribute the fund until that bill is reported to the House, when the facts can be fully discussed, where you can understand the whole thing, and where you can decide it according to justice and right.

The claim of the other side that this fund shall be distributed before the proper bill is presented to this House, with all the facts that will enable you to determine the thing justly and rightly, is a contention that the fund shall be distributed before the parties in interest have a chance to be heard, and that is the thing that we consider unjust. Why not wait until the bill can be reported to the House? This amendment that we are fighting over does not ask you to decide that the Mississippi Choctaws have the right to share in this fund, but only that no part of the fund shall be distributed until the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws are determined.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Dakota use some time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time that I have I shall not attempt to go into the merits of the claim of the Choctaw Indians in Mississippi. I am against the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to concur in the Senate amendment for the reasons assigned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], among others, and, furthermore, because I am opposed to every part of the amendment.

I think our friends from Oklahoma who are opposing this amendment are only concerned in the provision which begins with line 23, on page 70, and ends with "the Choctaw Nation," in line 5, on page 71. That is the provision that provides that this fund shall not be distributed in Oklahoma to the Choctaw Indians "until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation." If this provision was eliminated those from Oklahoma would, I am sure, favor the Senate amendment.

When this bill was considered in the House before amendment No. 139, down to the word "Provided," in line 23, was in the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and in the House in Committee of the Whole, after a debate of one or two days, in which the merits of the proposition were fully discussed, the House by a vote of 118 to 49 struck it out, and it went out of the bill. It was put back in the bill by the Indian Committee of the Senate, and upon the floor of the Senate there was offered an amendment relating to the Mississippi Choctaws.

I take it that our friends who, as I said before, are opposed to this amendment, are not opposed to that portion of the amendment that was stricken out by this vote in the House when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration. I hope that the amendment will be disagreed to, and then I hope that the conferees on the part of the House will voice the sentiment of the House in conference and endeavor to defeat the entire amendment, thereby carrying out the will of the House as expressed when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration, when this part of the amendment, from line 6 to line 23, was stricken out by a decisive vote.

Mr. Chairman, it is admitted—and no man who is familiar with the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma will deny it—that there are a few people who have been wrongfully left off the rolls and that are clearly entitled to participate in the distribution of the estate. Many of them—and possibly all of them—are in Oklahoma. It may be that there is some merit in the claim of the Mississippi Choctaws, and I am inclined to think there is. I am not going to attempt in the brief time I have to say definitely whether there is merit in their claim or not. But it is true that there are a number that have been left off the rolls—not a very great many—that ought to be enrolled, and my position has been that until these persons are placed on the rolls that are admittedly entitled thereto this fund, or no part of it, ought to be distributed; first, because it is not fair and right to the Indians who have been left off the rolls, and, secondly, we ought to protect the Treasury of the United States against claims that will be filed the moment that this fund is distributed by the persons omitted from the rolls, and attorneys who are now engaged in the nefarious work of securing contracts from negroes and others who have perhaps no Indian blood whatever in their veins will concentrate their activities upon presenting claims to the Congress of the United States, involving, perhaps, millions of dollars that will have to be paid out of the Treasury. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi will not prevail.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take a moment for the purpose of stating that I agree with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], and hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will not prevail.

This amendment was put on in the Senate of the United States in this language:

Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is good legislation to permit the Senate to engraft an amendment of this vast importance upon this bill without consideration by their own committee and with scarcely any consideration on the floor of the Senate. I do not think it proper that we should approve it here without having it passed upon by the Indian Affairs Committee of the House, and passed upon on the floor of the House when it is in full session.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has stated his opposition to the last proviso of amendment 139. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he also opposes the balance of the amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the first part. That was rejected by the House, and I presume it will be brought back to the House again before any final action is taken by the conferees. I hope therefore that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. ASWELL. Does not the gentleman think this provision is so simple, so plain, so self-evident, that it does not need any further discussion by the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think so.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the gentleman from Texas only one speech left?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is all.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Chairman state how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. UNDERWOOD). The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has 28 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. I yield my remaining time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 12 minutes and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has 1 minute.

Mr. MILLER. I yield that 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized for 29 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I trust that in the discussion of this matter I shall confine myself to the record and not to a misrepresentation of the facts, and that I shall not accuse men from Oklahoma, both attorneys and representatives of the people, of grafting either on the Mississippi Choctaw or on the Oklahoma Choctaw.

This is a simple proposition. There is nothing involved in it except one single question.

I have a bill before Congress the purpose of which is to reopen the rolls of the Choctaw Nation, which have been closed since March 4, 1907. In that bill there is a provision that in the event the rolls are reopened the attorneys who represent the claimants shall receive no fee except that fee which the Secretary of the Interior says is a reasonable one. I would not put my name to a bill which did not have that provision in it. Consequently all this talk about the attorneys' fees in this matter is merely for the purpose of beclouding the issue and trying to divert your minds from the real facts involved in the discussion. These gentlemen do it adroitly, because they know that the facts have stared them in the face all along, and that Congress is now beginning to open its eyes to the justice of the cause and to the injuries that have been committed against these poor unfortunate Indians in Mississippi. The eyes of Congress were not opened until in February, when the Indian Affairs Committee of the House brought in the Indian appropriation bill containing a provision to distribute $100 per capita among these Choctaw Indians who were on the rolls. You recall that for two days we discussed that proposition here in the House.

Gentlemen say that in the Senate there was little discussion of it. Three days they discussed this proposition in the Senate. And I desire to recall to your minds that after a discussion of this question before this House in February, a full discussion, when I offered an amendment similar to the Williams amendment that was adopted in the Senate, my amendment was ruled out on a point of order; and then, in order to secure a fair presentation of the case of the Mississippi Choctaws to this House I moved to strike that provision from the bill carrying this $100 per capita payment to those Indians who were on the rolls. You heard the discussion; and after the discussion this House by a vote first of 43 ayes and 17 noes voted to strike out that per capita payment. Then the point of no quorum was made. Not satisfied with that vote you brought the Members here, and then by a vote of 118 ayes to 49 noes the proposition was defeated. It went to the Senate. The Senate Indian appropriation bill contained this provision of a per capita payment of $100 each. Senator WILLIAMS offered the amendment which is now in the bill. It does not take any money out of the funds of the tribe. It does not take any money out of the Treasury of the United States, but it is a clear, simple, plain provision that reads:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

Sirs, is it asking too much at your hands when we say that the Mississippi Indian has rights, when we ask you to investigate the matter and say whether or not he has rights, and when we say to you, pay out this money, but do not pay it out until these people shall have the privilege of appearing before Congress and presenting their cause?

And now the gentlemen who are opposing this motion attempt to becloud the issue, and I did not think my good friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] would try to run away from the real issue by talking about attorneys' fees. Ah, sirs, there is one fact that looms high in this discussion, and that is that if there is any set of men on God's green earth that ought to know how miserably the Indians have been treated it is the Oklahoma citizen and the Oklahoma Representatives, because your State has robbed them every time the opportunity presented itself. The blackest pages in the history of your State is the way you have treated the Indian. None of you rejoice in walking the streets of Washington or being seen on the corners in the cities of your State with McMurray, who helped to paint your record black, and who said and boasted that he wrote the act of 1902 that you erroneously say did something for the Mississippi Choctaws. Men high up in your State have received large attorneys' fees. If you say they have been robbed, I say that you have to bring the accusation not alone against those in Mississippi, but you must also include those high up in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman does not want to accuse anyone unjustly or make imputations that are unjust against anyone. Will he give us the names?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not; but I say to you that Senator OWEN for one once represented Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I can not yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It has been stated on the floor that he was not a Member of the Senate at that time.

Mr. HARRISON. If the gentleman will wait his time in patience I will show what Senator OWEN said a few months ago about the Mississippi Choctaws. I will quote his words, and if that will not convince you, you will not be convinced. If I did not know the high character of the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, and other gentlemen from Oklahoma, I might say that they might be influenced in fighting to keep the Mississippi Choctaws from the rolls, because they themselves perchance are on the rolls of some of the Indian tribes. But I hold the gentleman in too high esteem for that. I do not believe he could be deterred from doing his duty. I do not believe the reason that he is fighting these unfortunate people is because he himself is on the rolls as one of the men who will share in a per capita payment. I will not go that far.

Now let me get to the vital points at issue. These Indians in Mississippi originally did not desire to go into Oklahoma; they would not consent to the treaty of 1830 until provision was written into the treaty known as the fourteenth article, that said in effect, "You Indians who prefer to stay by the burial places of your tribe, who had rather roam the hills that you are accustomed to roam, can do so, and by doing so you will not lose any rights as Choctaw citizens." A provision was placed in there that these people should not be compelled to move to Oklahoma, but now that is what you would force them to do.

The gentleman from Kansas may smile at me, but I want to say to him that he is on the subcommittee that is now considering the bill before his committee that I have introduced for the relief of these poor people. Ofttimes I have wished for him to be present, but he did not come. I want to say in this connection that in the Sixty-second Congress the subcommittee that considered my bill reported it out unanimously, and while I am expressing myself I desire to say that I do not believe it is just and fair to the Mississippi Choctaws that in appointing a subcommittee to consider this matter the chairman of that subcommittee should be no other than the man who has led the fight against the proposition, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman agreed to it, did he not?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not. I tried my best to keep the gentleman off the committee, because I did not want him on it.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman made up the committee himself.

Mr. HARRISON. If I had, I never would have taken the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman placed me on one side, and on the other side the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], and he knows he did.

Mr. HARRISON. No; I did not; I am not that big a dunce. Now, the gentleman has said that the Jack Amos case in 1897 settled the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, and they rely on that case, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] said that the Supreme Court had affirmed the case.

Mr. FERRIS. No; the gentleman is wrong. I do not want the gentleman to misquote me.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I will yield, if the gentleman wants to correct himself.

Mr. FERRIS. No; I want to correct the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I decline to yield for that purpose.

Now, gentlemen, here are the facts about it. In 1896 the Dawes Commission was appointed by an act of Congress to go to Oklahoma and make a roll in Oklahoma of the tribes in that State.

There was a fellow named Jack Amos, together with others, who applied to this commission to be placed on the rolls. This commission said "You have to remove to Oklahoma if you want enrollment;" "You can not stay in Mississippi and be enrolled." From that decision an appeal was taken to all three branches of the Territorial courts of Oklahoma—one presided over by Judge Stringer, one by Judge Clayton, and the other by Judge Townsend. Clayton and Stringer held that this commission was right, that under the law they had no authority to enroll anyone outside of the State.

Mr. CARTER. What case is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. HARRISON. The Jack Amos case. I can not see why gentlemen should try to misrepresent the facts, for I have the cases here.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman give me a citation of that case. I never heard of that before.

Mr. HARRISON. It is the Jack Amos case, which went up to Judge Clayton. I have all the citations here and I will insert them in my speech.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know the citation. Surely the gentleman can give that.

Mr. HARRISON. I will give the citation. It was decided in the spring of 1897. It is found on page 475 of the Decisions of United States Courts in Indian Territory on Citizenship Cases, and so forth. It went to the Supreme Court on an appeal from Judge Clayton's decision. Judge Townsend held differently from Judge Clayton, holding that the Mississippi Choctaw did not have to move to Oklahoma, and also that he was entitled to share in the estate of the Choctaw Nation. These cases went to the Supreme Court and was known as the Stevens case against the Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 415), which embraced all these Mississippi Choctaw enrolled cases, and the Supreme Court expressly said that they did not go into the merits of the controversy, but only settled the constitutional question of the right of the appeal from the Dower Commission decision to the Territorial courts.

Mr. CARTER. What I want the gentleman to give me is the citation of the case that Judge Townsend tried.

Mr. HARRISON. This Jack Amos case?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; Judge Clayton tried that.

Mr. HARRISON. But here is the case right here. It is known as the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation case, and is found in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in volume 174, at page 415.

Mr. CARTER. That is not the Jack Amos case?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, the gentlemen are not yet satisfied as to the correctness of it, when it is there. Not only that, but Judge Clayton in the Jack Amos case based his ruling on the case known as the Eastern Cherokee v. The Cherokee Nation (117 U. S., 288). Three years ago, at the instance of an able attorney from the gentleman's own State, Senator OWEN, in the case which conformed in Two hundred and second United States, page 101, styled Eastern Cherokees against Cherokee Nation, held that these Eastern Cherokees in North Carolina had the right to recover over $1,000,000 for injuries done to them under the treaties by the United States Government. Oh, the gentleman can smile, but if he would read and study more, he would know more about the question. I recommend these decisions to the gentlemen and hope they will read them. That is what they held three years ago. There is now pending for attorneys' fees claimed to be due to Senator OWEN, of the gentleman's State, for services rendered to the Mississippi Choctaws, a case known as Winton et al. against Jack Amos et al., in the Court of Claims. I desire to read to you from a brief which was filed by Mr. OWEN in that case. I now quote to you what Mr. OWEN, who probably knows more about this question than any man in the United States, says about it, and this is a brief that he filed one year ago for a fee he claimed was owing to him and his associates.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Owing to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. Senator OWEN. Understand, though, gentlemen, I am not now discounting the services or criticizing him in this matter. I hold him in high esteem, and the services he rendered were the services of an attorney. Here is what he says about the McLennon roll of March 10, 1899. First, I want to say to you that if Judge Clayton, in 1897, was right in holding that the Mississippi Choctaws did not have any rights, why did Congress in 1898 pass the Curtis Act, authorizing the Dawes Commission to go into Mississippi and make a roll of the Mississippi Choctaws? They went there, and 1,923 Mississippi Choctaws were identified and placed upon that roll. It is known as the roll of March 10, 1899, and I want to read to you what Senator OWEN says about it.

He says:

The report declares that the Mississippi Choctaws were poor, ignorant, and helpless. This report in behalf of the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, signed and submitted by the Dawes Commission, was disapproved eight years later by Mr. Secretary Hitchcock, on March 4, 1907, without notice or without warrant. Against this treatment of the Mississippi Choctaws the petitioner, OWEN, from time to time vigorously protested, but in vain. It was obvious that although this report showed that at least twenty-five hundred full-blood Mississippi Choctaws, fourteenth-article claimants, were entitled to identification, they were poor, ignorant, and helpless, and the fact is also demonstrated that the Dawes Commission, which was expressly charged by law to identify these helpless, ignorant people, never did discharge their full duty in the premises.

He goes on further to say that this report was pigeonholed and disapproved eight years afterwards, thereby striking from the roll hundreds of acknowledged full-blood Mississippi Choctaws.

Ah, there is a roll with eleven hundred Mississippi Choctaws on it, and they have proven their rights, and it still remains in the Secretary of the Interior's office unapproved; and yet you would keep those poor people who have been identified from the rolls, and you would disburse and distribute this money among the people who live in Oklahoma, without allowing these unfortunates to share in the distribution. I will tell you what explains the secret about this proposition. They know that if they can distribute this money now in piecemeal there will not be anything left after a while in the event the Mississippi Choctaws ever get on the rolls. Here is a letter written by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to one of his constituents about this per capita payment. It says:

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1914.

B. M. MCDANIEL, Durant, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: On January 3, 1914, I proposed to the Indian appropriation bill an amendment for a per capita payment of $100 to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, which was adopted by the subcommittee and which we may be able to increase to $200 if handled properly.

You doubtless know that the only legislation necessary for a winding up of tribal affairs is a provision for a per capita distribution of our funds. This amendment is the first step on the last lap of a final settlement, and we expect to try to provide for these payments every year, so that all the funds may be distributed just as they are collected. Points of order, petitions, and every other possible opposition will be urged against this amendment, and the sentiment of our people should be made known.

You can assist materially by writing a letter to several members of the Indian Committee, whose names appear at the head of this letter, stating the long delay that has taken place in the settlement of our affairs, the necessity for bringing same to a close at the earliest possible date, and the dire need of these per capita payments.

I gave up my Christmas trip to Oklahoma because I wanted to be on hand at the proper time to get this matter started off right. Now, won't you take time to persuade your Indian friends to express their sentiments to different members of the committee? You are interested; get busy and help us.

Very truly, yours, C. D. CARTER.

There is the secret of this whole thing. They want to distribute the money, and if a poor Mississippi Choctaw ever can be permitted to come before Congress and prove his claim there will not be anything left for him to get. I tell you not to let the question of attorneys' fees get you from the real issue in this case.

If we admit that we can not write into the law the fact that no attorney shall gobble up these funds that these poor Indians are entitled to, then, indeed, we confess that we can not perform the duties that our people expect us to do. For one, I am in favor of making the limitation strong on these Indian attorneys. I went through my district last year, and I condemned the practice of this man, named in the McLaughlin report, publicly from the stump. I reported it to the Indian Office. My friend [Mr. CARTER] did also, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] also did that, and so did others. Sirs, do not take away from the Indians in Mississippi the rights that they are entitled to, because some shystering attorneys are trying to make money out of them. Let us fix the law so that the attorneys can not get the money. If you vote for a concurrence in this Senate amendment, the attorneys will not get a cent. It only says that the money will not be distributed at all until the Mississippi Choctaw shall have the right to come here and present his case. Are we asking too much of you? Let me recall to your minds that in 1831 this nation in the West filed a suit and recovered $3,000,000 net, for injuries done to the Mississippi Choctaws. Those $3,000,000 went absolutely and wholly into the funds of the Oklahoma Choctaws. It goes to them now. I ask you as honest men, I ask you as patriots, is it right that these moneys that these Oklahomans recovered for injuries done to the Mississippi Choctaws should be so distributed that the Mississippi Choctaws shall not be permitted to share in them?

Simple justice and right is all we ask in this matter. If you will take this brief of Senator OWEN and read it from top to bottom, you will see how he says the Mississippi Choctaws have been treated, and in every instance he says they have been treated very, very badly. Let me cite you an instance. In 1901, after the 1,923 Indians in Mississippi had been identified upon this roll, and which has never formed a part of the tribal roll, Mr. OWEN says that he advised his constituents through his coattorney not to go to the Dawes Commission again. He advised them to stay away. Let me read you what he says about it:

I do not recall writing any letter to an individual Mississippi Choctaw and do not think I did so, but I did write to Charles F. Winton and advised him that in my opinion the roll made by the Dawes Commission, dated March 10, 1899, had been made by an unauthorized tribunal, not subject to review by the Secretary of the Interior; that the decision in favor of the individuals on that roll by a tribunal duly authorized by Congress was a finality and constituted a favorable judgment in behalf of the individual Mississippi Choctaws who had been so enrolled; that they would put themselves in jeopardy if they voluntarily reappeared before the Dawes Commission for a reconsideration of their claim.

The roll to which I have referred—of March 10, 1899—which I regarded then, and which I regard now, as a finality in favor of the persons in whose behalf it was rendered.

There is what Senator OWEN says, and in speaking about this act of July 1, 1902, the act that McMurray, of Oklahoma, boasted that he wrote, the same man that got $1,000,000 attorney's fees for taking off the roll many Mississippi Choctaws, and who helped to create the citizenship court for the purpose of taking 4,000 Choctaw Indians from the rolls, and he succeeded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to notify the gentleman that he has consumed 25 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me read now what Mr. OWEN said about the act of July 1, 1902, the last act on this proposition. He says, speaking of the conditions of the Mississippi Choctaws:

These four conditions operated to bar and defeat probably a thousand Mississippi Choctaws, which I thought was grossly unjust and which I thought deprived them of a vested legal right. I therefore objected to these conditions and prayed for a liberal provision. The Choctaw authorities, acting through their attorneys and supported by the Interior Department, were sufficiently strong to force these provisions through the committees and through Congress over my earnest protest heretofore set up by the printed memorials I have submitted in Exhibit 1 of my deposition (p. 2560).

That is the way Senator OWEN says the Mississippi Choctaws have been treated, and he said that, not before he was elected to the Senate, either, but only one or two years ago, when he wrote this brief in the secrets of his counsel chamber and gave his deposition in the court. Be not deceived, sirs, you gentlemen from Oklahoma, as to the sentiment of your people in regard to these people in Mississippi who have been kept from the rolls. Mr. OWEN, who stands high in the estimation of your people and all the people, fought for their rights for a long time. His course was approved, and when you take a different course, then I say to you, watch out, do not take this money from the Mississippi Choctaws. In conclusion, simple justice is all we have asked for them. If we concur in this amendment, that settles the proposition. If we disagree and send it to conference, there my wily friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is one of the conferees and there my good friend from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] is one of the others, both fighting our contention. Will you send it to conference or will you ratify what the Senate said by a majority of 13? Will you ratify what this House said not three months ago by a vote of 118 to 49? Gentlemen, I submit it to you. Be not deceived by this attorney business. There is in this act, following this amendment, a provision that bars these attorneys from robbing these Indians. If this fails, we can write into the law, when we get that far, a provision that will deprive these oily attorneys of getting these fees. If we can not do that, we ought not to be here as representatives of the American people. [Loud applause.] Mr. Chairman, I withhold the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, in newspaper parlance the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] might very appropriately be placed under the heading of news items as "important if true."

He told you a great deal about what Senator OWEN said. Let us see what Senator OWEN did say in this brief of which the gentleman speaks:

I was the attorney of the Mississippi Choctaws who were enrolled by the Choctaw-Chickasaw agreement of 1902. I represented them from 1896 to 1906, and devoted my time to their interests for 10 years.

Senator OWEN says he was attorney for the Mississippi Choctaws from 1896 to 1906. He took his seat in the Senate in January, 1908. There was certainly nothing unethical in his representing the Mississippi Choctaws at that time under any kind of proper contract. But the Senator further says:

No Choctaw in Mississippi or elsewhere, not on the approved rolls of March 4, 1907, has any legal or equitable right to enrollment or to any further hearing.

Why did not the gentleman from Mississippi read that for the information of the committee, if he wanted to be fair and only ask for justice?

You have already been informed of the legal and equitable adjudication of the status of the Mississippi Choctaws as determined in the case of Jack Amos; that the case was sent to the Dawes Commission for adjudication under the treaty of 1830; that the case was decided adversely to the Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission, and that a like decision was rendered by the Federal courts.

In my limited time I am only going to ask you gentlemen to listen to the reading of the closing paragraph in the opinion of Federal Judge Clayton on this Mississippi Choctaw case, entitled Jack Amos and others against the Choctaw Nation:

To permit men with perchance but a strain of Choctaw blood in their veins, who, 65 years ago, broke away from their kindred and their nation, and during that time, or the most of it, have been exercising the rights of citizenship and doing homage to the sovereignty of another nation, who have borne none of the burdens of this nation, and have become strangers to the people, to reach forth their hands from their distant and alien home and lay hold of a part of the public domain, the common property of the people, and appropriate to their own use, would be unjust and unequitable.

The gentleman from Mississippi told you that Judge Townsend had also rendered a decision in the Mississippi Choctaw case. Judge Townsend did render many decisions in citizenship cases, but, as I remember, he dealt exclusively with what were called "court citizenship cases," and not Mississippi Choctaw cases. At any rate the gentleman from Mississippi was unable to cite his decision. Judge Townsend did not preside over the Choctaw Nation district. The limits of his district were confined to the Chickasaw Nation, and no part of the Choctaw Nation was included therein.

Judge Townsend lived in my home town, which was his principal court town. He was my neighbor during all the time that he presided over the Federal court there, and I was naturally more or less familiar with his decisions, but if he ever attempted any adjudication of a Mississippi Choctaw case it is beyond my memory.

What are the fundamental equities in this contention between the Indians in Oklahoma and the Indians in Mississippi? Some of the Mississippi Choctaws received lands in Mississippi, while others were given scrip for one-half the value of their lands and money for the other half, but the Western Choctaws received neither scrip, money, nor lands in Mississippi, but did get in lieu of these emoluments a reservation in the West. I hold in my hand a House document, No. 898, Sixty-first Congress, second session, containing an official letter from the Secretary of the Interior which gives the names of Mississippi Choctaws who were entitled to and did receive this scrip, and the gentleman must certainly have been familiar with these records. Why did he not call your attention to them if he only desires justice? After being forced to surrender the western half of this reservation to white settlers and other Indians, at the urgent demand of the white man's Government the Choctaws in the Indian Territory agreed to surrender to you their tribal government, the supervision of their funds, the supervision of their schools, the making of their tribal rolls, and take an allotment of part of their land in severalty. But they did not do this, mind you, until the white man's Government had made a solemn promise under two treaties that the residue of the lands would be sold and the proceeds thereof and all other funds divided per capita among them.

Now, what does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] propose to do? He says there are some indigent, helpless Indians in Mississippi; and even granting that to be true, are the Oklahoma Indians responsible for their destitute circumstances? Not in the least. The white people of Mississippi, who deprived them of their lands, are responsible for this deplorable condition. But our friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has found some other Indians in Oklahoma who have left a small share of their former estate, so he brings forth his socialist plan to take away from those who have in Oklahoma and give to those who have not in Mississippi, the law in the case and decisions of his own courts to the contrary notwithstanding.

Our friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] told you he brought about this investigation. If he did, he should have some proof of that fact, but he did not present any. I have worked pretty hard getting this investigation brought about. I have gone over all papers thoroughly and made many calls upon bureau and department heads, but have never heard of the gentleman from Mississippi having anything to do with it before.

Let us see what story the inspector's report tells of the gentleman's activity in connection with bringing about this investigation.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a short statement?

Mr. CARTER. No; I have not the time. I have only 12 minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield a minute of my time for the gentleman to answer the question.

Mr. CARTER. I did not know the gentleman had any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. CARTER. Then I ask that the gentleman use his minute before I proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. I was not going to use it, but I will yield it to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL].

Mr. ASWELL. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO], and I started this investigation and publicity over a year ago?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. ASWELL. And this crooked work of the attorney you mention was presented to the Post Office Department, to the Department of Justice, and to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by myself, and not only that, but it was denounced in the public press, first, by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and then by myself, and then by another Member from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO]. And that case was presented all over the southern country over a year ago by myself, the gentleman from Mississippi, and another gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana knows just about as much about this investigation as he does about the Mississippi Choctaw question. If he had read this report he would know that this investigation started in the latter part of 1910, and that Inspector W. W. McConihe made a report on the matter under date of May 2, 1911. I presented this matter to the department, in 1910, and I have been urging the department ever since that time to get busy on it. About last August the files in my office had become so congested with reports of this fraud, one of them coming from no less a personage than the governor of one of the largest States in the Middle West, another from a former Representative from Louisiana, one of the ablest men that ever represented that State in this House, and from other important and reputable personages. I again took the matter up with the Indian Bureau, and at the request of Oklahoma's two Senators and myself other inspectors were put on the job. You will observe, my friend, that this investigation has been going on for about four years, at least for two years before you came to Congress. But let's see what the report discloses:

Our friend from Mississippi says he brought about this investigation. On page 25 of these hearings, which is a part of the inspector's report, is found the following statement:

The said Luke W. Conerly is 73 years of age and a lawyer by profession, but has not practiced in the courts for several years past.

Further on, also, that—

It was he [Conerly] who first interested Congressman HARRISON of Mississippi in Choctaw matters and got him to introduce the bill for reopening the Choctaw rolls.

Who was Luke W. Conerly? According to his own statement, he is one of the men who has been associated with such negro grafters as Powell in looking up these claimants and taking contracts for this proposition.

Now, when our friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] addressed this House on February 20 last he attempted to give us some information concerning some old contracts that had been disposed of 10 or 12 years ago and about which he seemed to know very little. It seems to me the gentleman might have much more appropriately given us at that time some information concerning these real live contracts.

Let us see what else this little record shows: The gentlemen behind these contracts seem to have had a very active press bureau, as is evidenced by some of their dope, collected by Inspector McLaughlin. I find the following on page 39 of this document, and I notice it has printed at the top "Associated Press" in parentheses.

While I realize that the Associated Press is not in any wise responsible for this, we all know the advantage of having the public believe such a substantial organization is responsible for news items. What does this press bureau say?

WOULD RESTORE CHOCTAW INDIAN PENSION BILLS.

[Associated Press.]

WASHINGTON, December 13.

The bill introduced in the House last session by Representative HARRISON, providing reopening of rolls of the Chickasaw-Choctaw Indian Tribes, came up for consideration in the House yesterday. A vote was not reached. In his speech in favor of the bill, Mr. HARRISON said in part:

"The Mississippi Choctaws have been woefully neglected and unmercifully treated"—

And so forth.

Again, we find on page 37 one of the notices sent out by this man Powell over his own signature, part of which reads as follows:

NOTICE TO INDIANS AND THEIR DESCENDANTS—IN CONNECTION WITH HON. HARRY PEYTON, ROOM 420 BOND BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

This is your last chance to secure benefits under the bill introduced by Hon. PAT HARRISON, of the sixth district of Mississippi, now pending before the Sixty-second Congress, for the relief of Mississippi Choctaws and their descendants who remained in Mississippi after the treaty of 1830.

I am an Indian and a Spaniard and my grandfather was a signer of the treaty of 1830.

I will be glad to write up all beneficiaries, and I have in my possession a record that will enable you to trace your ancestors back to 1780.

Those with negro blood need not apply.

I will be at ——— Miss., on the —— day of ———, 1912.

ALEXANDER P. POWELL,
No. 106 Fourth Avenue, Laurel, Miss.
Office: Room 420, Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

Here is still another:

[Alexander P. Powell, representative Mississippi Choctaw Indians; office, room 408, Bond Building, Washington, D. C.; 331 Pine Street, Laurel, Miss.]

SHREVEPORT, LA., October 28, 1913.

MR. COLUMBUS OVERMAN, Dexter, Kans.

DEAR SIR: Yours of recent date to hand. Beg to advise that I have already written up a number of your relatives under their great-great-grandmother Delilah, who was an Indian woman, and if you wish to be written up, on receipt of $2.50, which I require for recording fee, etc., I will send you blanks to be filled out. I do not charge you any fee, but when I collect for you I get 20 per cent of collections.

I am also inclosing you a Pat Harrison bill and other literature, and you can see for yourself how the case stands.

Yours, truly,

ALEXANDER P. POWELL.

And so on all through this document.

Who is Alexander P. Powell? He is a negro—one of the most active agents in procuring these contracts. He is one of the men described by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], as I remember, as a burr-headed negro, a scheming, grafting, shyster attorney.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say I agree that the Missisippi Choctaw has been mistreated. This Government made a serious mistake when it sent this arrogant, drunken agent, Ward, down to Mississippi, and his actions were a disgrace to the Government he represented; but it can not be denied such action was an advantage to the settlers living in Mississippi, because it enabled them to get the land to which the Choctaws were entitled. And in that the Mississippi Choctaw was woefully mistreated by the people of Mississippi, for had it not been for the collusion of these early settlers of Mississippi with this agent, Ward, the Choctaws would still own valuable land in that State. But whatever may have been the sad fate of the Mississippi Choctaw, his mistreatment can not honestly and justly be brought to the door of his fellow tribesmen in Oklahoma, for they have ever stood with open arms, ready and willing to welcome him into full citizenship of their tribe and all its emoluments whenever he would come among them and agree to be one of them.

Once the Choctaw Nation owned a vast area of valuable land in the State of Mississippi, but he has been deprived of it by his shrewder white neighbors, worthy ancestors, perhaps, of these gentlemen who are now attempting to complete their debauchery upon those who left the State and went to Oklahoma. And now a Choctaw in many instances has come to be a penniless vagabond, a homeless wanderer, a stranger, as it were, around his own fireside.

But why theorize? Why temporize? Why even sympathize? This is just another example of the white man's "benevolent assimilation" steam roller.

The proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi presents the same old story of broken faith, repudiated promises, robbery, and debauchery of the aborigines, the same old story that caused a great woman of your own race to write a book denominating the first 100 years of this great Government as a "century of dishonor," and now these gentlemen would have you perpetuate this dishonor.

The once powerful Choctaw Tribe, erstwhile monarch of all it surveyed, was the white man's friend. The white man's history tells us that the Choctaw was the friend and ally of the paleface during all the early wars on this continent, even joining issue with the white man against other tribes of his own race, and that "the Choctaw never raised the tomahawk against the Great White Father at Washington, nor his children," though oftentimes urged so to do by other tribes of his red brethren, and as often scorned by them for his refusal.

That part of the great Choctaw Tribe—this ally of the white man against his own kith and kin—which remained in Mississippi has in the name of your Christian civilization been deprived of every vestige of his former home and property, and why? In order that the white man in Mississippi might have a home and the progress of the great State of Mississippi be not retarded.

Those comprising that more aggressive and virile band of Choctaws who moved west and set up their own government under your solemn pledge that they should be free from further intrusion by the white man "so long as grass grows and water runs" have been forced and browbeaten into accepting a reservation of only a small part of their former holdings and coerced into ceding the residue of their lands for homes for others.

And now, for no further reason than that they have absorbed from your race sufficient thrift and frugality to retain a small modicum of their former vast estate, you ask them to discharge your obligations. You call upon them to make amends for the rotten acts of an arrogant, drunken agent of your own race, of your own choice, of your own selection, and because, forsooth, they have acquired from you sufficient temerity to refuse and assume to assert their rights under your own laws, under your own court decisions, they are now to be branded as selfish, stingy misers, sordid and avaricious, because they will not surrender their last small pittance in atonement for your miserable misdeeds. And worst of all, Mr. Chairman, is the lamentable fact that such a selfish and ungenerous sentiment as this finds lodgment in the usually clear and liberal minds of those who have risen to the high rank of this the greatest legislative body in the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment numbered 139.

Mr. HARRISON. The Chair says "recede and concur."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman's motion was to recede and concur.

Mr. HARRISON. No, Mr. Chairman; it is simply to concur.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The bill has not yet gone to conference. It is the motion to concur. The question before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to concur in Senate amendment 139.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 66.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. STEPHENS of Texas and Mr. HARRISON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 71.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] to disagree to the Senate amendment numbered 139.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, what was the motion? I understood that it was to disagree and send the bill to conference.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order for the committee to send the bill to conference. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. MANN. What is the matter with amendment numbered 1?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. This amendment was considered out of its place. The Clerk will report amendment numbered 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment numbered 1, on page 2: Strike out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The first amendment is to strke out a portion of the Senate bill, and the second amendment is to insert a substitute therefor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that we nonconcur in this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire that the committee vote on both amendments at the same time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire that the committee vote on them both at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in amendments numbered 1 and 2 at the same time, as the one is to strike out and the other is to insert. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Amendment numbered 2 has not been reported. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to disagree to them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that we disagree to the amendments 1 and 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to disagree to amendments numbered 1 and 2. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report Senate amendment numbered 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment numbered 3: Page 5, line 10, after the word "prescribe," insert:

"And annually thereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to Congress a cost account in detail of all moneys, from whatever source derived, expended on each such irrigation project for the preceding fiscal year, including a résumé of previous expenditures, which shall show the number of Indians on the reservation"——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be disagreed to, without further reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that this amendment be disagreed to without further reading. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will conclude the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

where the land is irrigated, irrigable area under ditch, irrigable area under project (approximate), irrigable area cultivated by Indians, irrigable area cultivated by lessees, amount expended on construction to June 30 of the preceding fiscal year, amount necessary to complete, and cost per acre when completed (estimated); value of land when irrigated, and such other detailed information as may be requisite for a thorough understanding of the conditions on each system or project.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Is the language of this amendment substantially the same as the language in the bill when it was reported to the House?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand it is. We want to nonconcur for the purpose of making that examination.

Mr. MANN. For the purpose of making what examination?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To see whether or not it corresponds with the law at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Why should we not concur in this amendment? Is not this proper?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that I am in accord with the amendment. There is something in the existing law now—I think it was carried in the appropriation act of 1910 or 1911—that requires most of this information to be furnished; and I think it would be much better to disagree to the amendment in order that the conference may have an opportunity of examining it and possibly perfecting it.

Mr. MANN. This bill came over to the House some time ago with Senate amendments. It was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think it is the duty of the Committee on Indian Affairs to be prepared to give the House information about amendments of this sort.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that further information has gone to the Senate committee than was possessed by our committee?

Mr. MANN. I am aware of this, that the gentleman from Texas and his committee have had plenty of time, since the amendment was agreed to in the Senate, to know about it, and a great deal more time than they will have while this bill is in conference. Now, why should not our friends on the committee, when this bill was referred to the committee, come in here and give the House some information about the Senate amendment instead of having everything legislated secretly—in secret conference?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this bill passed the House in February, and that it has been in the Senate for several months? They investigated it very thoroughly, and they added this amendment, which to some extent changed existing law. We did not have the opportunity to compare the two laws as we desired. On the face of it, this amendment appears to be a good one; but still I would not be satisfied to pass it without a chance to investigate it.

Mr. MANN. I am aware that this bill passed the Senate two weeks ago and has been before the House for two weeks, during which time the gentleman from Texas has had opportunity to examine this and other amendments. I am also aware of the fact that when the bill goes to conference he will not use two weeks' time to examine the amendments, but the conferees will dispose of this amendment in conference in three seconds. That is what they will do. Now, instead of adopting the old method, where the Senate has added as many amendments as it has to this Indian bill, why should not the gentleman take the House into his confidence?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that this does not carry any increased appropriation. It is only declaratory of what the law is now, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Then why should we not agree to it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have some reasons, unknown to us, why they wanted it in here, and we want to consult with them.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We want to get the benefit of the information which has been furnished to them by the department since the bill passed the House.

Mr. MANN. If the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which this bill has been referred, come before the House on these Senate amendments, 168 in number, and plead ignorance on each one of them, as I apprehend the committee are going to do, I think it is a shame to the House and to the committee itself. They have had more time to investigate these amendments than they will have in conference, and there are more of them to investigate the amendments. The Committee on Indian Affairs took this bill, and without ever reading the amendments, without any consideration of the amendments at all, said, "We will disagree to all of them," when that is not the intention of the committee in the end. What they want to do is to send the bill to conference, where in secret conference they will determine what they will put in the bill and what they will leave out, and not take the House into their confidence.

Now, here is a simple proposition. The gentleman from Texas knows as well now as he will two weeks from now whether he is going to agree to it. Why not tell the House now whether he is in favor of it?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The thing which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is condemning is the practice of the House upon every appropriation bill after it comes back from the Senate. If it is now going to be the policy of the House on this bill to concur in every amendment that may appear to the House to be desirable legislation, it seems to me it is going to leave the conferees in a position where they can not hope to get as good a compromise as they can get otherwise, if some of the amendments that we can yield on are left to us, in order that we may have something to offer to the other body when we get into conference. If you are going to concur in every amendment which appears to be meritorious, and then leave in conference only the amendments that the Senate has put in that the House does not seem inclined to agree to, we certainly shall be handicapped; and I will say to the House that we will not bring back as good a conference report and as good a compromise as we will if we are left to go to the Senate with all of these amendments of the Senate disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is mistaken, in my opinion. This bill is not in the same position that ordinary appropriation bills have been in in the past. It is customary to disagree to all Senate amendments and ask for a conference. That action was not taken in this case. This bill was not taken from the Speaker's table and all the Senate amendments disagreed to and the bill sent to conference. On the contrary, it was sent to the committee. The committee reported it back. It is now being considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a very unusual thing with Senate amendments to appropriation bills. Why has that course been pursued? Because for years every old claim agent in Washington and everywhere else who could manage in some way to get hold of an Indian claim put in his time trying to get an amendment put on the Indian bill in the Senate; and sometimes, for lack of full information on the part of Senators, the claim agent succeeded. This year there are more Senate amendments of doubtful character upon the Indian bill than there have ever been before, I think, in my experience in the House. Now, the gentlemen who will be on the conference committee will tell the gentlemen here that they know nothing about these amendments. When are they going to learn about them? They have had two weeks since the bill came over from the Senate. Undoubtedly they followed the Senate amendments as they were considered in the Senate. When the bill gets to conference it will not be before the conferees two weeks. They will probably dispose of these amendments in 24 hours, or less than that, if you consider the time actually involved while the conferees are sitting. I do not ask the House to agree to some of these amendments, although the House might be favorable to them. I think we are entitled to know whether the committee knows anything about them before we send them to conference.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not being a mind reader, I can not tell what influenced the Senate or the Senate conferees.

Mr. MANN. No; but I, being a mind reader, do know.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman has supernatural powers then.

Mr. MANN. It does not require any supernatural powers. All it requires is an ordinary knowledge of ordinary men's minds.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then what does the gentleman, with his supernatural powers, say about this?

Mr. MANN. I think something very similar to this amendment was in the bill when it was presented to the House. It went out. The gentleman then was strongly in favor of it. Now he is opposed to it, and in neither case has he been willing to give his reasons.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then the gentleman is not willing to submit this to a conference between the two Houses?

Mr. MANN. As far as this particular amendment is concerned, I do not care one way or the other whether it goes to conference or not. There are a lot of amendments in here, and unless the gentleman will give us some information in reference to some of them and let us know something about what he thinks of the amendments, I will tell the gentleman that this bill will not go to conference to-day.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that I do not think we ought to concur in this without further investigation with the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is what the gentleman is prepared to state about every amendment. That is all he has stated about this. He says, "I do not know about this amendment. I do not think we ought to agree to it. I think we ought to send it to conference, where, when it gets into conference, and I get in a back room with a Senator, I will say whether it goes in the bill or not."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman say——

Mr. MANN. I am not accusing the gentleman of anything improper at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman believe conferences ought to be held in the open?

Mr. MANN. I think it would be a wise thing if they could be. I do not think it will be done right away.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] moves to disagree to Senate amendment numbered 3.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 6, strike out the figures "$260,000" and insert the figures "$310,000," and the following language:

"Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended in the erection, equipment, and maintenance of camp and pavilion hospitals for the use of afflicted Indians, and especially for the treatment of Indians afflicted with tuberculosis and trachoma. No hospital shall be constructed at a cost to exceed $12,500. Said sum to be immediately available and to remain available until expended. Said hospitals to be constructed in the open market under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make one or two observations on this amendment, as I understand this is the only opportunity Members of the House will have to present their views. To my mind the appropriation for this paragraph is one of the most important contained in the bill. The purpose is to relieve the physical distress of many of the Indians of the United States. The Indians throughout the country are suffering from two distinct diseases—tuberculosis and trachoma—both infectious, communicable diseases. It is the purpose of the department and the purpose of Congress that an adequate sum shall be provided in this bill with which to carry on the warfare against these two malignant diseases in order that the health of the Indians may be enormously improved.

I do not know just what plans the Interior Department may have for carrying on this warfare against the diseases, but it appears, however, that it is desired to erect certain hospitals. There can be no criticism of that purpose. Unquestionably some hospitals will need to be erected. At most, Mr. Chairman, these hospitals are for a transient purpose. It is expected that the occasion for them will, as the work progresses, disappear. I think we all unite in the hope that that event will occur soon.

The bill as it passed the House provided that not to exceed $15,000 shall be appropriated for the erection of any one hospital. At the time it was before the committee I was of the opinion that $15,000 was a very small sum, and it seems to me wholly inadvisable for the department to erect a lot of lean-tos all through the United States to carry on this work.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think that for the treatment of the Indians we ought to have one big hospital?

Mr. MILLER. I do not.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the gentleman was finding fault with the appropriation of $15,000—that it was not sufficient for the erection of a hospital.

Mr. MILLER. I do; but I do not take the position indicated by the gentleman's question.

Mr. FOSTER. I simply did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. I do not believe any kind of a hospital can be erected for $12,500 that will be of any value. I think it ought to be restored to the old sum of $15,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I think in that the gentleman is mistaken. This character of a hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis and trachoma is not like the ordinary hospitals.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman will understand that there is no duty on the Secretary of the Interior to expend $15,000 or $5,000 if the hospital does not need it. But this says that no hospital can be erected on an expenditure of over $12,500.

Mr. FOSTER. The Secretary of the Interior would erect a number of these hospitals convenient for the Indians. Unless you are going to erect a large hospital, which would cost a large sum and be expensive for maintenance, you would naturally want these small hospitals, which would be inexpensive.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with the gentleman that we want a number of small hospitals for this work, but I think the limitation that no hospital shall be contracted for to cost more than $12,500 is too small a sum, and that $15,000 should be restored.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the Senate amendment by striking out in next to the last line of the amendment the words "in the open market."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment, in line 14, by striking out the words "in the open market."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall move to concur in the Senate amendment. This amendment increases the amount appropriated to relieve distress among the Indians and for the treatment of the diseases from $260,000 to $310,000, and provides that $100,000 of it may be used in the construction of hospitals for the use of Indians afflicted with tuberculosis and trachoma. It limits the amount that may be expended on any one hospital to $12,500, and provides that the hospital shall be constructed in the open market, under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I take it the words "in the open market" mean without making contracts or receiving bids. I do not think we ought to provide that the hospitals shall be constructed without receiving bids. Therefore I have moved the amendment, and whether that prevails or not, I shall move to concur in the Senate amendment giving the Indians the hospitals and increasing the total appropriation $50,000 and diverting $100,000 of the total appropriation toward the building of the hospitals for tuberculosis and the treatment of tuberculosis and trachoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agree with the gentleman, that the term "in the open market" is not a definite term, and for that reason I asked to disagree to the Senate amendment No. 4.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois demonstrates, it seems to me and to the House, that these amendments ought all to be disagreed to and considered in conference, because before making the motion to concur the gentleman wishes to perfect this amendment; and if he is going to perfect it by striking out the words "in the open market," it ought to be perfected in other particulars. I call attention to the language "Commissioner of Indian Affairs." It is a very unusual way to provide for the expenditure of money appropriated to be expended for the benefit of the Indians. It is always provided that the Secretary of the Interior shall expend the money and I think everyone will admit that if we are to expend money for the erection of hospitals for tuberculosis and other diseases, it ought to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the same as other appropriations are expended.

Then there is in this language the words "such sum to be immediately available." This is unnecessary for any purpose, because when this bill becomes a law the appropriations will become immediately available. That language was put in there because it was supposed the bill would become a law before the end of the fiscal year, and it was for the purpose of making the money available so that it might be used immediately.

As to the question of $12,500 as a limitation that may be expended for the construction of one hospital, I will say to the House that I was a member of a commission that was appointed in this Congress to visit the different Indian reservations for the purpose of making some investigation of conditions with reference to trachoma and tuberculosis, and when this bill was considered in the Indian Committee of the House we considered very carefully the question of limitations, and it was the opinion that there are reservations where $12,500 would not provide such a hospital as there ought to be and that $15,000 was the smallest amount that should be named in the limitation. I think, with the gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, that many hospitals can be built for $12,500, some for $7,000, and perhaps some for less, because they will be merely camps; but in the Northwest there are places where it will be necessary to expend more than $12,500 to get anything like such a hospital as we ought to have to meet the requirements upon some of the reservations.

There is that question to be considered, and then there is the question of increasing the appropriation, and this bill is filled with increases, and it would seem to me that the proper procedure for the House is to disagree to this amendment and let the conferees deal with it in conference, where they can perfect it better than we can perfect it here in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I now move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], who will be one of the conferees, naturally and properly does that which all gentlemen do in the House in reference to matters of this sort where they will be conferees. They want the whole matter to go to conference. I would not have any very great respect for one of the conferees on these appropriation bills who did not wish to have the whole thing go to conference. But, after all, the assumption that three conferees named on the part of the House to consider these numerous Senate amendments know more about the amendments than the entire body of the House is a pure assumption. The experience of many years in the House has taught me that they do not. If they knew anything at all about the amendments, they might give that information to the House now; and the assumption that when the conferees go over these 168 amendments they sit down with the distinguished Senators who are conferees and spend two or three hours discussing each amendment and perfecting it is also a pure matter of assumption. The average time spent on these amendments by the conferees will not be 10 minutes to an amendment. They will not know about it; they are not in as good a shape to perfect an amendment as we are. The gentleman from South Dakota suggests several needed amendments to this amendment. Let us make them. The committee has just refused to make one which ought to be made. If this committee and this House wants to go on record that it is opposed to building hospitals for the Indians having tuberculosis, let them go on record to that effect. They will have the opportunity if they want to embrace it. They have the opportunity now. I am in favor of giving these hospitals and making this appropriation, an increase of $50,000, for the purpose of building hospitals for the benefit of the Indians who have tuberculosis and trachoma, both of which diseases are spreading rapidly among the Indians, with a great number of fatalities.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. During the last administration President Taft sent what, to my mind, was a very strong and forceful special message to Congress urging it to do something about this very matter.

Mr. MANN. We have had it urged for years; but when our distinguished conferees go over to the Senate they will trade something off for this. What do they care about this?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that we have already adopted in the bill that passed the House I think a sufficient amount of money to provide for all of these hospitals for trachoma, tuberculosis, and smallpox, and other infectious diseases, and also to correct any sanitary defects in the Indian homes, and so forth. The Senate has only changed the language, and in that change of language they have not certainly read or understood the entire provision of the amendment. They provide, in lines 14 and 15, that these hospitals shall be constructed under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; and on the same page, in lines 24 and 25, they provide for hospitals for the use of such Indians as the Secretary of the Interior may designate. Therefore, they have changed the law, and have in the same section one provision putting it under the Secretary of the Interior and another putting it under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the gentleman in favor of hospitals for the Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman endeavor in conference to agree to some provision that will give hospitals to the Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We will; and we will endeavor to harmonize the amendments.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Texas will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the bill as passed by the House carries $50,000 for hospitals, the cost of none of which is to exceed $15,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope that the conferees will agree to the amendment for $310,000.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PAGE of North Carolina having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2, 1914.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, we found in our trip last fall that the building of a big hospital will be utterly impractical and impossible for the accommodation of Indians. You can not get the Indian to go very far away from his home to a hospital. Consequently you have to build on his reservation, and a great many of the reservations are small and sparsely settled. In some instances it is impossible to get the Indian to move from one reservation to an adjoining reservation. You always have trouble in getting a full-blood Indian in any kind of a hospital at all. Consequently it is very necessary we have small hospitals and have more of them; hence the limitation placed in this item.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is there any need of large hospitals for treating these particular diseases?

Mr. CARTER. As I said, we found that it would not be best to construct large central hospitals.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I misunderstood the gentleman; he stated it correctly.

Mr. CARTER. In our investigation last fall we found the doctor on the reservation, the superintendent, the Indians, and everyone else unanimous in their opinion that the Indian would not leave the reservation and go to a distant hospital, and you would probably have some difficulty in getting him into a hospital even on the reservation. It does not come about from the objection of the fellow who is sick alone, but it comes about from the objection of his relatives, his parents, or his children.

The Indian is very fond of his relatives, and when he is sick his relatives seek to keep him with them. You will find a great deal of difficulty if you attempt to take the Indians off into distant hospitals. The best idea is to build small hospitals on Indian reservations, and these ought not to cost very much money. They ought to be constructed very cheaply; especially those for tuberculosis ought to be open-air hospitals. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and I had some discussion about this matter when this item passed the House. The gentleman put some remarks in the RECORD which I thought were very pertinent to the subject, and, as usual, the gentleman knew just what he was talking about. I believe it was my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] who said if he wanted to know how large a crop of Kafir corn he raised on his farm last year, just how high it grew and the exact yield, he would not send back to Oklahoma to get the report, but he would only go to the gentleman from Illinois and, if it was obtainable, he would have it.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to ask my friend: In lines 11 and 12, which is a limitation on the bill, would that be workable in all cases?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman means page 6?

Mr. FERRIS. On page 6, lines 11 and 12, and the question is this: Some of the agencies only have a small band of Indians, while another agency might have a large band, and I wondered if $12,500 was sufficient to construct a hospital large enough for the largest band of Indians?

Mr. CARTER. I think that might be placed at $15,000, and there might not be objection to going as high as $20,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Why does not the gentleman from Illinois—the sentiment seems almost unanimous—let it go to conference, and let the conference committee see if this is workable?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think they know any more about it? The House passed it at $15,000 and the Senate puts it at $12,500.

Mr. FERRIS. I will try to answer the gentleman. The gentleman knows a lump-sum appropriation like this finally gets down to the Indian Office, where they work out the details, and I have no doubt the conferees might bring in the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and counsel with him as regards the workability in reference to placing these hospitals on the reservations.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows the people who will work out the details will be those who have to do with the construction of the hospital. We build eight hospitals the next fiscal year which this would authorize, and there are plenty of places we could put those.

In a few years we will have a great many more than eight. We can tell after we build the first one really what ought to be done and what it will cost. And all they tell us in advance will be, in the main, hot air.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We did have under construction a number of hospitals, one on the Kiowa and Comanche Reservation in Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized. We have one or more hospitals under erection, or already constructed, on the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota. One has been constructed for the Kiowas and Comanches in Oklahoma. We are constructing now several on the Sioux reservations in South Dakota, out of Indian funds. We also have one at Lapwai, in Idaho, and one at Phoenix, Ariz. I think there is a provision in this bill that provides for repealing the act that authorized the sale of the agency property of the Fort Spokane Reservation in Washington for the purpose of making that a hospital, and I think also there are items in the bill that contemplate hospitals in connection with some of the nonreservation Indian schools. We are making great progress with reference to preparing to deal with trachoma and tuberculosis, and when the gentleman says that we are opposed to appropriations for this purpose he certainly is unfair, because it is not in accord with the record that the committee has made in dealing with this subject.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota if he thought it worth while to incorporate an amendment in this provision which would provide that when Indians have plenty of money they pay for their own hospitals? The gentleman knows some places where that would not apply and some where it would.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think it is the intention to build these hospitals on reservations where there are tribal moneys available that may be used for the construction of hospitals.

Mr. FERRIS. There is nothing in the act to preclude that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The money of the Sioux of South Dakota, under the agreement of 1889, received as proceeds from the sale of their surplus lands, goes into the Treasury and is expended for their support and civilization, and we are building at the present time some hospitals upon some of the Sioux reservations. And for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] I will state that on the Cheyenne Reservation, in my State, I think they are planning to build a hospital that is going to cost nearly $25,000, and that is because a hospital costing less than that would not be sufficient for the needs of that reservation, and it would be poor economy to establish more than one hospital upon that reservation, because the expense of upkeep and equipment and the physicians that would be necessary would cause the expense of maintenance and operation to be greater.

Mr. FOSTER. Usually in treating this class of cases it is better to have fewer in number associated together than a large number. And hospitals can be built in such a way as that they can be added to at any time it becomes necessary without changing any of the plans.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman I think the best equipped hospital we saw while on our trip West was at Phoenix, Ariz. The hospital proper was comparatively a small building, constructed in a way that it was open on all sides. As I recall, there was no hall. It was built so that there were porches on the side, and screened, so that practically the patients were in the open air. And then in connection with this hospital they have built little cottages which cost only $100, I think, where the patients with tuberculosis are kept; as a rule, only one patient in a cottage.

As to trachoma, that is not so important and does not require so much of a hospital as does tuberculosis. Patients only need to be isolated for a period of a few days, so they say, although they ought to be kept from coming in contact with those not afflicted for a reasonable time. The important thing about trachoma, after the first few days, is to have the patients where they can receive proper attention daily until such time as they have recovered; and therefore, unless they are put into hospitals, they do not get anywhere with suppressing the disease. If the Indians are left to treat themselves, they will not do what they must do to be cured.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary situation is, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] moved to disagree, but the gentleman from Illinois moved to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the motion of the gentleman from Illinois fails, is that equivalent to a motion to disagree?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment numbered 4.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 19.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 15, insert the word "further."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to agree to that. There is one provision here above that we have just read, and this is verbal. I think we should agree to that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not want to agree to that. That ought not to go in there unless the previous amendment is agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to disagree to the Senate amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to disagree to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 17, strike out the word "thirteen" and insert the word "eleven."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I move, Mr. Chairman, that we agree to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to concur in the Senate amendment numbered 6.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 7: Page 7, after the word "designate," strike out the remainder of line 1 down to and including the word "equipment" and the colon in line 6.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, that is part of the first amendment that we have been considering. I move that we disagree to that also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that we disagree to Senate amendment numbered 7.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 9, strike out all after the word "herein" down to and including the word "examination" and the colon.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have reported the language that was stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the language that is stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, employ physicians regularly licensed to practice to aid in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph without requiring such employed physicians to pass any civil-service examination.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House disagree to Senate amendment numbered 8.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that this will be disagreed to—the amendment striking out the paragraph read—and that the conferees will insist upon its retention in the bill when it finally becomes a law.

Unless this feature is retained, to my mind the $310,000 appropriated in the paragraph might just about as well be taken down and thrown into the Potomac River. On one or two other occasions I made the same observation, and I desire to renew it here with emphasis.

The purpose of this exceptional expenditure of $310,000 is to fight malignant infectious diseases now ravaging among and destroying the Indians of the United States. It is not to build up a corps of governmental employees. It is not to create new jobs for additional employees who may want positions, but it is to bring the best-trained science of American genius to combat the terrible ravages of these named diseases.

Now, as the Secretary of the Interior is compelled, as he will be unless this paragraph becomes a part of the law, to spend this $310,000 by hiring civil-service employees, he is restricted to the class of employees who pass the examination and enter the service. You will never get a trained scientific physician or a recognized leading physician respecting these diseases to pass a civil-service examination. You will never get one to devote any of his time to this work. The Secretary of the Interior would be obliged to select from the men who pass the examination. Who are they? We are not a bit in doubt. We have had years of experience. Men interested in Indian affairs have traveled over the United States and brought in reports most voluminous. The men who are created physicians to enter the Indian Service by passing a civil-service examination, nearly all of them, belong to one or two classes—either the young man without experience, who has never even treated a sore eye or a sore nose or a sore thumb, fresh from college, who has the ability to pass the examination, or else some more elderly physician who has made a failure of his practice and is anxious to get a $1,000 job.

Now, we are never going to produce the results we hope for in making this extraordinary appropriation if we are to employ men of those two classes. I understand the only source that any objection comes from to this paragraph is the Civil Service Commission. Now, I have no objection to their entering a protest. I suppose very likely it is their province and their duty to try to preserve to themselves all the powers they can and to keep the service of the United States pretty largely within their own hands. But we must not lose sight of the fact that this is an extraordinary appropriation, and the hands of the Secretary of the Interior ought not to be tied by any of the rules or restrictions that will tie his hands unless this paragraph is adopted. I want to see him go out and secure the best talent that has been developed among the splendid physicians of the United States to do this humanitarian work among the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have no desire to occupy more than a minute. My opinion about this provision of the bill is not only that it ought not to be agreed to, and that they should not be under the civil service, but there ought to be a provision that these men should be under the Public Health Service, and that these men should be assigned from that service to the Indian Service, so that they might be properly selected by a trained physician from a department of the Government that is now under thorough organization, and they then would have the proper supervision of a trained branch of the public service. But you can not build it up in the Indian Office, and you can never get a successful service in this way. The Indian Office does not give its time to this and ought not to be expected to do so. It ought to be turned over to the Health Service to be carried on in that way.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield to a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that in making examinations through the Civil Service Commission for places of this sort the Civil Service Commission calls on the Public Health Service for aid?

Mr. FOSTER. I think they do; but still there is, outside of the civil-service examination, a knowledge that is not gained by that examination as to the qualifications of a physician to do that particular kind of work.

Mr. MANN. The examination may not mean merely a written mental examination. Here, for instance, we have just had a provision in reference to the valuation of railroads, and the President issued an order covering those places under the civil-service law. Of course many people thought that ought not to be done. I think it was the opinion of the Interstate Commerce Commission that it ought not to be done.

I suppose the President and everybody would concede that it is possible to select better men than you get through the Civil Service Commission; yet I have no doubt that, as a matter of fact, they will get better men in that way than they would have gotten in the other way, and that is more expert than this is.

Mr. FOSTER. If you are going to select physicians to take charge of these small hospitals over the country, I think there ought to be the greatest latitude given to the Public Health Service to select the proper class for that particular work, and you can not possibly get it under a civil-service examination.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman aware of the maximum sum that can be paid by the Interior Department for service of this kind?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not aware of the amount, but I know it is small.

Mr. MILLER. It is extremely small; infinitely less than can be paid under the Public Health Service. For that reason you can not get good men.

Mr. FOSTER. But, in my judgment, you can get better men through the Public Health Service for this work than the Commissioner of Indian Affairs can get, regardless of who he is; it is not against him that such is the case. The present gentleman who holds that place is a very competent official, but is not versed in medicine.

Mr. MILLER. I think the whole sum should be expended by the Public Health Service. There is no question about that in my mind.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think the suggestion of the gentleman is very good, indeed, and I would like to ask him if he thinks it would be possible to get competent men for this service for the money that is paid?

Mr. FOSTER. You can not get men specially trained for this work, and yet there are a good many young physicians who have graduated from medical colleges and served as internes in hospitals who are willing to go out and take these positions.

They are bright, good young men who get the experience they want in that sort of work, and they are willing to do it though the pay is small. They are good physicians and conscientious men.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And they go for the purpose of experience only, and get the experience at the expense of the Indians.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; that is not the fact. There are many young men who graduate in medicine who are poor, and it enables them to get some practice, and get money to start on possibly, for a year or two, but you can not hold those men for a great length of time as they could not afford to stay permanently for the salary. It is impossible to do it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. You can not hold the competent men.

Mr. FOSTER. Because the good men are not going to stay there a great length of time for the pay they get. A superintendent would probably be paid more.

Mr. WOODRUFF. You can not hold the competent men.

Mr. FOSTER. You can hold competent men for a while, but you can not expect to hold them for any length of time. I do not desire to be understood that these young men are not competent. Physicians do not usually make a great deal of money in practice, but it would be difficult to keep men on small salaries all their lives.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention of gentlemen to the fact that, under the order of the House, at 5 o'clock the House will stand in recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to have a vote on this question, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to disagree to Senate amendment numbered 8.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE FOR TO-NIGHT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will designate the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] to preside as Speaker pro tempore this evening.

SIXTH INTERNATIONAL DENTAL CONGRESS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 105, authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the Sixth International Dental Congress.

The Clerk reported the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 105.

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and is hereby, authorized to accept an invitation extended by the Government of Great Britain to that of the United States to be represented by delegates in the Sixth International Dental Congress, to be held at London, August 3 to 8, 1914, and is authorized to appoint 15 delegates to such congress: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted at any time for expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with said congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. I object.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. By mistake, House resolution 559, authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to examine the affairs of the Wabash, Pittsburgh & Terminal Railway Co. with a view to ascertaining the facts, was referred to the Committee on Rules, when as a matter of fact it should go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Without objection, the reference will be changed.

There was no objection.

SIXTH INTERNATIONAL DENTAL CONGRESS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 105, authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the Sixth International Dental Congress.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Connecticut withdraw his objection?

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. He has withdrawn from the Hall in order that I might offer it again.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Ohio renews his request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, under the previous order the House will stand in recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

RECESS.

Accordingly, at 5 o'clock p. m., the House was in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, at 8 o'clock p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. PAGE of North Carolina.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order, the session of the House this evening is for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 242.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same suggestion to-night that I did on the last evening when we were in session for the consideration of bills on this calendar, and that is if any gentleman has it in mind to object to a bill whether or no, it would save a good deal of time if he would interpose his objection immediately after the reading of the title of the bill, for that would save the reading of the entire bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

ROBERT T. LEGGE.

The first business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1513) for the relief of Robert T. Legge.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $250 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay Robert T. Legge, a citizen of McCloud, Shasta County, in the State of California, compensation for professional operation performed on John Moran, who was injured while an employee of the United States Forest Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to take up the time of the House, but I will ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I will be very glad to reserve the objection, if I may.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to this bill. It is to pay $250 for services performed by Dr. Legge for a laborer, John Moran, who was in the Forest Service. Dr. Legge took him under his care and provided him with a home, provided him with all of the necessary hospital treatment, and also gave him medical care and attention. He was put on his feet. He was cured, whereas otherwise he would probably have been a cripple for life. The department recommends the passage of the bill. The charge is a very modest one. The man was in the actual service of the Government. Many claims of this kind have been paid. The affidavits show the conditions surrounding the accident and the time that Mr. Moran suffered from his injury. It seems to me that the claim ought to be allowed. Knowing the conditions of that country so well and the splendid work that Dr. Legge is doing, I think it ought to be paid. Just as an example, the doctor asked the Government here a few months ago to be relieved of all other duties in order that he might take care of patients at this hospital. This man's affidavit says that he might have been crippled for life, and possibly not have come out of it at all, if it had not been for the doctor's prompt assistance. He sent out his automobile and brought in the man at his own expense and actually saved his life.

While the matter is of small amount, it is of some concern to the gentleman from California to see that his constituents receive proper care and consideration. I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] could not see his way clear to let the bill pass to-night? I have not urged many of these matters. I trust the gentleman will permit the passage of the bill.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the objection of the gentleman from Illinois.

P. J. CARLIN CONSTRUCTION CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11772) for the relief of the P. J. Carlin Construction Co.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SAMSON DAVIS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16713) for the relief of Samson Davis.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Samson Davis shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a private of Company A, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, from the 21st day of June, 1899, to the 29th day of August, 1902, and to have been discharged honorably as such on the latter date.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS EDER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4714) to authorize Louis Eder to enter lands under the homestead laws.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Louis Eder, of Laramie County, Wyo., be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter, and secure title to the same under the homestead laws of the United States, 160 acres of unappropriated public lands in lieu of the north half of north half of section 28, township 14 north, range 70 west, of sixth principal meridian, relinquished by him to the Government for inclusion in the withdrawal of lands for the protection of the water supply of a military post, and no charge shall be made for making the entry of record to cover the tract selected: Provided, That the requirements of the laws respecting settlement, residence, improvements, etc., are complied with on the new claim, credit being allowed for the time spent on the relinquished claim.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "of," insert the words "surveyed unreserved and."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH ROBICHEAU.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1062) granting a patent to Joseph Robicheau.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent to Joseph Robicheau to the following land: Northwest quarter of the southeast quarter and south half of the southeast quarter section 27, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter section 34, township 47 north, range 3 east, Boise meridian, Coeur d'Alene (Idaho) land district.

With the following committee amendment:

After the word "district," in line 9, insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere with or defeat any sale heretofore made by the Forest Service or timber upon the land herein granted and the purchaser or purchasers of such timber shall have the right to cut and remove from the land all timber or lumber purchased, within two years from the approval of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if it would be perfectly satisfactory to add to the committee amendment the following:

And the said Joseph Robicheau shall have no claim to the timber so sold or the proceeds thereof.

Mr. FRENCH. I have no objection to that. That is the intention, and if it would make it clear I would be very glad to have the gentleman offer that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "or," after the word "service," and inserting the word "of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, after the word "service," strike out the word "or" and insert the word "of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the committee amendment, after the word "act," strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words: "and the said Joseph Robicheau shall have no claim to the timber so sold or the proceeds thereof."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS F. HOWELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1516) for the relief of Thomas F. Howell.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reinstate the homestead entry numbered 3944 of Thomas F. Howell, and thereupon to issue a patent to said Thomas F. Howell for the land embraced in his homestead entry numbered 3944, Redding, Cal., for the southeast quarter of northeast quarter of section 6, south half of northwest quarter and southwest quarter of northeast quarter of section 5, township 28 north, range 5 east, Mount Diablo meridian, upon submission of proof of residence upon and improvement and cultivation of said land as required by the homestead laws: Provided, That such final proof be submitted at any time within four years after the approval of this act.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, strike out the word "thereupon."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think there is some doubt about this—considerable, in my mind. The bill says—

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to reinstate.

Would it not be perfectly satisfactory to leave it to the Secretary of the Interior and authorize him to reinstate?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely; yes, sir; I am perfectly willing to strike out the words "and directed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 3 and 4, page 1, the words "and directed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "and directed."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANK PAYNE SELBY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6879) for the relief of Frank Payne Selby.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLEVELAND PRESS, OF CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12484) to pay the Cleveland Press, of Cleveland, Ohio, $200 for a horse shot because of injuries sustained on a defective platform scale in the post office at Cleveland, Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Cleveland Press, of Cleveland, Ohio, the sum of $200, which amount is hereby appropriated in full payment for a horse that was shot because of injuries sustained on a defective platform scale in the post office at Cleveland, Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN B. KEATING.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4952) to refund to John B. Keating customs tax erroneously and illegally collected at Portland, Me., on cargo of coal March 11, 1903.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund and pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $318.80 for import taxes erroneously and illegally collected from him, and paid by him under protest, on a cargo of coal and patent fuel entered at the port of Portland, Me., on or about March 11, 1903.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS W. H. WHITE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16795) to reimburse the owners of the schooner Thomas W. H. White.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the owners of the schooner Thomas W. H. White, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $260.02 for reimbursement for losses incurred when the lighthouse tender Lilac swung against the schooner Thomas W. H. White.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read the third time and passed.

CHARLES H. RAYFIELD, ALIAS CHARLES H. CZARNOWSKY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13123) for the relief of Charles H. Rayfield, alias Charles H. Czarnowsky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws, Charles H. Rayfield, alias Charles H. Czarnowsky, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as drummer of Company B, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, from the 12th day of August, 1863, to the 20th day of April, 1864, and to have been discharged honorably as such on the latter date: Provided, however, That this act shall not confer upon him any right to pay, annuities, pensions, or other emoluments which might otherwise accrue to him from such service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the gentleman from New York is here, but this bill apparently is a bill to give a right to a pension. It says that in the administration of the pension laws this man shall be held and considered to have been in the military service, but the proviso says—that this act shall not confer upon him any rights to pay, annuities, pensions, or other emoluments which might otherwise accrue to him from such service.

I doubt very much whether he could get a pension under that language.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, as I recall the case the gentleman does not desire a pension. The first part of the bill which gives a pensionable status is the form that has been adopted by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. KAHN. And it is the usual form. This man was less than 10 years of age when he was mustered into the Army as a drummer boy, and after having served some months his father took him away, with the consent of the officers, to a military school in Pennsylvania where the boy did service.

He was, of course, altogether too young to know anything about desertion; he has grown to man's estate and wants his record changed so that it will not appear that he deserted. He desires no pension whatever.

Mr. MANN. It seems queer to say, though, that he shall be considered to have been discharged but shall not draw a pension.

Mr. KAHN. It is simply following the form to correct the charge of desertion standing against him on the records of the War Department.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. MILLER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16431) to validate the homestead entry of William H. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entry of William H. Miller, No. 010224, made October 28, 1909, for the northwest quarter of section 29, township 20 north, range 49 west of the sixth principal meridian, in the State of Nebraska, be, and the same is hereby, validated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

RITTENHOUSE MOORE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6196) for the relief of Rittenhouse Moore.

The bill, with committee amendments thereto, was read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I object.

UNITED STATES DRAINAGE AND IRRIGATION CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16033) for the relief of the United States Drainage and Irrigation Co.

The bill, with a committee amendment thereto, was read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have from the author of this bill, or the chairman of the committee, some explanation.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that in the absence of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], who reported the bill, I will quote from the letter of Secretary Garrison. He says:

Since, however, the work was necessary, since it would have cost much more had actual conditions been known, and since, had the contractor defaulted, such portion as he would have left undone would have completed at increased cost, and since the contractor persisted to the completion, with no hope of obtaining relief from the large loss except as an equitable claim, the claim in the amount designated in the bill is regarded as meritorious, and favorable action is recommended.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman if this company had taken a contract to do that work, or is this an allowance outside of the contract price?

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that I think the claim of this company is that this was for work which was not contemplated by their contract.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, was there not a contract let to this company for the doing of this work in the first instance? They entered upon the discharge of their duties, and after they had prosecuted the work for some time they found that it would not be a profitable undertaking, and then this sum has been asked as an additional amount under that contract?

Mr. POU. I would not answer that in the affirmative. There is quite a lengthy report here, and all the matters are fully explained in the report of the committee. My understanding is that these people insist that this was of a nature extra work which was not covered by their contract. We referred the matter to the Secretary of War, and when he said he thought that the claim was meritorious and ought to be paid, we felt justified in following such recommendation.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, Mr. Speaker, is not this the fact about this bill, namely, that this company took this contract to do the work specified, and when they found it was a greater undertaking than they had calculated they came back with this claim for the overplus?

Mr. POU. Since the gentleman has been propounding these inquiries my memory has become somewhat refreshed. In the letter from the War Department I find this:

The claim, as appears from the papers, is for reimbursement of cost of removing large quantities of stone from the line of piles which the contract required to be driven. It was not known to either party to the contract that stone in quantity to seriously interfere with the driving of piles would be encountered.

Now, I will say to my friend, if he will pardon me just a minute, that the contract was predicated upon the idea that these piles would be driven down into a mud bottom. It was not believed by either the War Department or by the contractor that there was any stone to interfere with the driving of them.

Mr. CULLOP. It was their misfortune in making the contract.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to paragraph 3 in the letter of the Secretary. It says:

The work was in no proper sense extra work ordered by the contracting officer, as the contract required the contractor to furnish all plant, appliances, material, and labor, and reinforce the jetty at the rate of $9.87 per lineal foot, and furnish and place filling stone at the rate of $4 per ton. The contracting officer could not have relieved the contractor of his undertaking when it was found to be more difficult than expected, nor was there any way by which the contractor could be paid except as stipulated in the contract.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object. Let him stand by his contract.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ESTATE OF ROBERT B. PEARCE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13167) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Robert B. Pearce.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $149.50 to pay the legal representatives of Robert B. Pearce, late of Sevier County, Ark., for amount due for carrying the mail from Fulton, Ark., to Rocky Comfort, in said State, in the year 1861.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SPARROW GRAVELY TOBACCO CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13965) to refund to the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. the sum of $173.52, with penalty and interest, the same having been erroneously paid by them to the Government of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas heretofore, to wit, in the month of June, 1908, a tax of $173.52 was assessed against the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the western district of Virginia, the same being for a deficiency in the account of the said company for the year 1907; and

Whereas this assessment was by reason of the fact that the said company had erroneously omitted to include in their inventory for January 1, 1908, one bin of plug tobacco in process; and

Whereas this omission was an honest error on the part of the said company, which the Internal Revenue Department did not allow them to correct by means of an amended inventory; and

Whereas as the result of this error on the part of the said company, and the refusal of the department to allow the same to be corrected, the said company has been compelled to pay to the Government the above assessment, with penalty and interest, which said amount was in excess of what was actually due from the said company to the Government: Now, therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the said sum of $176.99 is hereby directed to be refunded to the said Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. from the Treasury of the United States.

With a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the four preambles in said bill, and strike out all of said bill except the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. the sum of $176.99, which said amount was paid by said company to the Government in excess of what was actually due."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to refund to the Sparrow Gravely Tobacco Co. the sum of $176.99, the same having been erroneously paid by them to the Government of the United States."

Mr. MANN. What was done with the "whereases"?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They were taken out by the committee amendment.

Mr. POU. They were all stricken out.

DRENZY A. JONES AND JOHN G. HOPPER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2703) for the relief of Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors, for surveying Yosemite Park boundary.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid to Drenzy A. Jones and John G. Hopper, joint contractors, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,840.80, for the survey and resurveys of the Yosemite Park boundary under contract 184, California, the boundaries of the park having been changed, rendering the survey unnecessary.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

In line 5 strike out the figures "$4,840.80" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,649.48," and add the following words: "which is in full of all claims and demands against the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee some questions in regard to this bill and get some explanation of it. I find in the report a letter addressed to the distinguished chairman of the committee, from which I read the following extract:

Yet the Government should not for that reason increase their compensation in order to reimburse them for loss sustained, as they were expected to ascertain for themselves prior to bidding the nature of the land to be surveyed.

Now, as I understand this bill, it is a bill for additional services, is it not?

Mr. POU. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. This is not for additional services. The amounts asked for additional services were stricken out entirely. This is for the survey that was made of the Yosemite National Park.

If the gentleman is familiar with that area, he will know that it is an exceedingly difficult one to survey. It is a rough, mountainous country, steep and precipitous in many places, and requires rather careful attention and work.

Mr. CULLOP. Did not the Government pay them the price it agreed to?

Mr. KAHN. No; they have never been paid the contract price except nine hundred and some odd dollars on account.

Mr. POU. Nine hundred and twenty-one dollars.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; $921 on account. After they made the survey some errors were found by the Government inspector; they subsequently went into the park to correct those errors, but the United States troops, having had no notice of the fact that they were going into the park for the purpose of making the correction, arrested them.

Now, the gentleman must understand that you can only work in the Yosemite National Park during a few months in the year, and upon the arrest of these men they were delayed for another year in performing the work of correcting the errors. In the meantime the boundaries of the park had been changed, and the department held that there was really no need to correct the errors because of the change.

Mr. HOWARD. The boundaries went beyond?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. The boundaries went beyond the part that was surveyed. But these men were never paid for this work.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but the gentleman will observe from the letter of the Assistant Secretary, Mr. A. A. Jones, that those gentlemen made a bid for this work.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, have they not been paid the amount of their bid?

Mr. KAHN. No, indeed. Their amount was something like $4,000 or $5,000 for the work. Then, when they went forward again and did additional work they put in additional claims. But those additional claims were disallowed. This is for the original work which was done and for which they have never been paid.

Mr. CULLOP. The additional work was made necessary because of a mistake these men made?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but the department never allowed that claim, and that has been stricken out entirely. They are not getting anything for that.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman will not, I assume, contend for a moment that they ought to be allowed anything because of their mistake.

Mr. KAHN. They are not being allowed anything. This bill does not allow them for those mistakes.

Mr. CULLOP. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this language, and I assume the first assistant secretary of the department understood what he was saying when he said this:

However, the Commissioner of the General Land Office informs me that while it is probably true that the contractors were not aware when they made their bid for these surveys of the exceptionally difficult character of the work, yet the Government should not for that reason increase their compensation in order to reimburse them for loss sustained, as they were expected to ascertain for themselves, prior to bidding, the nature of the land to be surveyed.

Mr. KAHN. Very true; but if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is not that probably one of the reasons why the committee have brought in an amendment reducing the amount of the original bill from $4,000 to $2,000?

Mr. POU. That is exactly the reason.

Mr. CULLOP. That is just what I want to know, what this $2,000 is for.

Mr. POU. If the gentleman will pardon me just one minute, the amount originally submitted was $3,570.48. Now they have received on that $921. When these men, Jones and Hopper, came before the committee they asked for nearly $5,000. To be exact, they asked for $4,840.80. The committee took the amount for which they had originally agreed to do the work, $3,570.48, and deducted therefrom $921, which left the amount of $2,649. The committee refused to pay them one single penny for any extra work.

Mr. CULLOP. Why did they not get their money from the department for the work they did? The department made the contract with them and had the money appropriated. Why did they not go there and get paid for their services according to their contract?

Mr. POU. If the work had been done promptly under the contract, they would have gotten their pay; but the Government stopped them. These men were arrested.

Mr. CULLOP. Then this is not the proper way for them to get paid. They can go to the Committee on Appropriations, and through the deficiency bill they can get their pay.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. CULLOP. If the department has not the money to pay for this work, if the appropriation has reverted, they can get it through that channel and not through this, which seems to me the better way.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. That is exactly what the Committee on Appropriations will not do. They insist that this is a claim against the Government and not a deficiency, and they have repeatedly refused to put items of this character on a deficiency bill. Several years ago the deficiency bill almost failed of passage because the House conferees refused to concur in claims of various character that had been inserted by the Senate, the House having held that claims ought not to be put into a deficiency bill. These sums which are appropriated for surveys lapse back into the Treasury after two or three years, and then if a survey has not been completed to the satisfaction of the surveyor general of the State in which the survey has been made the money lapses back into the Treasury.

Mr. CULLOP. Then, I understand from the gentleman that these men took a contract to complete a piece of work within a specified time and failed to keep their contract.

Mr. KAHN. They performed their contract as far as the Government would let them.

Mr. POU. The Government would not allow them to complete it. Soldiers arrested them. They were there trying to finish the job, but there appears to have been some misunderstanding about it, and they were put under arrest and not permitted to finish the job.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, as there is a controversy about the amount, and the committee have reduced the amount, will an amendment be satisfactory to add after the amount in the bill, the words "which sum shall be accepted by said persons as full settlement for all claims against the United States growing out of said contract for surveys, or on account of the arrest of said persons, or either of them, by any officials of the United States"?

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. We do not want a bill coming in later for any other claim.

Mr. POU. The committee has no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask another question. Did the Government make use of this work or simply refuse to accept it?

Mr. KAHN. It used a part of it until the boundaries of the park were changed.

Mr. POU. After the Government decided to change the boundaries of the park, the survey was of little value.

Mr. MANN. Here is a part of the report on this proposition.

Mr. CULLOP. On what page?

Mr. MANN. On page 2, about the middle of the page. It says:

In the meantime Congress established other boundaries of the park, of which surveys were made by the Geological Survey, rendering the surveys by Jones and Hopper unnecessary and useless except so far as beneficial in the reestablishment of the lines of the public-land surveys.

As I understand the report, the department has stated that it was worth this amount of money for that reason.

Mr. CULLOP. I see another provision in the report, where it says:

During the eight years that have elapsed since that time the deputies have made repeated attempts to correct errors found by examiners at very great expense, and while the errors have not all been corrected, it is evidently almost impossible to make these corrections after the lapse of eight years without making an almost new survey; and as the survey is of practically no benefit to the Government by reason of the act of Congress changing the boundary lines, it is considered equitable and fair that these deputies should be paid balance due them upon the survey made if the same did not contain errors. Such sum is almost equaled by the expenses the deputies have been put to in endeavoring to meet the objections of the examiners.

It seems this work was imperfect all along the line.

Mr. MANN. The trouble with the work was that they changed the lines.

Mr. CULLOP. Who changed the lines?

Mr. KAHN. Congress.

Mr. POU. These men were there at all times trying to get an opportunity to finish the job.

Mr. CULLOP. I see that the committee recommends the payment of $2,649.

Mr. POU. Yes; that is the amount the Government contracted to pay for the work, less the amount they have already paid. It allows nothing for any extra work.

Mr. CULLOP. And this bill is to pay them the balance?

Mr. POU. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "unnecessary," in line 9, add the following: "Which sum shall be accepted by said persons as full settlement of all claims against the United States growing out of said contract or service, or on account of the arrest of said persons, or either of them, by any officials of the United States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THEODORE BAGGE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16163) for the relief of Theodore Bagge.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Theodore Bagge the sum of $1,000, out of money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for injury sustained on the 24th day of April, in the year 1907, while employed by the United States Government on the U. S. dredge Ajax.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 5 strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$221.91."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE H. HAMMOND.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13108) for the relief of George H. Hammond.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George H. Hammond, of Dekalb County, Ga., for injuries received in the performance of his duties under the postmaster and in the post-office building in the city of Atlanta, Ga., the sum of $5,000.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 9 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$1,200."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims a question in reference to this bill. I notice that there is no report from the Postmaster General on the bill, but on several other bills there are reports from the Postmaster General, in which he reports against the payment of any of these claims for injuries in the Post Office Department on the ground that they are opposed to special legislation, and that it ought to be covered by a general law.

I do not know that I agree with the Postmaster General about that. We passed a general law recently. I do not quite see how we could pass a general law which would relate to cases existing before the law was passed. But what is the policy of the committee in reference to these matters? Has the matter ever been taken up by the Post Office Department outside of the reports they make?

Mr. POU. Not so far as I know. The Committee on Claims has not established any definite policy, but has been hoping that there will be some legislation which will relieve the committee of consideration of these numerous claims.

Mr. MANN. I take it that there is not likely to be legislation by general law in reference to claims already existing. Now, I ask, what will be the policy of Congress?

I had one of these cases, and introduced a bill last summer and asked to have it referred to the Post Office Department. The department reported unfavorably upon it upon the ground that there should be a general law. Since that time we have passed a general law as to cases which would arise after the law was passed, but the law did not apply to cases already existing. I thereupon wrote to the Postmaster General calling his attention to that fact, asking if the department still maintained its position that it would not favor any of these claims for personal injuries occurring before the general law was passed, whether it proposed to maintain its position that there ought to be a general law passed covering cases already in existence. Assistant Postmaster General Roper, whom we all know and hold in high esteem, informed me that that was the policy of the department; that the department thought there ought to be no special legislation, and I quit.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that if the case he refers to is a case where a man was injured and would probably receive a year's pay or two years' pay under existing law, if he sees fit to reintroduce his bill——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have had a bill pending before the committee for a year. I am not making any complaint about that. What I wanted to do was to get the Post Office Department to make a report upon the case. They will not make any investigation of the case, because they say they are not in favor of bills of that kind.

Mr. POU. As near as I can define any line of policy that the committee has adopted, it might be expressed in this way: We have not allowed the statute of limitations to stand in the way of compensating certain people who were injured before this law went into effect.

If under any given state of facts a man would be entitled to one year's pay or two years' pay under the law as it exists, the committee usually has reported a bill allowing about that amount. In the multiplicity of bills that confront us we have not been able to work out a policy, and I do not think a consistent policy could be easily worked out under the circumstances.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I will say this: That before I introduced this bill I went down to the Post Office Department and saw Mr. Roper myself, and at that time I told Mr. Roper of the violent injury that this old man had received. I asked him what effect the introduction of this bill would have upon his status as an employee, whether it was against the policy of the department to allow post-office employees to seek congressional aid for personal injuries, and after I had explained the circumstances of the injury and the extent of it and told him of the long service of this gentleman he not only told me that it would not affect his status so far as he was an employee, but he added that he would be glad to see the bill introduced.

Mr. MANN. Very likely; but I notice there is not a report from the department.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not think the Post Office Department is responsible for that. I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Claims would probably state that the committee did not ask the Post Office Department for any report upon this bill.

Mr. MANN. If the committee did not, the reason was because they had a lot of reports from the Post Office Department upon similar bills, saying that it was opposed to their passage, and I have such a letter from Mr. Roper myself, and there are on this calendar here to-night bills with similar reports from the Post Office Department.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that a letter was addressed to the Post Office Department asking what that department had to say about this bill; but before the answer was received, in the haste to get these bills on the calendar, the report was made out, and the letter was not incorporated in the report.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman the letter there?

Mr. POU. The Post Office Department reported, as I understand, that they had no information on this subject.

Mr. MANN. Did not the Post Office Department make a report that they thought there ought not to be any special bills passed? I would like to know whether they make flesh of one and fowl of another.

Mr. POU. I would not undertake to quote what was in the letter unless I had the letter before me; but in all of these cases an inquiry was addressed to the department, and it was in this case. Exactly what the reply was I would not undertake to say.

Mr. MANN. I will read the reply later on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I shall ask for a division to see whether the Post Office Department has any friends on the floor in the position which they take.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 51, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

COLONIAL REALTY CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13569) providing for the refund to the Colonial Realty Co. certain corporation tax paid in excess.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Colonial Realty Co., of the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $409.03, being the amount of excess corporation tax paid by said company.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the Secretary of the Treasury reports on this bill—

Many claims of this character have been and are being rejected in this office under the provisions of this statute.

That being the case—and I accept, of course, as we all do the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury—why should we single out this particular case for a special bill when the Secretary states that large numbers are rejected just like it?

Mr. POU. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the matter was discussed in the committee and a majority of the committee thought it was not good policy for the Government to keep money that did not belong to it simply because of a technicality.

Mr. MANN. Well, if that be the case, then that committee or some other committee ought to report a general law on the subject.

Mr. POU. Well, perhaps that might be true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. CARTER. On the subject of the Mississippi Choctaws, something that has never been discussed in the House.

Mr. MANN. There is some question whether it is proper for the House to do that under the order. I would not make any objection except for that.

Mr. CARTER. I did not know anything about the order.

Mr. MANN. It is a special order only for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CARTER. Well, I suppose that would not exclude unanimous consent, if a fellow could get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well, I expect that is true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ESTATE OF THOMAS F. SWAFFORD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2978) for the relief of the estate of Thomas F. Swafford, deceased, late of the State of Louisiana, for carrying United States mail on route No. 8263, in the State of Louisiana, during the period from January 1, 1861, to May 31, 1861.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the estate or succession of Thomas F. Swafford, deceased, late of the State of Louisiana, the sum of $1,021.43, shown to be due him for services rendered in carrying United States mail on route No. 8263, in the State of Louisiana, during the period from January 1, 1861, to May 31, 1861, as certified by the Treasury Department to be due in a report published as Senate Document No. 92, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS TOMLINSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3586) granting an honorable discharge to Francis Tomlinson.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to remove from the rolls and records in the office of The Adjutant General of the United States Army the charge of desertion now standing against Francis Tomlinson, late of Troop L,

First Regiment United States Cavalry, and grant him an honorable discharge.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of the bill except the enacting clause and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"That in the administration of the pension laws Francis Tomlinson, late of Troop L, First Regiment United States Cavalry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States from the 12th day of October, 1861, until December 29, 1865, and honorably discharged from such service on December 29, 1865: Provided, That he shall not receive any back pay, pension, or allowances by reason of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Francis Tomlinson."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of the bill except the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, James Grady, who served as a private in Company G, Third Regiment United States Infantry, shall be held and considered as having been mustered in as a member of said company on October 8, 1860, and honorably discharged therefrom on October 28, 1864: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or other emoluments shall accrue prior to or by reason of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill for the relief of James Grady."

LIEUT. COL. JOHN P. FINLEY.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary Macon Howard, out of funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, as compensation to her for the loss of her husband, John Simpson Howard Howard, who, on the 10th day of February, 1913, while in the discharge of his official duties as a mounted inspector of the United States custom service in Presidio County, Tex., was assassinated by Mexican bandits.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$1,095."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14931) for the relief of Arthur Brose.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Arthur Brose, of Bemidji, Minn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,291.13 on account of injuries received while in the discharge of his duties as mail carrier in the post office at Bemidji, Minn., on the 9th day of July, 1912.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Line 6, strike out the figures "$1,291.13" and insert the figures "$866.58."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is another one of the bills for injuries to employees in the Post Office Department, on all fours with the bill of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. Evidently the Postmaster General and his First Assistant do not entirely agree, according to the recent interpretation. Under date of April 30, of this year, which is not so very long ago, the Postmaster General states in reference to this bill:

The opinion of the department, as expressed in its letter of January 13, 1913, regarding the consideration of bills such as H. R. 14931, is unchanged, and I do not feel warranted in recommending favorably in the case of Mr. Brose.

The letter of January 13, 1913, to which that reference is made, says:

It is the opinion of the department that favorable consideration should not be given to private bills for the relief of letter carriers injured in the line of duty, but that relief should be afforded to such persons under a fixed provision of law, and to this end it was recommended in the department's annual report for 1911, page 25, that the following be enacted into law:

And they recommend a provision which we have enacted into law, and then, after it is enacted into law, they still state we ought not to give favorable consideration to cases which existed before the general law was passed and to which the general law does not apply.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD. Does not the gentleman think that sort of position of the department is illogical, because we can not pass retroactive law here to cover these cases that occurred prior to the passage of the general law, and this is the only way these people can get relief?

Mr. MANN. Far be it from me to say that an opinion of so distinguished a gentleman as the Postmaster General is nonsensical.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman allow me to assume the responsibility?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would be wiser if he did not do it, possibly. However, not having any postmasters at stake, it does not make any difference to me whether I make the statement or not.

Mr. HOWARD. Neither have I.

Mr. MANN. Or maybe the gentleman is not successful; I do not know. I think the position is illogical. I can see no more reason why the Post Office Department employees should not receive consideration than why other employees should not. But the House having expressed its opinion upon this subject a few moments ago, I expect to have it express it on this, so as to cinch the proposition.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a misunderstanding as to the position of the Postmaster General. My own view is that the Postmaster General merely wished to emphasize his own opinion that there ought to be a general law covering cases which should occur in the future. I do not understand the Postmaster General to oppose compensating these people who have been injured in the past.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman understand by this language:

It is the opinion of the department that favorable consideration should not be given to private bills for the relief of letter carriers injured in line of duty.

That was under date of January 13, 1913. Then, under date of April 30, 1914, the Postmaster General says:

The opinion of the department, as expressed in its letter of January 13, 1913, regarding the consideration of bills such as H. R. 14931, is unchanged, and I do not feel warranted in recommending favorably in the case of Mr. Brose.

That is the case now before the House. If that is not plain English, I have never read it.

Mr. POU. I may be wrong about it, and the gentleman may be right in his view; but in my judgment the Postmaster General intends to express the opinion in a general way that favorable consideration should not be given to private bills for the relief of letter carriers, having in mind the general policy. As I understand it, the view of the Postmaster General is that these cases should be taken care of by general law that would refer to all future cases.

I may be wrong in my construction of the Postmaster General's letter, but, as I understand it, the Postmaster General has expressed himself as being opposed to the policy of dealing with injury cases by special bills. But I do not believe that the Postmaster General intends to oppose the compensating of any of these people who were injured in the past, although a strict construction of his letter might lead to that conclusion.

Mr. MANN. The Postmaster General expressed this opinion after the general provision had been enacted into law. Of course the general law did not refer to all cases, and I do not know of any way of safely passing a general law which covers all cases in the past.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM S. EAMES AND THOMAS C. YOUNG.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6654) for the relief of William S. Eames and Thomas C. Young.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William S. Eames and Thomas C. Young, composing the firm of Eames & Young, architects, of St. Louis, Mo., who were architects of the United States, appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury under act of Congress approved February 20, 1893, to draw the plans and specifications for the United States customhouse at San Francisco, Cal., and to supervise the construction of said building, and who rendered the services incident to that employment, the sum of $21,244.86, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the reimbursement of said William S. Eames and Thomas C. Young for preparing extra plans and specifications for a power plant, and for money paid by them in salaries and office expenses and for personal services during the construction of said building, the same being an extraordinary expense occasioned by the earthquake and fire in San Francisco, Cal., in April, 1906, in that the earthquake and the additional work made necessary by it made necessary a much more protracted employment of said superintendents and office force and greater personal effort than would have been necessary if the work had proceeded to completion under normal conditions and without the intervention of the earthquake.

With the following committee amendments:

Amend, page 2, line 1, by striking out the figures "$21,244.86" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$2,544.86."

Amend, page 2, line 4, by inserting after the word "for" the words "actual expenses incurred by them in."

Amend, page 2, lines 6 to 16, inclusive, by striking out the words "and for money paid by them in salaries and office expenses and for personal services during the construction of said building, the same being an extraordinary expense occasioned by the earthquake and fire in San Francisco, Cal., in April, 1906, in that the earthquake and the additional work made necessary by it made necessary a much more protracted employment of said superintendents and office force and greater personal effort than would have been necessary if the work had proceeded to completion under normal conditions and without the intervention of the earthquake," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "for said building."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. I will reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to explain how this bill was incurred against the Government. What right have these claimants to claim a payment here?

Mr. POU. I have no information about the matter except that contained in the letter of Assistant Secretary Newton.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask the gentleman from North Carolina one question?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The committee having recommended an amendment lowering the amount from $21,244.86 to $2,544.86, would the committee now be willing further to amend that and make it $1,005?

Mr. POU. I would like to confer with the gentleman who introduced the bill.

Mr. MANN. I shall object unless that amendment is made.

Mr. CULLOP. I want to call attention to this one paragraph——

Mr. HOWARD. I want to state to the gentleman that, knowing something about the charging proclivities of the firm of Eames & Young, especially as applicable to the Atlanta penitentiary, I expect to object to this bill, and that will put an end to the discussion.

Mr. CULLOP. I reserved that right, and I am going to let them charge on. I object now, so that this can not go any further here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DAVIS SMITH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16205) for the relief of Davis Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to Davis Smith, of Wewela, Tripp County, S. Dak., for the northeast quarter of section No. 10 in township 95 north of range 76 west of the fifth principal meridian, South Dakota, regardless of the fact that said Davis Smith had commuted a former entry under the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 237): Provided, That said Davis Smith make satisfactory proof of his compliance with the homestead law and pay the price per acre provided in the law under which he made homestead entry for the land described herein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM A. WALLACE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12229) for the relief of William A. Wallace.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws William A. Wallace shall be hereafter held and considered to have been mustered into the service of the United States as a private in Company E, Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Militia, on April 23, 1861: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the above language and insert the following:

"That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers William A. Wallace, who was a private in Company E, Thirteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Militia, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 23d day of April, 1861."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the title will be amended as recommended by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. The committee have proposed to amend the title so as to read "A bill for the relief of the widow of William A. Wallace." The widow is not pensioned anywhere in the bill; and while possibly Mr. Wallace may have gone beyond and there may be a widow, the title of the bill should remain as it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The title will remain as it is.

Mr. KAHN. The purpose of the bill is to give the widow a pensionable status.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ANNA MILLER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15557) for the relief of Anna Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anna Miller, of Glencoe, Wyo., the sum of $130, as full reimbursement for sums paid by her for carrying the United States mail between the railroad station and the post office at Glencoe, Wyo., from December 20, 1907, to January 6, 1908.

With the following committee amendments:

In line 6 strike out the figures "$130" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$116."

In line 10 strike out the word "seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

FRANK P. SAMMONS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16578) for the relief of Frank P. Sammons.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

GEORGE W. SOULE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10693) for the relief of the legal representatives of George W. Soule.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

MARY CORNICK.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10460) for the relief of Mary Cornick.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Mary Cornick, widow of Peter Cornick, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, said Peter Cornick having been killed on the 2d day of December, A. D. 1901, while employed in the steam-engineering department at the navy yard at Norfolk, Va., through no negligence on his part, in the line of his duty.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 6, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$642.40."

In line 11, after the word "duty," strike out the period and insert a semicolon, and add the following:

"Provided, That no agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any persons engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting this claim shall directly or indirectly receive or retain for such service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, or for any act whatsoever in connection with this claim, any fee or compensation whatsoever."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLARENCE L. GEORGE.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Clarence L. George, late a first-class private, Company H, of the Signal Corps of the Army, the sum of $379.20.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 3, after the word "hereby," add the words "authorized and."

In line 4, after the word "pay," add the words "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

In line 6, strike out the figures "$379.20" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$296.03."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. TRAHEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8554) for the relief of George W. Trahey.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid to George W. Trahey, of Bremerton, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 for damages suffered by him on account of an injury received by him while performing his duties as master shipwright at the navy yard, Puget Sound, on May 8, 1912, said injury resulting from gunshot wounds inflicted upon him by one John N. Haley, an employee of said yard, who at the time of such shooting was insane.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 5 strike out the figures "$10,000," and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$762."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a little explanation of the bill. Is the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] here?

Mr. MANN. He is not here, and I suppose that is all the gentleman wants to know?

Mr. FOSTER. I noticed that it was his bill, and I wondered if he could not explain the bill to us.

Mr. POU. I will say to my friend from Illinois that this man was shot by a man who afterwards turned out to be insane. The fact that the insane man was acting in a peculiar way had been called to the attention of the superior officers of this man Trahey, and the committee thought that a crazy man ought to have been shut up. He shot not only this man, but, I think, one or two others. I think he killed one man.

Mr. FOSTER. This man Haley was regularly employed by the Government at the time?

Mr. POU. He was.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the other men that he shot employees of the Government?

Mr. POU. I think there were two that were injured, and I think that both were employed by the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I object.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I can state the facts about this case if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would like to know them.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold my objection.

Mr. BRYAN. I have been asked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DIFENDERFER] if I know about the facts of the case, and I do not want an objection made on account of my failing to state the facts. The report sets forth the truth about the matter. I was on my way to my office in the town of Bremerton at the hour this accident occurred on the morning of May 8, 1912. This man Haley, who later turned out to be an insane man, walked into the yard just after the 8-o'clock whistle blew, and approaching from behind this man, George W. Trahey, who was one of the yard bosses, fired two shots into his shoulder and neck, and when Trahey fell he got over him and fired another shot. It was an awful, cruel, and heartless crime. Great sympathy was accorded to Trahey and his family. He was taken to the hospital. One of the bullets is still in him. After a very hard struggle for life he recovered and went back to work. There is no doubt that he suffered very much and went through a terrible ordeal, and if he is to be compensated, this is a very small compensation. He is not a man of means, and no doubt the sum would be a great help to him and his family.

Mr. POU. The amount recommended by the committee represents exactly the amount of his pay for lost time.

Mr. BRYAN. This is a case that for many special reasons belongs to my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY, to take care of. He is not here to-night. It is now nearly 10 o'clock. I am not responsible for it, but I have no objection to the bill. I know all the facts at first hand, and will gladly answer any questions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

DANIEL J. RYAN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4001) for the relief of Daniel J. Ryan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel J. Ryan be, and he hereby is, relieved from any penalty, forfeiture, or claim for liquidated damages under his certain contract with the United States of America, dated on or about the 13th day of July, 1908, for the erection and completion of an ordnance barracks at the Sandy Hook Proving Grounds, N. J.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the said Daniel J. Ryan the sum of $1,504.78, the full amount due him under said contract without deduction of any penalty, forfeiture, or claim for liquidated damages or otherwise.

The Clerk read the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 13, strike out the figures "$1,504.78" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$770."

On page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "without deduction of any penalty, forfeiture, or claim."

In line 3, page 2, strike out the words "or otherwise."

On page 2, in line 1, after the word "contract," strike out the comma and insert a period.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the last committee amendment submitted separately.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the first two committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish now to be heard on the last committee amendment. I will direct the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the form of the bill as proposed to be amended. It reads:

The sum of $770, the full amount due him under said contract for liquidated damages.

The concluding words of the bill as originally introduced, "or otherwise," are stricken out. I think that ought to be changed so that the bill as amended will read:

Seven hundred and seventy dollars in full for the amount due him under such contract for liquidated damages or otherwise.

He has been paid everything except this amount, and we want it in full.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment, and I think it ought to be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we first vote down the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the last committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "full," in line 2, page 2, and insert, after the figures "$770," the words "in full for," so that it will read "in full for the amount due him," and so forth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, after the figures "$770," insert the words "in full for."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I now move to strike out the word "full" before the word "amount."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "full" before the word "amount."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to have stricken out the word "an," in line 7, page 1; and in making the motion, I will ask some of the military gentlemen who are present if it is proper to say "an ordnance barracks." Would it not be just "ordnance barracks"?

Mr. KAHN. "An" would refer to one set of barracks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "an."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "an" at the end of the line.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

LOTTIE RAPP.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3430) for the relief of Lottie Rapp.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the relief of Lottie Rapp, because of the death of her husband, August R. Rapp, on the 1st day of October, A. D. 1910, caused by injuries received by him on September 30, 1910, while employed by the United States Government at Battle Mountain Sanitarium, South Dakota, while operating an electric bread mixer, in which he was caught and crushed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$720."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "crushed," insert:

"Provided, That no agent, attorney, firm of attorneys, or any persons engaged heretofore or hereafter in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting this claim shall directly or indirectly receive or retain for such service in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim, or for any act whatsoever in connection with this claim, any fee or compensation whatsoever."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF BENJAMIN S. ROBERTS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16524) for the relief of the heirs of Benjamin S. Roberts.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which the committee agreed upon, referring this matter to the Court of Claims, be considered in lieu of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution referred to be considered in lieu of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from North Carolina is watchful, as usual, and catches one of a number of errors which have been made in bills on this calendar. Here is a bill appropriating $100,000. It never has been reported to the House favorably, and yet we have copies of a bill in our hands on the floor, and the Clerk has a copy printed June 9, 1914, "Committed to the Committee of the Whole House and ordered to be printed," as though it had been reported favorably. It never was reported favorably, and if the gentleman from North Carolina had not been watching, or if some one else had not been watching, the bill might have been passed through here appropriating $100,000. There are a half dozen such bills on the calendar. I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

JOE T. WHITE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11199) for the relief of Joe T. White.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

R. U. DELAPENHA & CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13161) providing for the refund of certain additional duties collected on pineapples.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

D. DALE CONDIT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11719) to reimburse D. Dale Condit, of the United States Geological Survey, of Washington, D. C., for moneys expended in the payment of a damage claim.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MYRON A. BROWNLEE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7639) for the relief of Myron A. Brownlee.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution reported by the committee referring this matter to the Court of Claims be considered instead of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in lieu of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, no such bill has been reported to the House and the bill could not be considered. Although the bill shows on its face that it has been reported to the House, it never has been reported to the House, and the report so shows.

Now, I do not object to considering the resolution if the gentleman desires to do that, but not in lieu of the bill as though the bill had any standing, because it has none.

Mr. POU. It is for that reason I asked unanimous consent to have the resolution take the place of the bill, which is erroneously on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman wants to have the resolution considered, very well; but not in place of the bill, because the bill has no standing whatever.

Mr. POU. The Committee on Claims has never reported the bill favorably. It is simply by error on the calendar. I do not know how it got there.

Mr. MANN. I can explain to the gentleman how it happened. The error came from the supposition of the clerk of the committee that the printing clerk up here reads the reports and extracts from the reports the recommendations that the committee has made. That is not the duty of the printing clerk at all. It is the duty of the clerk of the committee, or whoever presents these reports, to present the resolution in connection with them in addition to the report, so that the printing clerk reports the resolution as having been introduced and favorably reported to the House. That is the only way it can be done. Merely filing a report with this bill and recommending the passage of the resolution is not a sufficient report, and it is unfair to endeavor to put upon the employees of the House the labor of going through the reports and extracting information from the reports.

Mr. POU. I think it is only just to the clerk of the Committee on Claims to say that he did the exact thing the gentleman has stated; he took this resolution and himself went to the Printing Office, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Well, he does not make a proper report. I hold the report in my hand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 563.

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 7639) for the relief of Myron A. Brownlee, with the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for the finding of facts and conclusions of law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM E. HORTON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3954) for the relief of William E. Horton.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, before the next bill in order, Calendar No. 291, be taken up, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution reported by the committee be considered in place of the bill, which is erroneously on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in connection with Calendar No. 291 in place of H. R. 3954, which is erroneously on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman ask unanimous consent for the reading of the resolution with the right to object——

Mr. POU. I will do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from North Carolina amend his request?

Mr. POU. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the resolution be read for consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 3954) for the relief of William E. Horton, with the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for the finding of facts and conclusions of law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, here is a bill to pay a man $100 for a horse which was lost in the Army during the War with Spain. Now, it really does not occur to me that he will make anything if he gets the resolution through. It will cost him more than $100 to prosecute his claim in the Court of Claims and get his proof. What is the object in referring a bill of that kind to the Court of Claims? It seems to me that the War Department or somebody ought to be able to furnish the information without sending a man to court on a hundred-dollar claim against the Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will say, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, that this was sent to the Court of Claims at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is a good lawyer and a Member of experience here. He made that request. I think the gentleman from Illinois is right in saying that the expense will be heavy, but we are following the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it ought to be done. I have no doubt that in a case of that sort it is not a difficult matter to make proof which would satisfy the committee without requiring a man to go and hire a lawyer and submit his proof and then take his testimony to the Court of Claims on a hundred-dollar claim. I can not say that the right would be an asset; I think the right to go to the Court of Claims on a claim like this would be a liability instead of an asset.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. I am going to object, because I think the committee can take care of it at some other time in some other way.

GUY C. PIERCE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14699) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Guy C. Pierce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Guy C. Pierce, of Kilbourn, in the State of Wisconsin, the sum of $511.55, in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims reported in Senate Document No. 269, Sixty-third Congress, second session, said sum to be accepted and receipted for in full of said claim against the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, here is a bill that says it is to pay money out of the Treasury "in accordance with the findings of the Court of Claims, reported in Senate Document No. 269, Sixty-third Congress, second session." That document refers to this claim, and winds up with this "conclusion":

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court concludes, on the authority of the case of Sweet v. United States, that the claim herein is neither a legal nor an equitable one against the United States, they having received no benefit therefrom, and any payment thereof rests in the bounty of Congress.

I think there have been recently hundreds of findings just like this upon cases similar to it which relate to travel pay, I believe, where the court has found that there is no claim against the Government; that the Government has received no benefit; and then the bill is reported favorably in here.

Mr. COX. Have any of them been enacted into law?

Mr. MANN. Not yet; but if this goes through it will form a precedent for all the others.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman ought to object to it, then.

Mr. CULLOP. The finding of the Court of Claims, as I understand it from the reading, is that the Government does not owe anything.

Mr. MANN. That is right. It says it does not owe anything, either legally or equitably.

Mr. CULLOP. Then there is no reason why it should be passed here and made a gratuity, I should think.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman. Still, I thought the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] would throw some light on it.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me a minute?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. It appears from the findings of fact that Maj. Pierce resigned from the Army about the 6th of October, 1865, after having requested through military channels that he be discharged. He went home before his resignation was accepted, and thereafter, on the 17th of March, 1866, he was by the order of the commanding officer dropped from the service for desertion; but on the 30th of July of that year that order was modified so as to give him an honorable discharge. It appears that he went home from where his regiment was stationed, down on the Rio Grande, in Texas, to Kilbourn, Wis.—the number of miles being given—and he received no travel pay or travel subsistence at that time nor at any other time. When the order was modified and he was placed in the position of being honorably discharged, I take it that he then became entitled to receive from the Government his back travel pay and subsistence which the Government would have had to pay if his resignation had been accepted at the time he resigned. But the subsequent order of July 30, 1866, ratified, or was an acceptance of, the resignation nunc pro tunc—now as of then. So that left him in the position of one whose resignation had been accepted before he left the Army, and he would be under such circumstances, under the law in such cases, entitled to travel pay and travel subsistence.

Now, I myself was struck by the peculiar language of the Court of Claims, wherein it says:

The claim herein is neither a legal nor an equitable one against the United States.

I can easily understand it is not a legal claim, simply because the statute of limitations has run against it, but I can not myself explain why the word "equitable" is used there. By virtue of the modified order he was placed in the position of one who was honorably discharged, and as such was entitled to his travel pay and travel subsistence. I notice that this language is quite similar to that in many similar bills that have heretofore, if I am not greatly mistaken, been allowed by this House.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is greatly mistaken.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I may be. I do not venture to say otherwise.

Mr. MANN. A great number of these claims have recently been reported upon by the Court of Claims with this finding in cases affecting travel pay. In this case the court finds that this man's discharge was for his own convenience, and the Government was not liable for the travel pay. There are hundreds of these cases. I look over great numbers of them every few days coming from the Court of Claims in which this same finding is made in cases similar to this. You can not allow one without allowing all the others. Now, when we refer a case to the Court of Claims and they find that there is neither a legal nor an equitable claim it seems to me that that ought to be enough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

DAMAGE TO ROADS, CAMP MEADE, PA.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13338) authorizing payments for damage to township roads by the United States troops while camped at Camp Meade during the War with Spain.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the supervisors of Lower Swatara Township, Dauphin County, Pa., the sum of $1,100 for damage to township roads by United States troops while encamped at Camp Meade during the War with Spain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether this community asked for this camp in the Spanish-American War. Did this community ask for the location of these headquarters there during the Spanish-American War?

Mr. KREIDER. Did the community ask for it?

Mr. FOSTER. Did the community ask for the location of the camp at that place?

Mr. KREIDER. No. The Government rented the farm of Mr. Young and went there without invitation from anybody.

Mr. FOSTER. They rented a farm?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes; they rented the farm.

Mr. FOSTER. What kind of roads are they?

Mr. KREIDER. They are ordinary dirt roads. Those that were damaged largely were dirt roads, extending about 7 miles.

Mr. CULLOP. How were they damaged?

Mr. KREIDER. They were torn up by the heavy hauling by the Government teams, and so forth; heavy artillery moving over the roads.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, they had rented a farm, were occupying it, and had all the privileges and rights of the road, the same as any other citizen that was living there, in order to get to the farm and get away from it. Now, upon what hypothesis can the gentleman claim any liability for injury to the roads under those circumstances?

Mr. KREIDER. It was simply because these roads were not made or prepared by the townships in the county for such use as the Government put them to.

Mr. CULLOP. They were public roads, were they not?

Mr. KREIDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOP. The public road was meant for any public use. Any person anywhere had the right to use the road, and if there was much hauling or use of it, that was one of the burdens that the public had to bear. One man may use a road a great deal more than another man and yet pay no more tax than the man who used the road but little. Yet that does not create any liability against the man who uses the road much.

Mr. KREIDER. That is probably true; but this was such an extraordinary circumstance, that the entire Second Army Corps of the United States Army should be located at that particular place; and if you will read the report of the Chief Quartermaster, Guy Howard, you will notice that he says in the closing paragraph:

This claim is considered just and reasonable, and I recommend its speedy adjustment.

Now, the only reason why the War Department or the Quartermaster's Department did not pay the claim is because they have no money especially appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. CULLOP. But I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that every year Congress makes an appropriation for the support of the Army, to pay its obligations, to pay any liabilities that may be incurred by it, and yet in 16 years no such item as this was carried in any Army appropriation bill. Now, why should it come in here?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield, or permit, I will say that the Army can not pay for damages anywhere. I think we have appropriated for every encampment that has been held for special damages.

Mr. CULLOP. For encampments?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and in this case the quartermaster of the Second Corps himself recommended at once to the Quartermaster General that this claim ought to be paid. It was their own suggestion, because through the heavy teaming they had ruined the road.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but the gentleman from Illinois well knows that there was a road dedicated to the public——

Mr. MANN. Oh, there is no question about any legal liability. There is no legal liability.

Mr. CULLOP. If anybody violated the statute governing the use of the roads, it was the duty of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to invoke that statute. Now, the Government is a part of the public. The Army had a right to go over the road.

Mr. MANN. There was no violation of the statute. Of course, the Army had a right to use the road; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, because the teaming was made more laborious, or there was a greater service than usual or than was expected, damages are claimed. But the road was created for every reasonable and necessary service that the public might use it for.

Mr. BURNETT. May I suggest to the gentleman, was not that an extraordinary use of this road, in a manner never contemplated by those who constructed the road, and would not an equitable claim arise from that?

Mr. CULLOP. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I do not think so. I think when the road was dedicated to the public use it was dedicated for such purposes as the public or the Government might see fit to use it for.

Mr. BURNETT. Ordinarily, but not extraordinarily.

Mr. CULLOP. They had to take into consideration the fact that armies might move, that heavy service might be required.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit, I think the gentleman is entirely right about the legal use of the road; but here was a case where the Army used the road and ruined it, and themselves proposed that they appropriate the amount carried here—$1,100—which would not put the road back in entire repair. Now, of course, there is no question about the right to use the road, and there is no legal liability.

Mr. CULLOP. I can not see, Mr. Speaker, how you could ruin a common dirt road. That seems to me to be out of the question.

Mr. MANN. I have seen many of them ruined, and where people paid for them, too.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; but these roads were fixed for that purpose. They expected heavy hauling on them, or had a right to expect it, and this road was dedicated to the public.

Mr. MANN. They expected farmers' wagons would use the road.

Mr. METZ. What stand does the gentleman take as to assessable improvements alongside of Government property, where the Government gets the benefit of the improvement and will not pay the assessment?

Mr. CULLOP. In what respect?

Mr. METZ. There is a case of that kind at Fort Hamilton. The city of New York has assessment claims against the Government and can not collect them. Who shall pay these assessments? Are the neighbors around there expected to pay for the improvements? They have paid their own assessments. Why should not the Government pay its share? It gets the benefit.

Mr. CULLOP. That is not a parallel case.

Mr. METZ. Absolutely. The people paid for that road.

Mr. CULLOP. I differ with the gentleman on that proposition. Here was a road dedicated to the public use. The Government had a right to use it. It was the duty of the people there to take into consideration the fact that perhaps the armed forces of the Government might travel over it. It was in existence. Now, because the Government moved its troops up there into that locality, that brought a great deal of trade there. There is no doubt about that. They bought supplies.

Mr. METZ. Does not the Government make contracts for its supplies outside?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes. But I beg the gentleman's pardon; I mean to say that the men in the Army spend money.

Mr. METZ. In the saloons, possibly, in the neighborhood.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, no; they spend it otherwise.

Mr. METZ. Not that I am aware.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, they do, and usually it is a very desirable thing to have an Army post near a town. I notice that every city that has an Army post makes a great fight in Congress to have it retained because of the profits which come from the presence of the soldiers.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. I think we ought to go ahead.

Mr. KREIDER. Just a moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that I believe he fails to understand the situation. This is a farming community, and our roads in the State of Pennsylvania are built and maintained by local communities, or townships. This local community had no voice in the Government bringing the troops to that particular point, and yet when they came there they did this manifest damage. I believe there can be no question in the mind of anyone that the damage was done. It is certified to by half a dozen reputable men, and the quartermaster admits the damage and recommends an adjustment, and payment. It would certainly be unjust to ask this local community to bear this expense that has come upon them. They were absolutely helpless and had no voice in the matter at all. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection. If I did not believe it was a just claim I certainly would not have introduced the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Government ought to have some rights in the matter of travel over the road. I do not doubt that the roads were damaged to some extent, but this is not an individual who suffers all the damage alone. Every community ought to bear its just burden in such matters. I think in this case where the township has suffered some damage they ought not to come to the Federal Government with a small claim of this kind, and I object.

T. A. ROSEBERRY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1528) for the relief of T. A. Roseberry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon payment to the Government of the United States the full sum of $1.25 per acre having first been made, to issue patent to T. A. Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to issue to George N. Van Leuven patent for the northeast quarter of section 18, township 17 north, range 19 east, Black Hills meridian, South Dakota, notwithstanding that his homestead entry therefor was invalid upon the ground that he had exhausted his homestead right through purchase of 160 acres of land under the provisions of section 2 of the act of June 15, 1880 (21st vol. Stat. L., p. 237): Provided, That he shall first have shown compliance with the provisions of the homestead law and shall have made the required payments.

The following committee amendments were read:

First. Amend by inserting in the caption and in line 4, page 1, the initial "M" instead of "N."

Second. Add the proviso: "Provided further, That there exists no valid adverse claim for said tract."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Wallis had commuted a former entry under the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to the public lands of the United States," approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., p. 237): Provided, That said William L. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Stanley, late superintendent of the Soboba Indian School, in California, who lost his life in the discharge of his duty; also to pay for medical and other necessary expenses, including funeral and administration expenses, incurred in connection with the death of said Will H. Stanley and the shooting of Selso Serrano, Indian policeman, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The following committee amendments were read:

First. Amend the title by striking out "and for other purposes."

Second. In line 5 strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

Third. In line 8, after the word "duty," strike out the semicolon and place a period; after the period strike out all of said bill down to and including line 13.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were 30 ayes and 1 no.

So the committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

DAVID MOWEN.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15414) for the relief of David Mowen.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers David Mowen, who was a private in Company C, One hundred and second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been mustered into the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 18th day of March, 1865.

REFERRING CERTAIN CLAIMS TO COURT OF CLAIMS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was House resolution 532, referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for finding of facts and conclusions of law under section 151 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this would probably take some little time. The Committee on War Claims, I think, will soon get a day in the House. It has another resolution of the same sort.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say in reference to this resolution that it is merely to refer these matters to the Court of Claims. It is a very harmless resolution.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that there are some of these claims for destruction of property by military forces which we have not referred. One of them is for a claim something over 100 years old, I believe, which I think it is not necessary to refer to the Court of Claims. The Committee on War Claims has another resolution that covers a larger number of cases than this does, which is on the calendar, and they get the next Friday that is set apart for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. Undoubtedly we will reach that before long, and we can then take up the war-claims resolution, and I think nobody has any objection to the passage of the resolution with a few amendments. There is no rush about this at the present time, and I object.

GEORGE W. CRAFT.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17103) for the relief of the heirs of George W. Craft.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report in this case seems to give no information. Does anybody know anything about it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I object.

GRAND LODGE OF MASONS, ARKANSAS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3863) granting lands to the Grand Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, grand jurisdiction of Arkansas.

Ferro, Italian consular agent, of Gulfport, Miss., the sum of $872.96, to reimburse the Italian bark Fenice for expense incurred in repairing damages caused by collision with the United States barge No. 15.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REFUNDING MONEYS ILLEGALLY COLLECTED IN UTAH.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARY VAN DEVENTER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6653) for the relief of Mary Van Deventer.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks merely to give status in the Court of Claims to this particular claim, which if certain evidence could have been filed at a certain time, it would have been proper for the court to consider it under the laws, and apparently through no fault of the claimant and through a misapprehension of the time within which evidence could be submitted, the matter was allowed to go beyond the period within which evidence could have been submitted according to the statements that have been furnished to the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Court of Claims has had before it many so-called Indian depredation cases. They have hung along for years. Some time ago the court entered an order that evidence should be made within a certain time, and this last summer I think it was they dismissed a great number of those cases because they were not prosecuted.

All litigation must come to an end sometime. Now they are trying to get this bill through as a precedent. If this goes through, the claim agents will properly say, "You have waived this in one case, you must do so in all the other cases," and we will have every one of those claimants before Congress wanting to go again before the Court of Claims. They had their opportunity before the Court of Claims. They did not avail themselves of the opportunity, and I do not think the claimants have a right, after they had full opportunity before the court and will not be diligent in the prosecution of their cases, to annoy Congress by asking for the right to go before the Court of Claims again. If there was only one case, I would not say a word, but there are a great many of them.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any question but that there ought to be a time fixed beyond which there could not be any further presentation of a case before the court; but here is a case that was dismissed by the court for want of prosecution in 1908, with the understanding that the case could be revived when evidence was submitted. Now, for several years the case was pending, you might say, in that situation, and finally, about three years after that, the court announced that evidence in this case and several others needed to be submitted within a certain time. Now, the attorney attempted to obtain the evidence, and tried diligently to obtain the evidence, but he was unable to reach Grangeville, Idaho, where the witnesses in this particular case were living, within the time required, and failed to obtain the evidence within the time fixed by the court, and as a result the case was dismissed.

Mr MANN. The gentleman means he did not obtain the evidence, and he should have obtained the evidence before. There were 3,000 of these cases dismissed by the Court of Claims. I am not willing Congress should be annoyed by having 3,000, or anything like it, propositions coming before it to go back to the Court of Claims. They were willfully negligent, all of these people were. The order was not entered until long after they ought to have gotten all the proof, but they pottered along, and the Court of Claims finally entered an order dismissing them and giving the right to have the cases reinstated if they would apply within a certain time.

They go ahead and pay no attention to it, and then they come before Congress and want a third chance. There never was much justice in any of these claims, to begin with.

Mr. FRENCH. In this particular case there is so much justice in it that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs originally reported favorably in the case, and, more than that, there was so much justice in it that after the court issued its final order dismissing the case the Attorney General's department permitted the taking of depositions under the rules of the court, with the understanding that the evidence should not be submitted to the Court of Claims, and that that evidence had since been taken, just as though the case were pending before the court, although the evidence has never been submitted to the court itself. It is now on file with the Attorney General's department. I hope in this particular case the gentleman will not feel that he must object.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the attorney selected one of the best cases on which to get the precedent made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

SCHWARZCHILD & SULZBERGER CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16425) for the relief of Schwarzchild & Sulzberger Co.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULLOP. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] objects, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

AMY M. SORSBY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6895) for the relief of Amy M. Sorsby.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ELLA O. RICHARDSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 388) for the relief of Ella O. Richardson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to Ella O. Richardson for the east half of the southwest quarter of section 36, township 19 north, range 10 east of the Louisiana meridian, in the State of Louisiana, containing 68.09 acres, upon payment to the United States of the sum of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That purchase be made within one year from the date of the approval of this act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF W. F. NICHOLS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4266) granting patent to certain lands to the legal heirs of W. F. Nichols.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent conveying title to the east half northeast quarter section 11, township 10 south, range 29 west, Arkansas, to the legal heirs of W. F. Nichols, upon the payment of $1.25 an acre therefor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as this bill is apparently to make good a tax title, may I ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] who is in possession of the property, and if he knows what has become of the heirs of James Wilson, who at one time was in possession and claimed to be the owner before the tax title was issued?

Mr. WINGO. The heirs of W. F. Nichols are in possession of the property. The heirs of Wilson do not claim the land, as a matter of fact. They abandoned the land, and it was sold for the taxes under the overdue-tax laws of the State, back in 1882. Now, ever since that date those people who bought it in at that time——

Mr. MANN. The State bought it in at that time.

Mr. WINGO. I say the State, then, under its donation laws, granted it to a man named Dellenger.

Mr. MANN. That was in 1893.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the heirs of Nichols and those under whom they have claimed have been in possession of this land for 21 years.

Mr. MANN. Of course, ordinarily we do not consider a tax title——

Mr. WINGO. Under the laws of our State the title is absolutely good if the title has ever passed from the Government. We have a statute in our State whereby if you pay taxes on land of this character for seven years uninterruptedly under the claim of title, that is a statute bar, and that is the actual possession. This is part of a tract——

Mr. MANN. I did not understand that these people are in actual possession.

Mr. WINGO. They are. But, as I say, originally it was wild land, but even under that they were in possession under the law. Constructive possession of that kind for that length of time is equal to actual possession.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that paying taxes under a tax title for seven years is worth very much under any of those statutes, and there is a statute of that sort in nearly every State. I have set aside many tax titles of that kind. If these people are in actual possession of the property, very well.

Mr. WINGO. There is no question about it. This is a part of the place that belonged to W. F. Nichols, who is not now living. It is mainly pasture land, and it is not very valuable, but it is in actual possession, being a part of the tract of which no one ever thought there was any question about the title until a few years ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JUDD M'KELVEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2903) for the relief of Judd McKelvey.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to Judd McKelvey for lots 5, 6, 7, and 8, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter, the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 18, in township 4 south, range 44 east, Montana meridian, as shown by the plat of survey of said township approved December 16, 1908, after the said McKelvey has, by deed properly executed and recorded, reconveyed to the United States lot 4 and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, the east half of the northwest quarter, the east half of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section as shown by the plat of the survey of said township approved July 25, 1887.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES GUNNING.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3817) authorizing the issuance of a patent to James Gunning for lot 2, section 32, township 29 north, range 39 east, Montana.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue patent to James Gunning for lot 2, section 32, township 29 north, range 39 east, Montana: Provided, That no adverse right had accrued to said tract prior to February 1, 1914.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

F. W. SCHULTZ.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15513) for the relief of F. W. Schultz.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the account of F. W. Schultz, postmaster at Junius, State of South Dakota, to be credited with the sum of $244.90, and that he cause said credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, being on account of loss by robbery of said post office on the 17th of October, 1909, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of said F. W. Schultz, postmaster.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I notice there are a number of bills on this calendar constituting claims for loss by robbery of post offices where the postmasters negligently failed to comply with the regulations. In this case, the man had a safe, put the money in the safe, turned the combination for "day lock," so that he would not have to go through the manipulations of really working the combination again, and the burglar understood that as well as anybody else, and got in. I used to be a postmaster myself, and while——

Mr. FOSTER. First class or fourth class? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Deputy fourth. [Laughter.] While I did not approve of all the regulations, I did assume that if I carried money around loosely, or left it around loosely, the Government would not be responsible for it.

Now, there are between 50,000 and 100,000 of these postmasters, and they know what the regulations are; and here is a regulation which expressly stated that the common practice of turning on safes by what is called a "day lock" or "day combination" affords no protection from experienced burglars, and in case of loss resulting therefrom no credit would be allowed. That is what this postmaster did.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that is the statement that the inspector made, but that is contradicted by two affidavits of the assistant postmaster.

Mr. MANN. I will read from the affidavit of the postmaster, as I recall, Mr. Caldwell. He is the assistant postmaster, and he is the one who did the business. He says:

I locked the iron safe in which the postage-stamp stock was kept; that I turned the combination once, causing the safe to be locked by one combination, the said safe having four combinations.

Now, that is turning it for what they call a "day lock."

Mr. DILLON. That comes from the report of the inspector.

Mr. MANN. This is an affidavit made by the assistant postmaster. At least, that is what this report says in this case.

Mr. DILLON. That is an error.

Mr. MANN. I am not responsible for errors in the report.

Mr. DILLON. If the gentleman will read the affidavits made by Mr. Caldwell, two of them, he will find that he directly disputes that proposition.

Mr. MANN. I was reading the affidavit that he did make.

Mr. DILLON. That is not the affidavit.

Mr. MANN. That is what the report says.

Mr. DILLON. Where are you reading from? You are reading from a letter. Now read the affidavit.

Mr. MANN. I am reading from a letter from the Postmaster General, in which he says:

In an affidavit dated October 22, 1909 (five days after the burglary), Mr. Caldwell made the following statement.

Mr. DILLON. That is a statement he made to the inspector. Now, if you will read the affidavit of Mr. Caldwell, on page 3 of the report, you will find that he directly disputes that proposition and says he never made that statement to the inspector. It is the inspector's mistake, and not his. Mr. Burleson does not quote him correctly.

Mr. MANN. Of course I am not responsible for that. It was on that ground that the Postmaster General did not allow the claim. If this safe was locked, the Post Office Department are authorized and warranted to pay the claim; and if it was not locked, they would not be authorized to pay the claim.

Mr. DILLON. I know Mr. Caldwell, and I know him to be a gentleman who is accurate in all his statements, and he makes two affidavits that that statement is not true.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What time is it, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eleven o'clock, by the clock in front of the Chair. Is there objection——

Mr. MANN. I think under the order of the House——

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, under the regular order there should be a motion to adjourn, and therefore I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, July 8, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 8, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth. Thy glory is set above the heavens and Thy kingdom ruleth over all. We humble ourselves, therefore, unto Thy mighty hand. We bow in Thy presence and fall at Thy feet. We acknowledge our dependence upon Thee and look to Thee for Thy guiding hand. Leave us not to ourselves. Inspire us with lofty aims and worthy ambitions. Give us a clear conception of Thy will and supply us with grace for the accomplishment of Thy purposes and for meeting all demands upon us this day. We ask in Christ's name. Amen.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. Res. 255) authorizing the President to extend invitations to other nations to send representatives to the International Dry-Farming Congress, to be held at Wichita, Kans., October 7 to 17, inclusive, 1914, reported it without amendment.

SABINE RIVER BRIDGE, LOUISIANA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5957) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River in the States of Louisiana and Texas, about 2 miles west of Hunter, La., and I submit a report (No. 647) thereon. I direct the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to the report.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. What bill is it?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is a bill to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River, the bill about which I spoke to the Senator from Utah.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCOME TAX ON RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the Committee on Finance I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9770) to levy and collect an income tax on railroads in Alaska, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 648) thereon.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this bill is one of very great importance to the people of Alaska. It embodies practically provisions that were put in the tariff bill and that went out in conference, except that a tax of 1 per cent is placed upon the gross earnings instead of on the net earnings as was provided in the provision referred to. All the railroads there are absolutely idle and can not run, largely because of the $100 a mile tax and the penalties imposed for failure to pay. If this bill should pass, some 200 miles will, without a doubt, start running. The passage of this bill means much for the development and progress of Alaska, and I ask unanimous consent on behalf of Alaska and its people for the present consideration of the bill. It is a short bill—not a long one.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Is it likely to provoke a debate?

Mr. JONES. If it does, I will withdraw it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If it provokes no debate, I will not object.

Mr. JONES. It has passed the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes that in addition to the normal income tax of 1 per cent on net income there shall be levied and collected 1 per cent on the gross annual income of all railroad corporations doing business in Alaska, on business done in Alaska, which shall be computed and collected in the manner provided in the act of Congress, approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," the proceeds of which tax when collected shall be paid to the treasurer of Alaska and be applicable to general Territorial purposes. So much of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District," or acts amendatory thereof as impose a license tax of $100 per mile per annum on railroads operated in Alaska is hereby repealed, and all penalties for nonpayment thereof are hereby remitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREATIES WITH NICARAGUA AND COLOMBIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 411, submitted on the 6th instant by Mr. BORAH, as follows:

Resolved, That the seal of secrecy is hereby removed from all of the hearings heretofore had which have been printed, except such testimony as may have been received under a pledge of confidence, and that hereafter all hearings be given to the public as soon as the same are corrected by the parties and printed, touching the proposed treaties with Nicaragua and Colombia, and that the consideration of both the treaties with Nicaragua and Colombia be in the open session of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is the desire of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that the resolution shall go over for a day without prejudice, and I therefore make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will go over without prejudice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The request is simply that the resolution shall go over without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call up the motion made by me last evening to reconsider the vote by which the appropriation was made for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

It seems to me that the Senate of the United States has well nigh lost its head on the question of appropriations. Every idea of economy has been thrown to the winds and the source of the Government's revenue has been forgotten. The Democratic Party came into power pledged to economy and retrenchment in public expenditures. Notwithstanding that pledge to the people I am advised that the prospects are that this is going to be the most expensive Congress in the history of the Nation. The American people are long-suffering and patient, slow to anger, and full of love and the spirit of forgiveness, but forbearance ceases to be a virtue after a while and they will not always tolerate such perfidious betrayal of promises.

When the exposition was carried to San Francisco it was distinctly understood that the Government of the United States would not be called upon to make any contribution to it. The advocates of this measure, however, maintain that this is not an appropriation to the Panama Exposition at San Francisco, but simply an appropriation to construct a building to house the exhibits of the National Government, and the house is to be used after the exposition for military purposes. We all know that that is a mere subterfuge. A building suited to the purposes to which it will be devoted during the exposition will not be useful as barracks or as an arsenal. If the United States Government is to have an exhibit there, under the original agreement by which the exposition was carried to San Francisco it becomes the duty of the city of San Francisco to provide that building.

Mr. President, I wish it distinctly understood that I have no sort of feeling in this matter because the exposition did not go to New Orleans. That was a matter in which I had very little interest then or have now.

Not only do I object to appropriating $500,000 to build a house, but I object more strenuously to the $50,000 of the $500,000 which is to be used for entertaining purposes. Commissioners are to be appointed, clerks hired, and this vast sum of money is to be expended to entertain the representatives of other Governments who may come there by the invitation of the President of the United States. A fat job without work; a good time and plenty of fun while the dollars coined of the sweat and blood of the long-suffering, silent, toiling masses go to pay the bills.

Some people may think that necessary, and, it may be, to make the exposition a success in the sense that some people think it is necessary to make it a success, but there are more material things, there are things of more moment, of more importance, which are needed in this country. Here, on yesterday, the question was raised and opposition was made to a meritorious measure designed to ameliorate the condition and relieve the sufferings of the toiling millions of this country; to bring about a better understanding between capital and labor; to save the children of the poor from the crushing, cruel consequences of indigence and want. The Government was too poor to spend the $200,000 for that purpose. The Government was too poor to spend $500,000 or $1,000,000 in order to exterminate diseases among live stock, as cholera among the hogs of Iowa, which take heavily from the product of those upon whose tired backs the whole burden of commerce and Government rests. The Government was too poor to spend money to eradicate the boll weevil and other pests that destroy the farmers' crops, and yet it is amply able to spend $50,000 for entertaining and $450,000 for a house at the San Francisco Exposition.

Mr. President, I think the world has gone mad on this question of society. The social moth burns its gilded wings in the flame which is fed by the substance of the poor man's toil, while the children of the wealth producer are denied the necessaries of life. I wish we could go back to that dignified, glorious simplicity which characterized the official life of Thomas Jefferson. I wish we could get away "from the degrading social wants that sin against the strength of youth and the social lies that warp us from the living truth" and come back to the old democratic way of doing things.

I regret to oppose this appropriation because of the interest which my good friend the distinguished and amiable Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has in it, but, Mr. President, I can not be true to the people whom I represent here and permit this needless expenditure, this prodigality of public funds, to be made without making an earnest protest against it.

The Chair on yesterday ruled against my point of order. I am going to ask the Chair to review its ruling. I am going to ask the Chair to consider what this amendment is. The rules of the Senate provide that—

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation—

That is what this is. It is a senatorial item—> unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

There is no provision of law authorizing the formation of this social court which is to be maintained at San Francisco during the exposition at public expense—> or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

> 2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

This has not been done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi dispute the fact that this amendment comes from the Appropriations Committee itself?

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is true, Mr. President, but it had not been introduced and referred to that committee, as the rules prescribe, at least one day in advance; but if the Chair should differ from me as to that, I will suggest that this is an appropriation made for the maintenance of an office which this bill creates, and not an office that has been created by law heretofore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What office is that?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will read the provision to the Chair. It is as follows:

> Provided further, That the said building shall be erected under the authority of the Secretary of War, by contract or otherwise, as he may direct: Provided further, That not exceeding $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended from the appropriation made herein, on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, for entertaining the officers and representatives of foreign Governments who may attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority of Congress.

Is not that creating an office?

The VICE PRESIDENT. What office does it create?

Mr. VARDAMAN. The office of general entertainer. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not "so nominated in the bond."

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is the meaning of it; that is the language of the law; that is the wording of the bond, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair looks upon it as a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation——

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is not a limitation; it is a direction. It is also the creation of a new office or function.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And the authority has already been granted by Congress to the President of the United States to extend invitations. The Chair expresses no view upon the advisability or propriety of making the appropriation, but the plain reading of the paragraph is that at some time in the past the President was authorized to invite as the guests of the Goverment of the United States certain representatives of foreign powers; and the Chair believes that this is only a limitation on the expenditure of the money, and that it is not creating an office.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Well, Mr. President, I shall submit to the ruling of the Chair, but I sincerely hope that the Senate may refuse to adopt this amendment. At the proper time I shall call for the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a word regarding the matter. Of course there is no doubt of the accuracy of the decision of the Chair. The amendment can not be attacked on a point of order.

This expenditure, fortunately, is one that can be made without loss or any appreciable loss to the Government, because the brigade post at the Presidio in San Francisco, Cal., only has suitable buildings for little more than one regiment of men where there are over three regiments to be quartered. We are also greatly in need of room for Army officers and Army headquarters, for which we are now paying large rentals. Plans for building proper quarters for troops, similar, perhaps, to plans that are being executed in Honolulu, are of such a nature that the building will require but little alteration—simply the construction of some partitions, and so forth, to adapt it entirely to convenient and economical military use after it has served its purpose to house the Government exhibits during the exposition.

I take no stock in the averment that the agreement was that the Government should not expend any money or take any part in the Panama exhibition. The Government is not contributing money to the exhibition, as it has done to many a fair or exhibition heretofore. It does not intend to do so. It has already provided by suitable appropriations to exhibit its own property and its products from different territories and sections of the country. They must be housed. The United States is doing as the States are doing and as other countries are doing—it is providing for the housing of its own exhibits.

As to the matter of entertainment, I hardly think the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] seriously objects to that. I did not hear him objecting when in the naval appropriation bill there was over $104,000 appropriated directly for the use of the Secretary of the Navy to entertain visitors. The Secretary of War has a great deal wider scope, in my opinion, for expending money for entertainment, because he has the Panama Canal, the Philippines, and all of our other foreign possessions to look after. We have provided only $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and have restricted the appropriation so that it can only be expended for the entertainment of those who are invited by the President or in pursuance of his invitation.

The President of the United States has seen the necessity of this appropriation. He certainly is the great and leading spirit of the Democratic Party; he has been one of the leaders in this acclaim for economy and of accusation of extravagance which perhaps was properly made against the Republicans. He has asked for this appropriation, and the Secretary of War, who will have charge of its expenditure, has asked for it; and so has the honorable Secretary of State earnestly requested it. The proposition came in here in the natural way; it came to the committee in the proper way; and the committee brought it in here and submitted the amendment. It was laid over a day for everyone to study and for everyone to criticize.

I trust that the amendment will not be reconsidered and that it may be adopted as a part of this bill.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say for the information of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] that the Government really needs this building, and if it will construct a building capable of housing the troops it will be no loss. It is supposed to be erected at a point that is of importance; it is an important fort, where the Government will have to keep troops as long as the Government exists. The troops there are not now properly housed. I have been through the Presidio, and if the money is expended economically and a suitable building is erected for the housing of the troops it will be in no way a loss.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LANE. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator from Oregon have the idea that the construction of this building is going to be with a view of making it a home for the troops?

Mr. LANE. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator know that the building is going to be constructed in a very different form and after a very different architectural design from that in which it would be if originally constructed for the home of troops?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will answer that question by saying that I think the Government will thereby improve on the present type of building in which we house our troops, and I hope that we shall have sense enough to do so. This building is needed. It can be made artistic and at the same time useful without any extravagant expenditure of money. I trust in its construction the Government will make a change from the old type of building, which is an eyesore. Such buildings can be improved, made to blend into the surroundings, and add beauty to that beautiful spot in San Francisco Bay near the Golden Gate. I hope the Government will do that, so long as the money is not wasted.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from Mississippi is endeavoring to reopen this question. I think this appropriation is one that it is eminently proper the Government should make. The State of California and the city of San Francisco are not asking any appropriation to aid them to carry on this enterprise. They are living up strictly to the condition that is supposed to have been imposed when the act was passed which enabled San Francisco to hold this great exposition The Government of the United States has invited foreign nations to participate in the exposition. Their representatives are coming here as our guests, and it would be a singular thing if we should invite foreign nations to exhibit at the exposition and then not do so ourselves as a nation.

The State of California has contributed millions of dollars as a State organization toward the carrying on of this exposition; the different counties in the State have contributed and will make separate exhibits there; various foreign nations have signified their intention to make exhibits at the exposition. We passed an act here that came through the Committee on Industrial Expositions providing for a commission to take care of these guests of ours when they come to this country. I remember that when that bill was under consideration before the Committee on Industrial Expositions the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who had had experience in dealing with such questions, insisted that we should have somebody on the ground representing the Government of the United States to take care of the foreign guests; and he instanced certain cases where they had not been properly taken care of—one instance in particular, where, as the Senator stated, the manner in which the exposition was carried on respecting the care that should have been taken and the attention which should have been given to foreign representatives had amounted to almost a national scandal. It was largely through his influence and representations that this commission was provided for. Certainly, if the commission is to act in that respect, the Government should provide the necessary funds to enable it to do so in a proper way. That is one of the items covered by this proposed appropriation.

With respect to the building that is to be constructed, I do not think it is very important whether the building is to be used subsequently by the Government or not. Under the circumstances the Government ought to provide the building; but, as a matter of fact, the building is to be constructed upon Government land. The Presidio at San Francisco, the Government military reservation, is practically in the city of San Francisco, and a part of the grounds owned by the Government are devoted to the exposition.

I do not know whether or not Senators are aware of the fact, but the Government is paying for rent of buildings in San Francisco something like $30,000 a year. I introduced a bill here nearly two years ago providing for the construction of a building for the use of the Army officers and providing for their offices in San Francisco. In one single building in San Francisco the Government is paying $20,000 a year for the offices of Army officers. The appropriation contemplated by the bill introduced by me, for some reason—I do not know why—was not made, although it was recommended by the War Department. There is an opportunity here to comply with what, I think, is an obligation on the part of the Government to provide this building for exposition purposes and at the same time provide the building that I had in contemplation. The building may be used not only for the Army, as has been suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], but offices for the Army officers can be provided in that building, and should be provided, and thereby we will save an immense amount of money in the way of rent.

I think, Mr. President, there is no just ground for the objection to this appropriation made by the Senator from Mississippi, and I hope that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will not be reconsidered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from California if he can state approximately how much has been raised or pledged by the different governmental subdivisions of California and the State itself and its citizens in aid of this exposition?

Mr. WORKS. Well, I think it will run somewhere near $30,000,000.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That the people of the State, in one way or another, have raised?

Mr. WORKS. That the people of the State of California have contributed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Have they had any help from outside the State?

Mr. WORKS. None, except in the simple way of making exhibits, but nothing to the exposition itself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And nothing whatever from the United States Government?

Mr. WORKS. Nothing whatever.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, there is one further question which I should like to ask the Senator from California. Is this proposed building so located that it can be utilized by the United States Government for the headquarters of the Army in that section, and for the other purposes for which the United States desires a building?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly it is, Mr. President; it is on the Government military reservation, and just where the headquarters and offices of Army officers ought to be.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that this provision as it has been adopted will not be changed. I am in hearty accord with many things which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has said, and with many things which he believes; but I have seen the situation in California, and I think I can say very truthfully that the Panama-Pacific Exposition is to be the most wonderful undertaking of its kind ever known in this country. I have never seen such enterprise as is being manifested in this project at San Francisco.

The Government has entered upon this business. At the beginning was the time to discuss the question as to whether or not we should make an exhibit there; but having authorized the exposition, having invited foreign nations there, and having invited each of the States to take part, it seems to me that it would be far beneath the dignity of our country if it failed to provide for an exhibit, and if it failed to furnish such entertainment as becomes the United States. I am positive that if Senators had investigated the whole situation, if they knew the magnitude and importance of this exposition, they would not hesitate now in making a success of what has been undertaken. Our national dignity and honor are involved, and the Senate should not hesitate to maintain them. So I sincerely trust that this amendment will not be reconsidered.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I shall have to differ from my friend from Mississippi on his question, though I am in accord with him generally. Heaven knows, his promptings of the desire of economy can not surpass my desire for economy. I have been brought up in a most frugal way all my life and believe in the wisdom of reasonable frugality.

The Senator says that we refused to appropriate sufficient money for the hog cholera and sundry other objects. Well, that is no reason why we should not appropriate money for other good things that may come along. Two wrongs do not make a right. I think we should have appropriated probably more money to exterminate hog cholera, the cotton-boll weevil, and to straighten the Mississippi, and a lot of other things; but I do not believe the people of the United States, these hundred millions of enterprising freemen, will hold us up to ridicule and jest or will censure us for making a reasonable and proper appropriation to entertain those who may come to see the wonders of this glorious land of ours.

We have taken steps recognizing this exposition, and, as has been stated by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], it bids fair to rival anything of the kind the world has ever seen. We have invited foreign people here. Now, I say, do not let us be shabby about it; let us treat them nicely and decently, and not niggardly. I would not want a better gauge of liberal hospitality than the gauge of the Senator from Mississippi. I know if he should invite the people of the States of this Union down to his Mississippi home they would be treated roundly, liberally, and most hospitably. I believe the people of the United States sympathize with that thought and with that idea.

Ah, Mr. President, our friends say they want to get back to the days of Jeffersonian simplicity. Why, it seems to me, if I can remember the things I have read, and the glories of Monticello that I have seen around there, that Jefferson was the most liberal entertainer of that time. Somebody has said that he bankrupted himself by entertaining; but whether that be so or not I do not know. He was, however, a liberal entertainer.

Mr. VARDAMAN. He was a liberal entertainer in the disposition of his own money, but he was a servant of the people and he bodied forth in his official life that sublime idea. That is what I should like to see the American people imitate to-day and return to that long discarded honorable custom.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize the fact that we are some days beyond the day in which he entertained in the simplicity to which the Senator makes reference. I think the Father of his Country, as we choose to call him, George Washington, in his Mount Vernon home, was a very liberal entertainer.

Whether they were or not, however, the fact is that we have invited the world here. The State of California has expended, so it is said, something like $30,000,000 for the purpose of making this fair the grandest and greatest the world has seen. I am a believer in expositions. I am a believer in fairs, from the county fair on to the State fair, and so on up to the fair of the Nation. I believe that it will bring direct profit to us, that it will open the eyes of myriads of people, that many people will come in contact with each other and give each other better thoughts and better ideas, and the result will be a great step in advance in the glory and welfare and well-being of this Nation of ours.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think some of the Senators who have just come in do not understand the way the question comes up. I should be glad if the Chair would announce it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment, commencing in line 20 of page 161 and ending at line 20 of page 162, was adopted on yesterday.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a letter from the Secretary of War, which I ask to have published in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 20, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your reference of June 16 to the amendment intended to be proposed by Senator PERKINS to the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915. You ask that you be furnished with any information relative to this measure in the possession of this department and an opinion as to its merits.

I favor the passage of this bill.

At the present time we are sheltering troops which it is necessary for us to keep at the Presidio in old frame buildings, many of which were built for the soldiers returning from the Philippines many years ago. The existing buildings just mentioned are of plain boards, hastily constructed, and never intended for other than temporary use. There is urgent need for barrack capacity, and if this bill is passed it will serve a doubly useful purpose—it will furnish a dignified and proper shelter for the exhibits to be made by the United States Government at the exposition and be permanently useful for the Army thereafter.

Sincerely, yours,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 7, 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the first amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment in the bill passed over is on page 111, beginning in line 10.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, before that is taken up, I ask to go back to page 29. There is a little amendment there which I should like to have made. It is in line 1 of the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "the," where it occurs on page 29, line 1, it is proposed to insert the words "compensation and," so that it will read "for the compensation and expenses of site agents."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to call the Senator's attention to the wording of that amendment in lines 22 and 23, page 28. I wondered whether that wording would be proper or not, in view of the amendment just offered. The proviso reads:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for expenses of site agents contained in the deficiency appropriation act approved October 22—

And so forth.

Does the Senator now desire that the original act shall be changed so that it shall be payable in compensation and expenses?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do. I have a communication from the department saying that it would be inoperative without it; that they are obliged to pay compensation, or else nobody will go out to incur the expenses.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the original provision provided only for expenses of site agents.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have this morning received a communication calling attention to the fact that the original provision will be inoperative without this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I have no objection to the amendment, only I thought it seemed a little inconsistent.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is on page 111, beginning in line 10, relative to the Hot Springs Reservation, Hot Springs, Ark.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I think, at least, this amendment ought to be very thoroughly explained. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is a most excellent lawyer, and very well posted on precedents; but I do not know where a precedent can be found under which the mere fact of the ownership of a certain amount of land by the United States Government in the neighborhood justifies furnishing a drainage system for a city—a city which, according to this report, has now a permanent population of 15,000, and a prospective population in 20 years of 60,000. I quote from the report itself, on page 6.

I desire to call attention to the provision which led to this report. I read from document No. 1298, Sixty-second Congress, third session, from a report transmitted by the Department of the Interior, Mr. Walter L. Fisher, Secretary. It is as follows:

In the sundry civil act approved August 24, 1912, provision was made for preliminary survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, Ark., in the following terms:

"The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed, at the earliest practicable date, to make a survey of the sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, abutting the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., to prepare plans and estimate of the cost of increasing the present storm drainage system as well as the present sanitary sewer system of the city of Hot Springs, the report of survey, including estimate of cost of the work, to be submitted to Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of December, 1912. The expenses incurred hereunder shall not exceed $10,000."

I call especial attention to this provision, which follows:

One half of such expenses shall be paid out of the revenues derived from privileges and otherwise on the Hot Springs Reservation, and the other half shall be paid by the city of Hot Springs, Ark.

It seems to have been contemplated at that time that the city of Hot Springs should pay at least one-half the expense.

By arrangement between the department and the United States Geological Survey this work was undertaken by Mr. Sledge Tatum, geographer in charge of the Rocky Mountain division of that bureau, and he has submitted his report, which, with accompanying report of J. W. Barnett, consulting engineer, and exhibits, is herewith transmitted for your consideration.

It will be seen therefrom that an estimate is submitted in the sum of $26,595 for labor and material in perfecting a sanitary sewer system in Hot Springs and for conducting an experimental sewer purification plant, together with alternative propositions for providing purification plants in the sum of $70,000 and $20,000, respectively, dependent upon the system adopted as a result of the experience obtained in experimental plant. Estimate is also submitted in the sum of $327,540 for drainage system to care for storm waters from the mountains on the Hot Springs Reservation, which amount includes $89,700 for extending the Hot Springs Creek Arch from its present terminus on Church Street, in the city of Hot Springs, to South Water Street, approximately the city limits. The installation of the sanitary sewer system, however, it is stated, will obviate the necessity for continuing the Hot Springs Creek Arch, with its present terminus at Church Street, because the impurities which are now flowing into the creek under the arch will be cared for by the sanitary sewer system.

To carry into effect the recommendations embodied in the report will require appropriations by Congress as follows:

For labor and material for perfecting a sanitary sewer system in the city of Hot Springs, the installation and operation of an experimental purification plant, and providing purification tanks in connection with such system, $96,595.

For labor and material required in the installation of a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs, to care for storm waters from the mountains on the Hot Springs Reservation, $237,840.

That is the amount carried in this amendment, while on the preceding page the estimate is fixed at $327,540, including $89,700 for extending the Hot Springs Creek Arch. It is said, however, that the installation of the sanitary sewer system will obviate this portion of the expense, and thus the amount of $237,840 is arrived at for a drainage system in the city of Hot Springs.

The report of the Secretary concludes:

The sewerage system in the city of Hot Springs appears to be such as to require early measures looking to the betterment thereof, and I therefore commend your favorable consideration to the report herewith transmitted, to the end that the appropriations necessary for the completion of the work be provided by Congress.

My first impression was that this was a report made by the Engineer Corps, but it seems that such is not the case. The report is transmitted by Sledge Tatum, geographer, to Mr. George Otis Smith, Director of the Geological Survey, who transmits the report to the Secretary of the Interior. There is a lengthy report of 15 pages with numerous diagrams, transmitted by Mr. George W. Barnett, consulting engineer, of Athens, Ga.

I will not detain the Senate in order to read further quotations from this report. The question is a very clear one. It is whether the United States shall appropriate for a drainage system in a city which already has a permanent population of 15,000 inhabitants because of the ownership of a certain amount of land in the neighborhood.

Another argument may be raised in support of this appropriation, and that is that this water, which must be drained from the city, flows from lands of the United States; but what obligation does that impose upon the United States to complete a drainage system in the city? The city is evidently built in a locality over which, by reason of the topography, water drains. It is presumed that with their eyes open the founders of the city located it there.

There is still another point that I presume will be alleged in behalf of this appropriation, and that is that the United States owns a considerable quantity of land, perhaps a thousand acres, in this neighborhood on which it pays no taxes. But, Mr. President, are we to adopt the precedent that wherever the United States owns land it should pay for drainage and other improvements in the locality? As I understand the situation, the location of this Government reservation, with the expense incurred in its improvement and development by the United States, is the main cause of the prosperity of that city. So instead of considering this reservation, whatever the number of acres may be, as a reason for making the appropriation, it is rather a reason why a prosperous city, the growth of which has been promoted by the activities of the United States on the land owned by it, should itself bear the expense.

There is just one further point, Mr. President. For some reason which I can not understand the appropriation for the installation of a sewerage system, which, according to the report, seems to be the most pressing, is not included here. The amount estimated for that is $96,595. In this case the committee seem to have selected the larger appropriation and the one which is least pressing.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, an intimate knowledge of the locality involved here would have enabled the Senator from Ohio to come nearer redeeming his reputation for accurate and definite statement than he has been able to do by reason of the fact that he is not thus acquainted with the situation.

This Hot Springs Reservation is one of the national reservations of the National Government. The city of Hot Springs is partly within the reservation and partly without.

This drainage problem is an old controversy. It is difficult of equitable adjustment by reason of the fact that the property of the National Government is not subject to taxation. If all the property in the locality was in private ownership, this difficulty would be very readily disposed of under the taxing power, under the power to create an improvement district for the purpose of remedying an obvious evil. Because the local authorities can not reach the Government's property by the process of taxation, it becomes necessary to work out an equitable adjustment through some plan of this kind.

As the city of Hot Springs grows in importance and the curative properties of the water there become known throughout the world—people resort to it for a number of ailments which can not be successfully treated elsewhere—it becomes necessary to settle this vital question of drainage. Parts of the city have become uninhabitable at times by reason of the overflows therein from storm waters flowing down from the mountain sides, the property of the General Government. This property of the United States is, of course, exempt from all forms of taxation. It has therefore become necessary to agitate this question for a number of years, with a view to the settlement by some form of joint action with the General Government; to determine just exactly how much of the cost of remedying this difficulty is to be attributed to inability to tax the national property. It was also deemed important to find out how the cost of a drainage system should be distributed—what part should be done by the Government and how much should be taken care of by the local authorities through the taxation of local property. Accordingly, a thorough survey and estimate was directed by Congress, which was paid for in part by the city of Hot Springs and in part by the National Government.

The board of engineers went down there and made a thorough examination on the ground of the entire surroundings, not only the physical surrounding, but the political condition with reference to ownership and the right of taxation, and as a result a report was made. It was found that it was proper for the National Government to spend $237,000 for building a drainage system, which will be, when completed, partly upon Government property. The demand for an improvement in the drainage is made necessary largely by the use of the Government property, for it is a fact that about 20 bathhouses are in constant operation in that city, the discharge from which constitutes no small part of the flow that must be taken care of and carried to a point of safety. The indicated adjustment was an equitable one in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, and he recommended this appropriation.

There will be lots of things for the city of Hot Springs to do after the United States shall do what they are required to do by the pending amendment, as there have been lots of things done by that city heretofore. It is one of the most highly taxed communities in the world. It has a multitude of obligations resting on it by reason of the presence and character of the hot springs, which attract people there as to no other city in the world. The local community has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars in their attempt to control this overflow, and as the city grows its limits encroach upon territory that was formerly the basin for this water. It has now become a matter of urgent necessity to do something toward its intelligent reclamation.

The matter was adjusted by the report made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the amount named in the pending amendment was the part of the expense that was set aside for payment by the National Government. It is a mere fraction of the entire expenditure involved in all the related improvements that are required.

The city of Hot Springs has constructed an extensive sewer system, and it spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on it, but this proposed drainage system is necessary to take care of the storm and flood waters, and the sewer system will then be enlarged in order to be made available in connection with the larger improvement made by the Government.

It is a case where, if it existed between private individuals and the local authorities, a proper adjustment could take place by direct negotiation without the necessity of doing so in the fragmentary way that inevitably happens when we discuss situations of this kind here.

The questions, which are technical in character, have heretofore been submitted to a board that had authority and capacity to investigate thoroughly and dispose of all questions involved fairly and justly. The executive officers who passed upon all the questions have said that this is the proper expenditure of money for the National Government to make in view of its attitude as coproprietor there. That board fixed the part that should be paid by the Government in dollars and cents, and made a report as detailed as it was possible to make on the subject, fixing the amount named in the amendment.

It is entirely proper that the Government, owning one part of the city, shall in some proper way voluntarily contribute to the expense of maintaining the city up to the standard of modern municipal management. Nothing is more injurious to the public health in a crowded community than an inadequate drainage system.

This is not an appeal to Congress to make a new precedent on anything. It is a case where the National Government owns a reservation, and it is necessary that certain things shall be done on that reservation and in the vicinity of it, and in doing this involves cooperation and joint outlay of money.

The city of Hot Springs will have its burdens to look after when the drainage system is perfected, and the National Government ought now to do what was recommended by those who made a detailed and intelligent investigation of the situation.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator would explain to the Senate what is the situation there. This Government reservation is on a great mountain.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There are two mountains and they form a valley in which the principal part of the city of Hot Springs is built.

Mr. KENYON. The city of Hot Springs is built along one side and winds up through the mountain?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. And this water pours down from the Government reservation on the streets?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is true.

Mr. KENYON. I have been there when the town was simply flooded and the sewers could not take care of the flood waters. There are a number of leased bathhouses on the Government reservation, and there is also, as the Senator knows, a large free bathhouse there where suffering humanity can go and be treated.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And they go there by thousands.

Mr. KENYON. So the situation at Hot Springs involves something of a national aspect.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I thank the Senator for his suggestions. These occur to anyone who has ever been on the ground. On one side of the street that forms the valley the Government owns a line of bathhouse sites probably a mile in length. The United States owns several million dollars' worth of property in Hot Springs. There is not any reason why the local authorities should pay all the expenses of protecting the Government property from damage from storm waters.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have never investigated this matter, and hence I ask for information. How did it happen that the Government got a proprietary interest in that community?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It was reserved by act of Congress when the celebrated Hot Springs were discovered in Territorial days.

Mr. GALLINGER. A long time ago?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Oh, yes.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator just the number of acres in the Government reservation?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Something over 900 and less than a thousand. If that property were subject to taxation, there would not be any trouble about providing an adequate drainage system.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether this appropriation represents the entire cost of the drainage system?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes; but a sewer system in addition to that must be built, and probably will be built largely at city expense, to be connected with the drainage system after its installation.

Mr. BURTON. I had anticipated that a further request would be made for that sewerage system. Why is it omitted? Why is the drainage system selected?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I do not know of any particular reason for omitting it except that it is useless to have a sewer system until we get a drainage system into which the sewer system can empty. It may turn out after the drainage system has been installed that a further appropriation will be necessary, and if it shall then appear that it is proper and equitable that the General Government should contribute, the demand will then be considered on its merits as may then appear. My impression is that the local authorities will then take care of their part, as they have attempted to take care of it for the past 50 years, until it has almost bankrupted the city in its efforts to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over at the instance of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is on page 166. The committee report to insert, beginning in line 12:

MACDONOUGH MEMORIAL.

For the erection of memorials at or near Plattsburg, N. Y., in commemoration of the victory of Commodore Thomas Macdonough on Lake Champlain, in September, 1814, $15,000 of the sum herein appropriated to be paid to a commission appointed by the State of Vermont, and the remainder to a commission appointed by the State of New York, the whole to be applied only with the approval of a commission of three to be appointed by the President of the United States, of whom one shall be chosen from the Army and one from the Navy to represent the National Government in the erection of the proposed memorial: Provided, That no part of the said appropriation shall be paid out of the Treasury until after the State of New York shall have appropriated a sum not less than $125,000 for the said memorial and celebration, $250,000.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to say a word. It is a matter of regret to those of us who feel some interest in this amendment that the two Senators from New York are absent, and hence the friends of the measure are laboring under quite a disadvantage.

The Senator from Colorado suggested that he might make a point of order against the amendment. I have an impression that the point of order will not lie if it is made, but I hope it will not be made.

A little time ago Congress appropriated a very liberal amount of money to erect in the city of Washington a beautiful monument to the memory of Admiral Barry, one of our naval heroes. Other monuments have been erected to commemorate the valor of our military and naval heroes. This battle, which occurred in the early days of the Republic—in the year 1814—was one of great consequence. Macdonough sent a message to the Secretary of the Navy under date of September 11, 1814, at which time he was in command of the U. S. S. Saratoga, and he said:

> The Almighty has been pleased to grant us a signal victory on Lake Champlain in the capture of one frigate, one brig, and two sloops of war of the enemy.
> I have the honor to be,
> Very respectfully, sir,
> Your obedient servant, T. Macdonough,
> Commander.

Of that great victory on Lake Champlain I have not read the details very particularly, and I have only an indistinct recollection of it, but it had much to do with securing a victory over the British troops and the British Navy, and permitted us to secure what sometimes has been called our second independence.

In the broad sense this is not a local affair, but a national affair. The State of New York is ready to appropriate $125,000 toward commemorating this event, and I particularly appeal to my friend the Senator from Colorado, who I know takes a broad view of public questions, not to make opposition to the amendment. It does seem to me that Congress can well afford to cooperate with the States of New York and Vermont in commemorating this great event. We contribute out of the Treasury of the United States without any help from any quarter large amounts of money to erect monuments to men who were distinguished in the naval or the military service, and sometimes when they were not in either the naval or the military service. So I make an appeal to the Senator from Colorado that this matter be considered on its merits; and if the Senate sees fit to vote it down, let the Senate do so; but if the Senate feels that this is an event that, in view of the great victory that Macdonough achieved, we can afford to make this appropriation, I hope the Senate will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I want to add just a word to what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has said before the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] proceeds.

I doubt very much whether the Battle of Plattsburg and the victory of Macdonough over the British fleet in the harbor of Plattsburg, or its effect in producing the peace which followed that event within 60 days, is fully understood. Those who have recently read the history of those times will remember that the war between Great Britain and France had then recently closed and that Great Britain had turned all of her attention to the war in America, sending 15,000 of Wellington's veterans to Montreal. The plan of campaign was to employ the Champlain Valley, that great avenue between Canada, New York, and New England, as the route through which those troops should march in their attack upon Albany and upon New York, the seat of the American supplies for all our armies in the field at that time, thus separating New England from the rest of the States, and enabling Great Britain to follow out her purpose to secure the Great Lakes of the Central West under her control. In order that her armies should successfully make that advance upon New York, it was necessary that she should have the control of Lake Champlain, 100 miles in length, through which supplies from her base at Montreal could be carried to the invading army.

The year previous to that there had been a disaster on Lake Champlain; two vessels of the Government had been destroyed; and the situation was considered so acute by the Government that the Secretary of the Navy wrote a letter under date of June 17, 1813, to Commodore Macdonough, in which he says:

> It now only remains to regain by every possible exertion the ascendency which we have lost, for which purpose you are authorized to purchase, arm, and equip in an effective manner two of the best sloops or other vessels to be procured on the lake.

Later in the letter he uses this language:

> You are to understand that upon no account are you to suffer the enemy to gain the ascendency on Lake Champlain; and as you have now unlimited authority to procure the necessary resources of men, materials, and munitions for that purpose, I rely upon your efficient and prudent use of the authority vested in you.

It was the clear-sighted view of the Secretary of the Navy that the control of Lake Champlain was absolutely necessary to the defense of America against the invasion of Prevost. But the story is not half told without remembering how Macdonough, going into Otter Creek at the foot of the falls near Vergennes, on the Vermont side, built the fleet with which the battle was fought, and the Saratoga, from which he commanded the battle, was completed and launched within 40 days from the time that the trees were cut in the forest.

What was the result of that battle? I do not propose to take the time of the Senate in describing it. It is mentioned by Col. Roosevelt in his history, by Capt. Mahan, by McMaster, and by every historian who has written on the subject as being the decisive battle of the War of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain and the one which brought about an honorable peace. Prevost had invaded our country with those veterans of Wellington; he reached Plattsburg and there met the militia of New York and of Vermont, who made a stubborn and successful defense. When Macdonough came into Cumberland Bay and won a signal victory—and it was one of the most signal victories of the war—and destroyed the British fleet. Prevost was compelled to retreat to Montreal with his army, his source of supplies being cut off, and the news of the disaster reaching England within a month after that time, it changed the whole course of events. Conditions in the United States were considered so critical that Wellington was asked to come to take command of the English troops in this country. In the letter written in reply to that request, he said:

> Neither I nor anyone else can achieve success in the way of conquests unless you have naval superiority on the Lakes. That was what was needed—not a general nor general officers and troops. Till that superiority is acquired it is impossible, according to my notion, to maintain an army in such a situation as to keep the enemy out of the whole frontier, much less to make any conquest from the enemy, which, with those superior means, might, with reasonable hopes of success, be undertaken. * * * The question is whether we can obtain this naval superiority on the Lakes. If we can not, I shall do you but little good in America; and I shall go there only to prove the truth of Prevost's defense and to sign a peace which might as well be signed now.

Thus, Mr. President, in very brief form I have presented the importance of this victory. It vastly outranks the victory of Perry—I do not mean in valor, but in its effect in shaping the history of our country—and yet last year we made an appropriation of $250,000, through which the Perry memorial has been erected on Lake Erie. New York cooperated in that scheme, and New York has now come forward with an appropriation already made of $125,000 to commemorate Macdonough's victory. Vermont has made an appropriation for the same purpose, small, to be sure, but according to her means. These States have come to Congress asking that this great and signal victory of Macdonough on Lake Champlain which destroyed the British fleet, prevented the invasion of New England and of New York, and which ended the war shall be suitably commemorated, and that Congress shall make this appropriation in order that the victory may be assigned that place in history to which its importance entitles it.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the points designated for these great memorials are points where memorials should be established. Lake Champlain is the great highway between Canada and New York and New England. Tourists in large numbers are passing up and down that lake; commerce is traversing its course during the entire summer of every year; and a great memorial placed upon Cumberland Head will be one that will be gazed upon by countless thousands during the ages to come.

I trust that my friend from Colorado will let us act upon this amendment. I have made this statement merely as an appeal to him, because I recognize the danger that lies in the suggestion he has made.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to inquire whether he thinks that the results of that battle are going to be at all imperiled by the defeat of this appropriation?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Not at all. It resulted in a treaty of peace with Great Britain in which, as has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], we achieved our second independence. But Macdonough's great victory was the one incident in that war which more than any other brought us an honorable peace and gave us a higher place among the nations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I simply want to add that the British fleet was superior to our fleet in both ships and men, and that the victory was therefore all the more to the credit of Macdonough and the men who cooperated with him.

I want to read just a line or two from what Capt. Mahan, who is recognized the world over as perhaps as good an authority on naval matters as any man living, has said regarding the Battle of Lake Champlain:

> The Battle of Lake Champlain, more nearly than any other incident of the War of 1812, merits the word "decisive"—decisive not merely in relation to immediate military results, but in relation to political questions involved in the pending negotiations for peace.

As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] has suggested, every other writer on the history of those times has paid a similar tribute to Macdonough and to the men who cooperated with him on the water and to our forces on the land which drove Prevost back to Canada with his shattered army. The truth is, the Battle of Lake Champlain practically ended the war, the treaty of Ghent being signed on Christmas Eve, 1814.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator before he takes his seat if he does not think that it is becoming more expensive to commemorate great victories than it is to win one?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, if we had not won this victory we would not be planning to commemorate it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I want to add my voice to the requests of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. I regret very much that the Senators from the State of New York, who have proposed a resolution commemorating this victory, are not here, but I feel a peculiar interest in the matter and that I should do what I can toward securing a proper memorial to one of the greatest men who ever was born in my State—Commodore Macdonough. The great bravery and the great skill shown by him as a naval officer at the Battle of Lake Champlain may have enabled us to preserve our present boundaries for this country.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that after the victory of Lake Erie the war had gone on for upward of a year, and the victory of Lake Champlain occurred on the 11th day of September, when our envoys were negotiating and preparing the treaty of peace which was signed on Christmas Eve, 1814.

The Battle of New Orleans really had nothing, of course, to do with the termination of the War of 1812, but when the victory on Lake Champlain occurred, which was due entirely, as the Senator will find if he will examine the records, to the skill of one naval officer, and against great odds, both in men and metal, Great Britain found that she could not continue that war. The commendation given to Commodore Macdonough by the Secretary of the Navy, I think, is worth reading to the Senate. I have a copy of the letter written by the Secretary, dated the 19th of September, as follows:

> NAVY DEPARTMENT, September 19, 1814.
> THOMAS MACDONOUGH, Esq.,
> Commanding the United States Naval Force > on Lake Champlain, Plattsburg.
> SIR: With the highest gratification which noble deeds can inspire, I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant announcing the glorious victory which your skill and valor, aided by the intrepidity and discipline of your gallant associates, had achieved over a confident, vigorous, and powerful foe. Our lakes, hitherto the objects only of natural curiosity, shall fill the page of future history with the bright annals of our country's fame and the imperishable renown of our naval heroes.
> 'Tis not alone the brilliancy of your victory in a naval view, but its importance and beneficial results that will fix the attention and command the gratitude of your admiring country.
> Accept, sir, the assurance of the high respect and warm approbation of the President of the United States, which I am commanded to present, and my sincere congratulations.
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
> W. JONES.

On the 3d of October, 1814, the victory of Lake Champlain was under consideration in the Senate, and the thanks of Congress were extended to Commodore Thomas Macdonough and his officers, petty officers, seamen, and marines, and medals were ordered distributed to them.

I want to remind the Senator from Colorado that on that day in the House of Representatives, due to the invasion of this portion of the country by the British forces, there was a tie vote as to the removal of the seat of Government from where it now is and where it has been since it was first established. The conditions in this country were such that a man such as Macdonough was needed to establish the fame and prowess of America.

Memorials to heroism, I think, we can everywhere afford to erect for the commemoration of great events, and there is no dispute, Mr. President, in regard to the greatness of this victory. McMaster in his History of the American People says:

> The fight in Plattsburg Bay was undoubtedly the greatest naval battle of the war, and the victory stamped Macdonough as the ablest sea captain our country produced down to the rebellion.

Capt. Mahan said regarding the effect of this battle:

> The Battle of Lake Champlain, more nearly than any other incident of the War of 1812, merits the word "decisive"—decisive not merely in relation to immediate military results, but in relation to political questions involved in the pending negotiations for peace. (Capt. A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., in his "Sea Power in its Relations to the War of 1812.")

Those political negotiations, Mr. President, I have briefly alluded to. There is little doubt that the victory of Commodore Macdonough on Lake Champlain contributed very largely to the favorable terms of peace, more favorable, I think, than this Government had expected, when they were completed on Christmas Eve in 1814.

The conclusive character of that victory has been recognized by every writer on the subject. President Roosevelt, in his "Naval War of 1812," said:

> Macdonough in this battle won a higher fame than any other commander of the war, British or American. He had a decidedly superior force to contend against, the officers and men of the two sides being about on a par in every respect; and it was solely owing to his foresight and resource that he won the victory.

I sincerely hope that the Senator from Colorado will not press his point of order in such a matter as this. It is due to the memory of this great naval officer, and it is due to the States which are taking so much interest in this matter, I think, that the Congress of the United States should act.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to make another appeal to the Senator from Colorado. He and I have usually been able to work pretty well together in matters of appropriation. I know he feels that the annual appropriation bills are aggregating too much, and that we ought to slice off something somewhere; and he thinks perhaps there is no better place than this to begin.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, does not the Senator think so, as well as the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PAGE. I do; but I want to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that we have been appropriating large sums of money to take care of the arid and semiarid regions of his State and of the West generally; we have been appropriating large sums of money to take care of cotton in the South in the eradication of the boll weevil; and we have gone out into the Middle West, at the suggestion of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and have appropriated hundreds of thousands of dollars for the hog.

Now, I want to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that this appropriation is for the benefit of the American boy and the American girl, and while we are conserving everything else let us not entirely neglect the next generation.

A good friend of mine, a brother Senator, took me last night down to the Mall, and as we passed along he said: "There is the site of the new Lincoln memorial. They are going to raise the elevation there 40 feet over a large area, and then we are going to spend millions of dollars to erect the memorial." I do not regard that money as lost. The people of this country are coming here to Washington, and they are going to see that memorial. It is going to teach them lessons of patriotism, and we are going to have better citizens because of such memorials.

I confess that a memorial built upon Lake Champlain will not be seen by as many people as would one here in Washington; although I want to suggest, in passing, to the Senator from Colorado that the State of New York has already opened up the waterway from Albany, on the Hudson River, to Lake Champlain, and we have already made appropriations to begin the work of opening up the lower end of Lake Champlain, so that vessels drawing 10, 11, and perhaps 12 feet of water can pass through; and I have personally conversed with people from Canada who are very enthusiastic in regard to the opening up of the Richelieu River, so that when we can meet them at the border line a waterway will be open from New York City down to the St. Lawrence River. I verily believe that in the next 10 years you are going to see a traffic through Lake Champlain that will be truly surprising. If we place a memorial there, we are going to place it where a great many thousand people will see it every year. Do not for a moment believe that it will be buried in Lake Champlain.

We talk diminutively of Lake Champlain, but I want my brother Senators to remember that it is the greatest body of fresh water entirely within the United States. We have our Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, our Lake Huron and Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, but they are all on the border and in part in another country. I mention this because I do not like to have Senators speak diminutively of this lake or of the number of people who will see this memorial.

But I come to the Senator from Colorado in a more personal way. I want to speak for the Vermont boy and the Vermont girl. I know he himself appreciates them, because we have furnished to his great State a United States Senator, a governor, and only a short time ago the Senator told me of the recent death of one of Vermont's sons who had been speaker of the house of the State of Colorado, and all of them were residents of his own city—Denver.

I do not believe the Senator realizes the position that Vermont occupies with reference to her sister States. No other State in the Union begins to furnish as large a percentage of her native sons to go out and help build sister States as Vermont. Now, I appeal to the Senator from Colorado to let us have a memorial there. You have given them to other States. My colleague has explained, better than I can, what we gave to Lake Erie. Since Vermont and New York have joined together to pay a good part of the expense, let us have a small donation from the Federal Government to give us an educational memorial on Lake Champlain, on the borders of those States.

I was called to Chicago in 1891 to speak to the sons of Vermont there, and one of the things I talked about when I reached Chicago was the preponderance of Vermont strength in this honorable body in the year 1891. Upon an examination I found that we had 13 times as many Senators as we would be entitled to here were the representation based upon our population. The chair of the Vice President was occupied by Morton, born in Shoreham, Vt. On this side sat the great constitutional lawyer, Edmunds. I speak of these men because I believe that not only in numbers but in real mental strength we were perhaps very much larger than our size numerically. On the Democratic side of the Senate sat one of the ablest Senators of the West, former Postmaster General Vilas, of Wisconsin. I remember that either Matt Carpenter or Philetus Sawyer, I do not now recall which, then represented the State of Wisconsin in this body, both of them sons of Vermont. On this side was that great statesman, who longer than any other served his country in Congress—the distinguished author of the agricultural college bill—Justin S. Morrill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield to me?

Mr. PAGE. With pleasure.

Mr. WHITE. I just wanted to ask the Senator if he did not think possibly the Senators from Vermont had confined themselves too closely to that side of the Chamber; that some of them ought to have come over on this side and helped us?

Mr. PAGE. Well, we did not send a great many Democrats, but those we did send were of the very highest order. We made up in quality what we lacked in quantity. As an example, I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to Cleveland's Postmaster General, Senator Vilas.

Senator Morrill sat in the Senate not quite as long as Senator Allison, but as a Member of Congress he was in both Houses longer than any other man that ever lived, and probably longer than any other man that ever will live. For almost 44 consecutive years he occupied a seat in Congress.

I might go on and mention the many distinguished Vermonters who have sat in this Senate, but time will not permit; but I do wish to impress upon my friend from Colorado the peculiarity of these Vermont Senators. Not a single one of them came from a town having as many as 1,250 population. They were boys who had to break their own roads through the snowdrifts to the little red schoolhouse. Mr. President, our Vermont farmers and their wives are notably thrifty, and they have been compelled to lead prudent lives in order that they might rear their sons and daughters and give them an education suitable to fit them for life. The moment the Vermont boys reach manhood and are able to take a broad view of life, they start for wider fields, and the result is that Vermont supplies the rest of the country with the best of her sons and daughters.

I realize the anxiety of the Senate to conclude its deliberations on this bill, and I do not want to longer take its time. As my colleague has well said, you have given to other localities their memorials. I hope the Senate will give us this one; and I hope the Senator from Colorado will withdraw his point of order, and let us act on the merits of this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that any point of order has been made.

Mr. SHAFROTH obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not care to interrupt any Senator who desires to speak upon this subject. I understand that the point of order, if made, is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. THOMAS. Therefore I hesitate to make it as long as any Senator desires to express himself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no recollection that any point of order was made.

Mr. PAGE. The point of order, as I understand, was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and then, at the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], was withdrawn.

Mr. THOMAS. That is correct. I withdrew it, reserving the right to renew it this morning. If my colleague desires to speak upon the subject, I will not make it at present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I voted against the appropriation in the Appropriations Committee, and if there is going to be discussion before the Senate, I should like to state the reasons why I did; but if a point of order is going to be made, I do not care to discuss the point of order.

As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, when this matter came before the committee I voted against the appropriation. The reason I did so was because the state of the finances is not such, in my judgment, that we should indulge in luxuries. Of course, memorials appeal to the esthetic taste, look very beautiful, and all that, but we have some serious governmental problems to solve, and they require money, and it seems to me that this is not a good time to appropriate large sums of money for that purpose.

It is true that we have appropriated, and we do every once in a while appropriate, money for the erection of a monument here in the District of Columbia. The reason for that, more particularly, is in order to beautify this city. It is territory that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and it is more appropriate that we should erect monuments here than that we should scatter them all over the United States. If we enter upon the policy of erecting monuments all over the United States, it is going to take hundreds of millions of dollars.

There is not any question but that this was a battle of considerable moment. I suppose the forces involved in the affair were very small, but nevertheless it was of great consequence.

Mr. PAGE. It was one of the decisive battles.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; it was one of the important battles of that period, and yet, of course, from the number of men that were engaged, no doubt it was very small compared to the armies that were engaged in our Civil War. Nevertheless, if that battle is to be commemorated by a monument erected within a State probably four of five hundred miles from the seat of Government of the United States, I do not see why each one of the battles that were fought during the Civil War should not have a large memorial; and if that is going to be done, where is this policy of erecting monuments to end? I do not know.

I think very few monuments have been erected by the United States in commemoration of battles. I saw one up in Gettysburg on Memorial Day. It was very appropriate that it should be there. It was not such an extraordinary one. I doubt very much whether it cost over $100,000. During the last few months I have had occasion to look at an advertisement which has appeared in the Washington Post, giving pictures of the monuments that have been erected in the city of Washington, together with the amount of the appropriations which have been made by Congress. In the case of nearly every one of those the amount which was appropriated was small. I was surprised to find that the cost of these equestrian statues, with their bases and all, scarcely ever exceeded $75,000 in any case, and yet they are beautiful memorials. They are magnificent, and they are very appropriate in the Capital of the United States.

If we are going to enter upon the policy of commemorating not only the Battle of Lake Erie, but also the Battle of Lake Champlain, where is Valley Forge going to come in? Where are all the other battles to come in—Yorktown and others—that occurred in the Revolutionary War? Are not the people of those localities as much entitled to memorials as these others?

Cornwallis's surrender at Yorktown was a very important surrender, if I remember correctly, and the same is true of a great many of the battles that occurred in the Revolutionary War. Then, if you turn to the War of 1812, you will have a score more, and when you come to the Civil War there will be hundreds and almost thousands; and if each one is appropriated for, the last must have a little more beautiful memorial than that which was appropriated for the year before.

It seems to me that inasmuch as we have not committed ourselves to the erection of memorials outside of the city of Washington, we ought to draw the line here, unless we enter upon a policy which will be well understood, and determine how much ought to be expended on this line. If, however, we are going to let the erection of a monument depend upon whether or not one Senator wants it, we out in Colorado might say: "There ought to be a great monument at Pikes Peak, and we would like to have one there, because it marked an era in the change of the flow of the population of the United States and the discovery of a great country out there."

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, the peak itself is a pretty good monument, is it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is a pretty good monument; but Zebulon Pike was a pretty good man, too, and he made the discovery and published to the world the riches that were there. One of the significant things that existed there was that everybody thought that gold was around in the vicinity of Pikes Peak, and it was not discovered until some 30 or 40 years afterwards; and yet that intuition seems to have been true, because the richest gold camp in the United States was found at the base of Pike's Peak.

But, Mr. President, where is this going to lead us? If we are going to appropriate $250,000 for a memorial at Lake Champlain to commemorate the Battle of Lake Champlain, there are any number of battles that are entitled to monuments. We ought to have some kind of a program or else we shall have to pick out the very great battles in the entire United States and appropriate for them. It seems to me, however, that to put as a rider upon an appropriation bill something that will shape itself into a policy of the United States Government with regard to the appropriation of money for luxuries is something that we ought not to do, for the reason that hundreds and perhaps thousands of these memorials will be asked for, and whether or not Congress will give them will depend to a large extent upon the popularity of the Senator making the request. That being the case, we know not where we are so far as finances are concerned if we are going to enter upon a policy of that kind.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado asked the very pertinent question, "Are we likely to lose the results of the victory of Lake Champlain by not erecting this monument?" To that I answer unequivocally, "We are likely to lose one of the best results of that victory if we fail to keep alive its glorious story." We do not erect monuments in solace of the dead. We build them for the inspiration of the living. That nation which neglects the dust of its heroic dead and turns a deaf ear to the voice of patriotism will not long remain great.

In these piping times of peace and expurgated diplomacy we have constantly thrust upon us the philosophy that war is a thing to be abominated and that soldiers and sailors who die in defense of home and country are in need of apologists. I, in common with all others, would like to behold the sunrise of the millenium, when the lion and the lamb may lie down together and the white dove of peace hover over every land. But, sir, he is blind, indeed, who does not recognize the fact that as the world is now constituted, the life of the Republic, the liberties of its citizens, their right to walk this earth without clanking the chains of a master, depend in the last analysis upon the valor of the people.

If there be a present menace, it is found in the disposition to commercialize everything. The tenderest sentiments of life are now weighed in the traders' balances. The noblest aspirations and accomplishments of patriotism are valued as they bring in revenue. Nothing is any longer of account unless we can reduce it to dollars and pence.

I utterly abominate that doctrine. I would rather have a people living upon the very verge of poverty, yet recognizing that manhood is the standard of greatness, than to live in a temple of gold, where serfs and sycophants cringe and bow before either the masters of wealth or the masters of power. The greatness of every nation depends upon the individual citizen; and the greatness of every nation in the last analysis depends to a great extent upon the valor of the individual man.

When it is publicly declared that those who have bared their bosoms to the storms of war, who have offered their lives upon the altars of human liberty, shall sleep in unremembered graves; or when we are told that in commemorating their sacrifices, their greatness and their valor, we should make careful estimate in cold dollars of the value of their services and count the cost with stingy hand, we have reached the point where valor, patriotism, and sacrifice will be no longer regarded as the noblest duty of the citizen.

Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont uttered a great truth when he said this monument should be built for the boys and girls of Vermont. Aye, sir, it should be built for the boys and girls of the United States. No nation has ever kept alive the fires of patriotism unless it has been willing to honor those who have died in its defense. The peoples who have maintained their liberties and become great have erected noble monuments to their heroes, and covered them with laurels of respect and the flowers of love.

The Temple of Fame was not built as a financial investment. It was erected that the youth of the land might gaze upon it and in the story of the heroic dead gain an inspiration from their example.

I would hang upon the walls of every public building the pictures of our country's patriots and martyrs. I would hold before the youth of the land the story of Lexington and Yorktown, of New Orleans, of Chapultepec, of Lookout Mountain, the Wilderness, and all the great battles in which the sons of America have marched forth to death with cheers upon their lips. I would embalm in song and story the courage of Perry and Farragut, of Jones and Macdonough, of Dewey and Schley, and all the others, officers and men, who did their duty valorously and well.

These heroes have gone, or are fast going, into the land of dreams. Moving across the sunlit fields of life are the children of to-day. The shadowy hosts of the future are pushing forward to take their places in the endless procession that marches across this bank of time. They soon will be the citizens of the Republic. As they approach, I would their eyes might gaze upon statues of marble and of bronze, preserving the heroic figure of George Washington, the intellectual features of Thomas Jefferson, the grizzled visage of Andrew Jackson, the determined countenance of Ulysses S. Grant. I would have them look upon the sorrowful face of Abraham Lincoln and the noble features of Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson. I would also point them to monuments commemorating the deathless courage of Macdonough, and tell them how this man, in a few days of time, hewed from the bosom of the forest his boats of war, and with less men and less guns than were possessed by the proud mistress of the waters wrested from her a glorious victory for our arms and preserved the integrity of the young Republic.

Sir, I count money so used as spent in the interests of humanity, patriotism, and the perpetuation of the liberties of the people of the United States of America.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have not been a Member of this body very long, but long enough to realize that the surest road to unpopularity and opposition lies in the effort to economize in public expenditures, and that he who seeks to stay the steady march of appropriations is not only subject to reprisals, but must run counter not only to many interests but to many appeals, which, coming from personal friends and from the insistence of those whom one holds in high regard are extremely difficult to withstand.

I have also discovered, Mr. President, that the average large appropriation in its last analysis is generally defended by an appeal to patriotism. It is therefore no pleasure to me, Mr. President, to occupy an attitude of opposition either to this or to any other of the many appropriations which are swelling the total expenditures of this Government to an appalling aggregate, for I know full well that this, together with other amendments made by the Senate committee to the bill, will be enacted into law unless they can be subjected to points of order.

I regret very much that the character of this appropriation is such as to make personal appeals not to oppose it almost irresistible. I have been struck during this discussion with the fact that appropriations, local in character, in a general appropriation bill, like the removal of tariff duties upon articles of local importance, constitute the chief obstacles to all change. As in the case of a man living on the Pacific coast and there representing a community interest in a particular industry, he seeks to preserve that industry in the exercise and enjoyment of the privilege which is obtained by law, while anxious to remove those privileges in other sections of the country, so each appropriation making up the aggregate of a general appropriation bill appeals, exclusively sometimes, but always appeals to some particular locality, in consequence of which it looms more largely in its importance when it is attacked than all the rest of the bill combined. Therefore it is perfectly natural, Mr. President, that this appropriation should find its advocates almost entirely from the locality where the money is to be expended.

Mr. President, I believe I am as conscious of the importance of the Battle of Lake Champlain as any other citizen familiar with its history. I believe I am as conscious of the importance of commemorating great events of the Nation's history as can be the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. But I believe, too, that there is a time for all things, and that when a great political party coming into power after an exile of many years at the outset of its campaign focused attention upon national extravagance and pledged itself to the people of the country that it would among other things effect a great reform in that direction if entrusted with power, it is as much the duty of the majority to obey that pledge as it is to conform to any other of its platform obligations.

Yet I am sorry to say that I have seen no evidences of a movement in that direction except as to matters of comparatively insignificant importance, while as to large appropriations liberality marks the occasion of all our actions, with the result that we shall probably appropriate more money in our general appropriation bills than ever before in the history of the country. We are economizing in some directions. For instance, in the senatorial barber shop and bathroom. I could not but think when the eloquent Senator from Vermont was discoursing and discoursing truly upon the virtues and the capacity and the patriotism of the sons of the Green Mountain State, who have occupied places in this Chamber, we should have thought or reflected upon the fact that they in their days of supremacy patronized the bathrooms and barber shops of the Senate, and, consequently, imparted an atmosphere of sanctity to the precincts of that place to which we all resort, and, as a consequence, should have withdrawn the hands of economy when stretched out in that direction.

Mr. President, some time ago, I think it was in one of the bills that has been considered by this Congress, an effort was made to increase the salaries of worthy occupants of official positions in some of the departments here, and particularly in the Department of the Treasury. I recall that of the chief clerk of the Customs Division, who by dint of hard work and attention to duty saved this Government last year $180,000. It was proposed to increase his somewhat meager salary some $500 a year, but that brand of economy which occasionally overtakes the Congress of the United States then came to the front and the allowance was denied.

I mention this not by way of invidious distinction, Mr. President, but merely to illustrate a number of similar instances in which we are prone to economize; and I have been unable to observe that, except in these smaller matters, which, of course, are relatively important, there is any spirit upon either side of this Chamber to administer the revenues of the country in the manner in which they should be administered and to the end of true economy.

Mr. President, I have seldom listened to a more eloquent tribute to valor and patriotism than that which has just fallen from the lips of the junior Senator from Missouri. There is much to be commended in the attitude which he has taken, but to my mind the most tremendous effect of war is the enormous burden of permanent expenditures and debt which it places upon the bent shoulders of future generations.

The Senator spoke of the generations which are to come and take our places as they successively appear upon the stage of action. They should have their minds stimulated and their hearts fortified with enduring patriotism by erecting monuments everywhere over the country to commemorate the valor and achievements of other days, and thus appeal to those sentiments and keep them alive forever more.

Mr. President, there is another side to the picture, for upon the shoulders of that shadowy multitude rest thousands of millions of debt, the heritage of war and of conflict, which these generations must forever bear, together with the constant accumulations which each successive period of strife adds to the mighty burden.

I would that war, with all its horrors and all its destruction and all its agonies, might be swept forever from the pathway of human history. To my mind the great value of monuments erected to the commemoration of these struggles is the lesson which they teach of sacrifice, of expenditure, of suffering, and of bloodshed, and that lesson, rightly learned and correctly interpreted, should warn the generations which witness these memorials of past triumphs against the repetition of conflicts when by honorable means they can be avoided.

Mr. President, I am sensible of the absence of the two Senators from the State of New York, and I would that this matter might come up at some time when one or the other of them were present; but, of course, it is not my fault nor the fault of any Member of this body that the State of New York is at present unrepresented here. I do not know that the fact of their presence would result in any change of procedure, because, much as I want to see a change in the administration of our fiscal affairs through appropriations, I am not going to take upon myself the sole responsibility of making a motion or raising a point of order upon this measure. I know, Mr. President, that it would seem invidious. I know that misconstruction might be placed upon my purpose in the absence of these gentlemen. I know, too, that this appropriation is neither better nor worse than a great many of the other appropriations or items in this and kindred measures

I am aware that a year ago we appropriated a similar amount to commemorate the victory on Lake Erie, and it occurred to me then that we were establishing a precedent that would bear rich fruit in the early future. I make the prediction now that this is but another precedent which will bear early fruit, encouraging similar appropriations hereafter in a similar way.

I shall not, Mr. President, vote for this measure, but, because of the appeals which these gentlemen have made, I shall content myself with making a motion to strike this proposed amendment from the bill.

Mr. BRYAN rose.

Mr. THOMAS. But, Mr. President, I want again, although I am conscious that it may be futile, to register my protest against the constant disregard of what I consider to be one of the fundamental planks of the Democratic platform and to say that, in my judgment, the country expects it to be recognized, and that if we continue our present course and come to disaster the consequences will be as much due to our disregard of that plank as of any other portion of our pledge to the people who put us in power.

I yield to the Senator from Florida.

My BRYAN. I rose to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that the usual method of procedure is to vote on the committee amendment. Therefore it will not be necessary for him to move to strike it out.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, whatever the usual procedure is I shall, of course, follow. I shall content myself by voting upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The same purpose will be accomplished by the rejection of the committee amendment. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I call for a division.

Mr. GALLINGER. We had better have the yeas and nays. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Otherwise Senators can not get here in time for the vote by yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). As I have before stated, I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]; but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote, unless it becomes necessary to make a quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations passed over was, on page 184, line 2, after the word "Isthmus," to strike out "and for expenses of the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal" and to insert "Provided, That the Secretary of War may make use of the equipment and funds of the Panama Railroad Co. for the purpose of transportation and other necessary expenses incident to the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, that is a remarkable amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me to interrupt him, I ask that the committee amendment may be disagreed to, so as to leave the text of the bill just as it was when it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall be very glad to see that done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations passed over was, on page 186, in line 4, after the word "expended," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the construction of the Panama Canal, including any portion of such appropriations which may be used for the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances, for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies, for the construction of office buildings and quarters, and other necessary buildings, exclusive of fortifications and colliers, and exclusive of the amount used for operating and maintaining the canal, and for the permanent organization after the canal is opened for use and operation, may be paid from or reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I intend to make a point of order against this amendment, but I do not desire to do so until the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has had an opportunity to speak upon it.

Mr. KENYON. Was this amendment passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. It was passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I have sent for him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the object of this amendment. The tariff act of 1909, in section 39, provides as follows:

SEC. 39. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time, as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures on account of the Panama Canal and to reimburse the Treasury for such expenditures already made and not covered by previous issues of bonds, the sum of $290,569,000 (which sum, together with the $84,631,900 already borrowed upon issues of 2 per cent bonds under section 8 of the act of June 28, 1902, equals the estimate of the Isthmian Canal Commission to cover the entire cost of the canal from its inception to its completion).

I wish the Senate to take particular notice of the authorization the Secretary of the Treasury had for issuing these bonds. It was "to cover the entire cost of the canal from its inception to its completion." The bonds authorized have not all been issued. There have been paid out of the general funds of the United States something more than $200,000,000 toward the construction and completion of the Panama Canal. The amendment reported provides:

That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the construction of the Panama Canal, including any portion of such appropriations which may be used for the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances.

Mr. President, that means that for every dollar that has been paid out in the past toward the construction of the Panama Canal from the general funds of the Government the Secretary of the Treasury can now issue bonds for that amount, and not only for that amount, Mr. President, but for the amount that will be required for the completion of the canal proper, and also "for the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances."

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator from Utah mean that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue and sell bonds exclusive of the amount of bonds provided for in the tariff act to which the Senator refers?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to do that under this amendment, but he is authorized under this amendment to issue the bonds provided for in the tariff act of August 5, 1909, to pay the amount of money that has already been paid from the general fund of the Government toward the completion and construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. THOMAS. That is, the unsold bonds of that issue?

Mr. SMOOT. The unsold bonds of that issue.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. As I understand, there has been up to this time approximately $340,000,000 expended in the construction of the canal.

Mr. SMOOT. Approximately $354,000,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. A part of that has been obtained by the sale of bonds and a part of it has been taken from the general fund of the Treasury. All bills up to date have been paid?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. BRISTOW. This bill proposes to appropriate $20,000,000 additional. It not only authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds to obtain the $20,000,000, but it authorizes him to sell bonds representing expenditures that have already been made out of the Public Treasury so as to obtain money to construct additional facilities that are not provided for here?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; and not only that, Mr. President, but it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell these bonds and return the proceeds to the general fund of the Treasury the amount that has been paid out of that general fund, or, in other words, the Secretary of the Treasury under this amendment can sell over $200,000,000 worth of those bonds. I have sent to my office to ascertain the precise amount of construction cost paid from the general fund, and if I have not given it correctly I will correct my statement; but the law authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the amount of bonds provided for in the act of August 5, 1909, to reimburse the general fund of the Government for the amount expended on the construction of the canal.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator will allow me, would it not be better to put it in this way: It is proposed to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell $200,000,000 of bonds to obtain money with which to pay the current running expenses of the Government?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to go that far, because the amendment does not specifically so state, but that is its ultimate object.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is the object of it. Evidently anticipating a deficit in the revenues, instead of asking for permission to issue bonds to meet it, they want to issue bonds on account of expenditures which have been made, paid for, and settled, in order to get the money to meet current expenses, the ostensible purpose being to meet expenditures incurred in building the canal, although the canal has been constructed and paid for with the exception of an expenditure of about $20,000,000.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that would hardly be a fair construction to place upon the purpose of this provision. It was in the sundry civil law of last year practically the same as it is in the bill of this year, the only difference being that the words "and colliers" "and maintaining" are added to this provision.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true, Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know for how many years a similar provision has been in the sundry civil appropriation bill, but certainly it was in the bill last year.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that was the first year it was placed into an appropriation bill.

Mr. BRYAN. It seems to me it does not made a great deal of difference whether it remains in this year or not, because the same words contained in this bill are in the law now.

Mr. SMOOT. That law did not say that "hereafter"——

Mr. BRYAN. It did say "hereafter." I will read it to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; the Senator may read it.

Mr. BRYAN. It reads:

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not mean "hereafter" in that sense. I mean that the provision which was put in last year's law only applied to the end of that fiscal year, and unless a similar provision is now put in this bill the provision in the law of last year ceased on June 30 last.

Mr. BRYAN. So the provision in this bill will cease on June 30 of next year.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President, I know that; but I want to say to the Senator that when a similar provision was put in the bill last year there was criticism made of it in the committee, but it was stated that it would make no difference; that it was not expected to use any money that might be derived from the sale of said bonds; and that therefore it would do no harm. I remember, Mr. President——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. I remember that two years ago, I think it was, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], in discussing the very question of the authorization of issue of bonds for this purpose, and the fact that none had been issued under it for some time before, asked whether or not the Government of the United States could issue them, and I told the Senator from Colorado at that time the Treasurer could issue them, but I did not believe that he ever would.

Mr. THOMAS. That was one year ago.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Colorado corrects me, and says that was one year ago.

Mr. President, it has been my thought and my belief that no more of those bonds would be issued. I want to say to the Senate now that when the provision to which I have referred was put in the tariff act of 1909 it was thought then that there would be very few of the bonds ever issued; but the provision was inserted so that in case it happened in any particular year that there was not revenue enough to meet the general expenses of the Government the construction of the Panama Canal would not be interfered with. At that time, Mr. President, we did not know what the canal was going to cost; we had a general idea, but nobody knew even approximately what it would cost; and the provision was enacted at that time out of abundant caution.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Florida. I regret that the provision was in last year's bill. I do not think it ought to have been there. I think it is altogether proper to provide for a bond issue to meet the expenditure of $20,718,000 provided in this bill, in the event the general revenues of the Government should prove inadequate, but to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to go back and issue bonds to reimburse the Treasury for expenses that have been incurred, it seems to me, is unwise legislation and calculated to invite extravagance.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that under the act of August 5, 1909, the Secretary of the Treasury has the right now to issue bonds to the amount of $20,718,000 appropriated in this bill, and there is no necessity for a provision of that kind in this bill, because, as I have said, the Secretary of the Treasury has already that authority, provided the money is used for the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. President, if no one else desires to speak upon this subject, I desire to state my point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to say a word before the Senator does that.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I withhold the point of order.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not intend to argue the merits of this proposition, but it seemed to me that it was not fair to say that this proviso was placed in this bill in order to enable the Treasury Department to issue bonds, because it was in last year's bill in the same language, and I think it has been in sundry civil bills for a number of years past. It seems to me that it does not make much difference whether it remains in the bill or not, because the word "hereafter" will make the provision applicable beyond the year for which the appropriation is made. That language is broad enough to continue that power, it seems to me; and if the Senator is fearful of bonds being issued, why does he not introduce a bill to repeal that provision as contained in the law for the fiscal year 1914?

Mr. SMOOT. I have been thinking of doing that very thing, and I believe it ought to be done just as soon as the canal is completed; but I have not felt up to this time that I would be justified in making an effort to repeal section 39 of the tariff act of August 5, 1909, at least not until we knew what the canal was going to actually cost and was virtually completed.

Mr. BRYAN. I merely want to read the language before the Senator raises his point of order, so as to show that it is not dependent upon the expiration of the year for which the appropriation is made, because it says:

Provided—

I am now reading from the act of last year—

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the construction of the Panama Canal, including any portion of such appropriations which may be used—

And so forth.

It is not limited to any year; the power to issue bonds has been there under the act of last year all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think so. That applies only to the appropriation bill of that year.

Mr. BRYAN. Then why is the Senator going to introduce a bill to repeal it?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not mean the repealing of that provision; I meant, as I stated, that section 39 of the act of August 5, 1909, ought to be repealed. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me further, I am informed by the clerk of the committee that a similar provision has occurred in every appropriation bill since 1907; so that the fact that it remains in this bill ought not to be taken as warrant for the statement that there is some intention of issuing bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. The act of 1909 in which we provided for bonds was the tariff act. I have just read that provision of the act of 1909, Mr. President.

Mr. BRYAN. I will read to the Senator from the act of 1907:

Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriation herein made for the Isthmian Canal shall be paid from, or reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of, the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902.

Mr. SMOOT. That refers to the Panama Canal act of 1902.

Mr. BRYAN. And a similar provision has been in all the appropriation bills covering appropriations for the Panama Canal since 1907.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That provision is not like the one in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is not like this provision at all.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. In a moment. I merely want to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas, if he is going to speak upon the question, to the fact that that provision is not the same as the provision in this bill. Right here I desire to say that I have just received the information that the amount that has been paid from the general funds of the Treasury in the construction of the Panama Canal has been $217,785,130.08 instead of $200,000,000, as I stated from recollection.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. As I understood the provision read by the Senator from Florida, it provided for the sale of bonds to meet the appropriation therein made. I think that is altogether proper.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not take issue with him that in the last appropriation bill the same provision was made; but I think it was wrong. I believe, as I said before, that we ought to give authority to sell bonds to secure money to complete the canal, and not have that project depend upon the current revenues; but I do not think it would be right for us to go back, in order to get funds to maintain the Government, to sell bonds and to reimburse the Treasury for those expenditures any more than for any other expenditures.

I desire to withdraw my criticism that this provision has never before appeared, as I now understand it has appeared heretofore, and I will direct the criticism against the method of appropriating not only in this bill but in any previous bill that may have contained the same language.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not think I will quarrel with the Senator on his proposition.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if that is the case, why not have the Senate disagree to this amendment entirely?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I do not feel authorized to agree to that. The Senator can make his point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I make the point of order that the amendment changes existing law. The law to which it refers——

Mr. BRYAN. It does not change existing law, and if the Senator makes the point of order upon that ground——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will wait until I get through stating the point of order, he will be better able to understand the point I make.

Mr. President, the provision changes existing law in this respect, that the act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds for defraying the expenses of the construction of the Panama Canal specifically states that they may be issued to cover the entire cost of the canal from its inception to its completion. This amendment here goes further than the cost of the canal. It states that bonds may be issued—

For the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances.

It is also general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I am through.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the point of order is not well taken at this time, even if it were of substance as originally presented. The rule that governs the presentation of objections in the form of points of order is well defined in the action of the Senate had on January 13, 1881. It is recorded in the Book of Precedents prepared by Mr. Gilfry, at page 47, as follows:

The Senate having under consideration the Army appropriation bill,
On motion of Mr. Saunders to amend by inserting:
"For the erection of a building suitable for offices for headquarters of the Department of the Platte in Omaha, State of Nebraska, $30,000," etc.,
After debate,

Just as debate has taken place here now—

Mr. Beck raised a question of order, viz, that the amendment not having been moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments, was not in order under Rule XXVII of the Senate.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Hoar in the chair) overruled the question of order, and decided that a question that an amendment was not in order could not be made after debate had proceeded upon the merits of the amendment. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-sixth Congress, third session, p. 604.)

On the following day, January 14 (Journal, p. 119), when the bill was up for consideration, and the question recurring on the amendment proposed by Mr. Saunders,

Before proceeding to the consideration of the proposed amendment Mr. Withers asked, and by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have the question submitted whether the motion of Mr. Saunders to amend the bill was in order, the amendment not having been proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments, and the Presiding Officer (Mr. Rollins in the chair) submitted the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order?

It was determined in the negative. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, same as above, pp. 624–628.)

It is not in order to debate a question and then propose a point of order that is decisive of it if decided affirmatively. For that reason the Senator has waived his right to raise the point of order.

We have gone along here in disregard of that wholesome rule until it has almost become obsolete; but the more I see of its abuse the more I am satisfied that it is one of the best rules we have, and that it ought to be enforced, and I know of no better case in which to enforce it than the present.

In the first place, the proposed amendment carries out existing law. I say that because section 39 of the act of 1909, which has been read by the Senator from Utah, authorized the issue of $290,000,000 of bonds for the purpose of paying for the Panama Canal. It never was intended that the cost of constructing the Panama Canal should rest upon the general revenues of the country. It was treated as a special project, and special provision was made for the payment of the necessary expenditures. There grew up a habit of making appropriations payable out of the general-revenue fund, always with the implied condition that whenever the revenue necessities of the Government required the sum thus paid would be reimbursed to that fund by a sale of these bonds.

The Senator from Utah informs us that there have been paid out of the general fund of the Treasury $217,000,000 of the $340,000,000 that have been expended. That leaves about $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 of the canal bonds that have been sold. It is entirely competent for the Secretary of the Treasury at this time, if in his judgment it should be necessary to do so, to sell a thousand bonds and to reimburse the general fund for the outlays that have been made from time to time. He could do that with perfect propriety, not in view of any failure of revenue but simply because it was so nominated in the bond and was part of the scheme under which that great canal was constructed.

The immaterial amendments made here, including colliers and coaling stations, and a few things of that kind which the Senator read, and which I do not now accurately recall, are not so completely of the substance as to justify us in assuming that it is a wholly different provision. The language in former acts spoke in the terms of a permanent statute. In fact, it was implied in the act of 1909, section 39, that all the funds necessary to construct the canal must be raised by the sale of bonds. Simply as a matter of financial convenience to the Treasury Department or to utilize surplus revenues, without putting the Government to the expense of issuing bonds and thereby paying interest while there was idle money lying in the Treasury, the habit grew up of paying out of current revenues as far as the funds would go the expense of constructing the canal.

I therefore maintain that the point of order is bad, first, because the amendment was debated on its merits before it was presented and next because it simply carries out the provisions of existing law and is justified under our rules.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the case cited by the Senator is not this case at all. I have not offered an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator debated the amendment on its merits before he presented the point of order against its consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true; but I stated in starting that I intended to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is just exactly what our rules do not permit a Senator to do.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know of any rule to that effect.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. This is the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the case cited by the Senator from Arkansas is a case in which a Senator offered an amendment to the amendment of the committee; and, of course, if there was a point of order made against it, it would be wholly out of order to discuss it. There is no question in my mind about that. The case that the Senator cites is perfectly right and proper under our rules, but there is no amendment offered to this amendment by any Senator. It is the whole committee amendment itself, and to that committee amendment I make the point of order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, in order that there may be no dispute as to just exactly what the precedent cited by me establishes, I will read it, or at least the operative part of it. The ruling was made by an honored Senator from Massachusetts, Senator Hoar, who was here when I came, and who was recognized as an authority upon parliamentary procedure. The ruling made by the Chair was as follows:

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Hoar in the chair) overruled the question of order, and decided that a question that an amendment was not in order could not be made after debate had proceeded upon the merits of the amendment.

That is what I invoke here and now.

Mr. SMOOT. But I have not offered an amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not talking about what the Senator offered, but he raised a point of order against an amendment, and he can not do that after he has debated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware that if I had offered an amendment that could not be done; but in the case cited Senator Hoar was perfectly right in his ruling, and so would the Senator from Arkansas, in his contention to-day, if I had offered an amendment to this amendment; but I did not do that.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I can only say that I can not make the contention I am insisting upon any clearer than I have made it by reading the rule. All the cases differ somewhat in their facts, but the general rule by which they are governed is the same, notwithstanding there may be distinctions of fact arising from time to time. In fact, it rarely ever happens that two cases exactly alike are presented, because in that case there is an instant and complete obedience to the former ruling. What the Presiding Officer decided and what the Senate on a vote affirmed was that after an amendment of any kind, offered by anybody, committee or Senator, at any time had been debated upon its merits, it was too late to raise the point of order that it could not be considered, and that is the question I submit.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I want to take issue with the Senator from Arkansas in regard to the matter of issuing bonds upon past expenditures to meet the obligations for which this $20,000,000 is appropriated. While the Senator from Arkansas has been here much longer than I have, and I would not want to take issue with him, so far as memory goes, my impression has been that the object of providing for this bond issue was to be sure to have funds available for the construction of the canal regardless of the condition the Treasury might be in; and it has been carried on from year to year. Now, when the Treasury has an abundance of funds to meet all of its obligations, this expenditure, as well as any other, I certainly think it would be foolish to resort to issuing bonds; and since the Treasury has been able to meet the demands with a limited issue of bonds, it seems to me that when we make here an appropriation of $20,000,000 it is all right to continue to carry the provision for issuing bonds to obtain this money; but to carry a provision that will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the bonds to meet an expenditure that has already been made and settled is unwise, and I do not think it ought to be carried in the law.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, there has not been a bond sold for the specific purpose of raising money to construct the canal. In every instance where a sale has taken place it has been to reimburse the Treasury, to supply an approaching deficiency.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is not the Senator mistaken as to that? Are not these Panama Canal bonds a distinct and specific issue that can not be used by the banks as the basis for the issuance of currency? They draw 3 per cent interest, and they are registered and known as Panama bonds, and sold as such.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is conceded; but I say that the actual sale of the bonds was not for the specific purpose of raising funds to prosecute the work of construction of the canal, but for the purpose of supplying funds when it was indicated that a deficit was about to take place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is impressed that the point of order raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is not well taken. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Overman	Sterling
Brady	Hitchcock	Page	Stone
Bristow	Hollis	Perkins	Sutherland
Bryan	Johnson	Poindexter	Swanson

Colt	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Crawford	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Cummins	Norris	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Oliver	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment on page 186, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I want to express my surprise that at the hour of 20 minutes past 2 o'clock we should have to waste some time here in getting a quorum. I speak only for myself. I am here under conditions that are not overpleasant; but I feel sure that there ought to be an admonition, particularly from the other side of the Chamber, to Senators as to their duty. The quorum will soon be absolutely broken unless greater effort is put forth to have Senators attend the sessions.

I say this in entire good nature. If I consulted my own convenience or my own comfort, I would not be in the Senate; but I am sitting here hour after hour and day after day, and I wish that we might not be put to the inconvenience and discomfort of extending the hours because of the fact that Senators are absenting themselves when they ought to be here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the words of the Senator are very fit and apropos.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Chair state the question again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 186, beginning in line 3, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is at the foot of page 197, where the committee proposed to strike out "$4" and in lieu insert "$6," so that if amended it will read:

SEC. 13. That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $6 in lieu of subsistence to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts of duty when not otherwise fixed by law.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if I may present an amendment to this section, to which I called his attention, with a view to perfecting it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I would be glad to have it sent to the desk and read. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I send the amendment to the desk, and ask that it be inserted on page 198, line 1, after the word "law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLIS in the chair). The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. On page 198, after the word "law," insert:

Provided, That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $10 in lieu of subsistence to members of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation and United States General Appraisers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the text.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Where does the amendment come in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the top of page 198, after the words "by law," the first two words in the line.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Nevada that this allows the members of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation and also the United States General Appraisers, of whom there are nine, a per diem of $10 in lieu of subsistence; that is, it is not to exceed that amount.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will this amendment, in the judgment of the Senator, take the Board of Mediation and Conciliation out of the operation of a similar provision in the urgent deficiency act?

Mr. SMOOT. It will, in my opinion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am very anxious to accomplish that object, because I think it would impair very much the work of this board if they were limited to so small a sum. It is well known that the only salaries connected with the Board of Mediation and Conciliation are those of the commissioner and the assistant commissioner. The Board of Mediation and Conciliation consists, in addition to the commissioner and assistant commissioner, of two United States officials, who act without further compensation than they now receive. One of those is Mr. Justice Knapp, of the circuit court. We all know that the judges of the circuit court on circuit duty away from home are allowed $10 per day.

It is important that the subsistence of the members of this board should not be limited as provided for in this section. The proceedings of the board require the presence of the board at a hotel. It is the custom for the hotel to give the board, without charge, some large room in which they can hold their councils with the employees and the corporation officials affected, and such a hotel, of sufficient size to furnish such a room, is always a first-class hotel, and it would be impossible to obtain room accommodations for less than four or five dollars a day.

I hope that this amendment will be accepted by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not believe that we have ever allowed as high a rate as $10 per day, and I do not favor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah. It seems to me that $5 per day is a good per diem allowance. If we make the amount too high there will be a tendency on the part of the persons to take the money which is provided here in lieu of subsistence, and they may not spend the money. There ought not to be that temptation presented to anyone.

We ought either to pay the expenses, whatever they are, or limit it so that they shall not exceed a certain amount, but I do not believe that $10 a day ought to be allowed. All they ask, I understand, is their actual expenses. If they are put to an actual expense of $10 a day, let it be paid, but I do not believe in putting on the statute books something that will plague us in pretty nearly everything we do in the future in the way of allowance of hotel bills.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that the provision is not exceeding $10 per day in lieu of subsistence, and I also call attention to the fact that this affects only 12 men. There are 9 general appraisers. They are called as far West as San Francisco in deciding questions of dispute which arise as to the classification of goods entering into this country. They are called to large cities only, and they are virtually judges. They can not go to a cheap hotel. Not only that, but they generally have to go to a hotel and have rooms sufficient so that they can have people call on them for consultation.

It does seem to me that this amendment is in order and is a proper one. It does not amount to very much, as I said, because only 12 people will be affected by it.

I think it is not a precedent, because the United States judges are allowed not exceeding $10 per day, and the work of the general appraisers is of a similar character as that of a judge. They act in a judicial capacity, and when away from home they go to the same class of hotels, and they have just as much expense attached to their travel as the United States judges.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I called this matter to the attention of the Senate yesterday while we were discussing the allowance for the commissioners to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. I believe that $10 a day is more than is required, but I could not understand the inconsistency of giving the commissioners to the Panama-Pacific Exposition, two of whom are already, or will be, in the service of the Government, and the other we provided yesterday shall be outside the service, $10 a day and reduce the allowance for the expenses of officers like the General Board of Appraisers or the members of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. I recall to the attention of the Senator from Colorado—and he is a member of the Appropriations Committee—this provision on page 164 of the bill:

> Each commissioner detailed as aforesaid shall receive, in addition to his original compensation, necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence.

I do not desire to raise the amount beyond a reasonable sum. I think $10 a day is more than any man needs to expend in his living expenses. But what is the justification for giving $10 a day to the Panama-Pacific Exposition commissioners and limiting these other high officers to a lower sum? I think equality is one of the great virtues of any law. I see no reason for the discrimination here, although I would be very much opposed to raising the limit of all the officers who may travel to $10 a day. I am in favor of cutting down the allowance to the Panama-Pacific commissioners.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator if we are not establishing a precedent which will vex us later on by making an allowance of $10 for subsistence?

Mr. CUMMINS. Personally I think we are. I do not believe there ought to be any specific sum allowed. I think these people who are working for the Government should be paid a reasonable compensation and whatever reasonable expenses they incur in the prosecution of their work. That is the logical, equitable way in which to adjust these matters. We all know that a maximum fixed in the statute becomes the minimum amount paid for the object, whatever it may be.

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me, Mr. President, that rather than establish a practice of this kind I would prefer, out of my own pocket, to pay a part of it myself. We ought to be a nation of fairly decent economists, and to establish this kind of a precedent, it seems to me, would go out to the country in such a way that they will properly criticize it. I wish that the amount might be reduced or, as the Senator suggests, that it be left to actual expenses and leave it in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. All the Government employees are not as altruistic and generous as the Senator from Vermont, nor possibly are they so able to be contributors to the public expenses as is the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator if he thinks $8 a day would be a more satisfactory amount? If so, I am perfectly willing to modify my amendment and make it $8.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it ought not to be more than $8 per day.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President, I will modify my amendment and make it $8 instead of $10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah modifies his amendment by substituting "$8" for "$10."

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, for many years the Government has allowed the judges not to exceed $10 a day when they go outside of their own districts or circuits. It would depend a good deal upon where these men travel. My public duties called me to Boston almost entirely, and $10 a day living in Boston at a first-class hotel is not an excessive allowance; it is a reasonable allowance. Of course $8 would be something perhaps that one would have to think about several times before exceeding the expenditure. Of course in other parts of the country it might be different, if you went to smaller places but these men are called to the larger cities, and they are obliged to spend the night there.

From my long experience, I should say that not exceeding $10 a day would mean $10, and it is not excessive, although the rule will be perhaps $5 or $6 a day in other places. If these men are to be relieved entirely from pinching matters, $10 would not be excessive, but it would depend entirely upon the localities where they went. Perhaps under all the circumstances, taking the country over, $8 a day would be fair.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I can not forbear the temptation to express my gratification upon the announcement of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] that he is in favor of economy now. A few moments ago I labored under the impression that he believed in only necessary expenditures, among which were $250,000 for a monument somewhere up on the shores of Lake Champlain. Of course, the Senator's conversion to economy comes after he obtained his own appropriation, and perhaps that may have something to do with it. But I recognize in the present amendment that form of economy which most Members of this and the coordinate body of Congress are indulging in. We must cut down the necessary expenses of the average servants of the Government, and by that means we can pair off here and there and yonder which those who are affected by such a measure must make up out of their meager salaries. By that means we can get enough to build a monument to commemorate a great historical occasion and contribute to the patriotic feeling of this and succeeding generations. I imagine that that is the extent to which the economy is to go during the present Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I had inserted in the RECORD yesterday a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from the commissioner of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, but it was not read, and, with the indulgence of the Senate, I will read a few extracts from the letter. After stating that the two other members of the board are United States officials, without other salaries than those which they receive by reason of their office, the commissioner goes on to say:

> In connection with the work of mediation, it is necessary always to have a suitable room for the conferences with the parties to the controversy; and so far such accommodations have been furnished gratis by the hotels at which the mediators have stopped. In order to come within the $5 limitation of expenses for subsistence, it would be necessary in most cases for the mediator not only to secure hotel accommodations in a less convenient location, involving loss of time in getting into touch with the parties to the case and in carrying on negotiations, but also to hire a room for conferences, which in itself would cost more than the entire expenses for subsistence at present.

Cases come to this board only after the railroads and their employees have exhausted every other means of composing their differences, and when the controversy has reached a critical point, threatening to terminate in a strike and consequent stoppage of operation and inconvenience to the public. It is imperative that the mediator act quickly and get promptly into touch with the railroad officials on the one hand and the committee of the employees on the other. It is believed that the limitation in expense of subsistence would prove a serious handicap to this work, and that in the end the cost of mediation would thereby actually be increased.

The writer goes on to state that these mediation sessions are always held in large cities, and he also states that the smaller hotels have not the large rooms or the large room that is necessary for their council, and that it is a custom of the first-class hotels to furnish that room free of charge. So he anticipates that if they are compelled to pay for their subsistence at an inferior hotel no room of the requisite size exists and they will be compelled to pay for the large room they now secure for nothing, and the worth of the room in some cases is, according to his statement, $50 a day.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me? The amendment which is offered provides for the particular board which the Senator is speaking of $10 a day. I do not think we have provided sufficiently for the representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the attorneys of that body, who are sent over the country for examinations and hearings. I presume that the Senator, like myself, is somewhat in the dark as to what they may draw. Of course I do not wish to discuss it now, but I think at some time we will have to go over the whole per diem in lieu of subsistence situation. We are now allowing or paying to some $3, to some $4, to some $5, to some $6, and to others $10. I think there ought to be some fixed scale in the matter of which the Senator is directly speaking. If this amendment carries, I think it should be so that it will cover the board of mediation and conciliation and representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission at $10 a day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That would cover it very satisfactorily, but I understand the Senator from Utah has consented to a reduction to $8 a day.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. After reading the letters that I have received from a number of general appraisers and other parties I figure from what they say that they could in most cases get along with $8 per day, but nothing less. I want to say frankly that it ought to be $10 a day, but rather than have any dispute in the Senate and to have the matter finally decided without any special opposition I think it would be best to make it $8 a day, and let it remain at that rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah by making it read, instead of "in lieu of subsistence," "actual hotel expenses not exceeding $8 per day."

I think that nothing ought to be "in lieu of subsistence," because if you allow that and they stop with a friend they would be entitled to $8 a day. It ought to be actual money paid out.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in a number of our laws we say "in lieu of subsistence," and I do not believe we ought to make any particular change in this one instance. We are following the exact language of almost all such provisions in all our laws.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it not also true that the departments object to the law as it would be if amended by the Senator from Colorado, on account of the expense of the accounting and the inconvenience?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I remember that that question was raised. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not press his amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Still there is not any question about it that if a person goes and stays with a friend he still would be drawing from the Government $8, although not paying out a cent.

Mr. SMOOT. If he was a dishonorable man perhaps——

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it allows him here in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. OLIVER. Sometimes it is more expensive to stay with a friend than it is to stay at a hotel.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 198, after the word "law," in line 1, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the heads of executive departments and other Government establishments are authorized to prescribe per diem rates of allowance not exceeding $8 in lieu of subsistence to members of the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation and United States General Appraisers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. The committee amendment has not yet been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 197, line 23, to strike out "$4" and insert "$6."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment was passed over at the instance of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. It is on page 198, to insert the following proviso, beginning at line 4:

Provided, That internal-revenue agents appointed under the act of October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," shall receive compensation of not to exceed $7 per day, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence when absent on duty from their legal residence said agents shall receive, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $3 per day, and that internal-revenue inspectors appointed under said act of October 3, 1913, shall receive compensation of not to exceed $5 per day, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 when absent on duty from their legal residence, compensation and per diem in lieu of subsistence to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss the amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply rose to say that I am quite ready to have the amendment acted upon by the Senate without discussion on my part.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire a little more information in regard to this particular amendment than I now have. It provides that internal-revenue agents appointed under the act of October 3, 1913, which is the general tariff law of last year, "shall receive compensation of not to exceed $7 per day, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence when absent on duty from their legal residence said agents shall receive, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $3 per day."

I think the compensation here provided for these agents is altogether too high, and unless the chairman of the committee or some member of the committee can disabuse my mind of that impression, I shall have to present an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that this is exactly the provision, in words and terms, which was passed in the tariff law, except that it changes the words "legal residence" to the words "in lieu of subsistence when absent on duty." The way it read there was "official residence." Income-tax collectors are frequently assigned to New York and Chicago, and their official residence is there temporarily. They are there, say, for 30 days, whereas their legal residence might be in Iowa. While their residence is in Iowa, they do not get the compensation at all; but when they are designated to go to Chicago and remain there for 30 days, the department thinks they ought to have compensation, although they are not traveling all the time; that if they are designated to go to Chicago and stay, they ought to have $5. Making it read "absent on duty" instead of "legal residence" is about the only change in the law.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand that; I am not objecting to subsistence; but the Senator from North Carolina will remember that the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury was very much enlarged in so far as the employment of these agents is concerned, and a great many men, I assume, have been taken into the service who were formerly not necessary. Does the Senator from North Carolina think that the work which these agents now perform is worth $7 a day and that the work of the traveling inspectors is worth but $5 a day?

Mr. OVERMAN. The $7 a day men are men who travel about examining corporations and persons where evidence has come to the department that they are dodging the law. These $7 a day men are very expert men. There are only 48 of them, I think, in all. The $5 a day men are locally situated in the cities at the collection offices, and they get exactly the same compensation that deputy collectors get; but the $7 a day men must be thoroughly acquainted with business; they must be qualified to examine the books of the companies and all the matters relating to the income tax, and they must be very efficient men.

Mr. GALLINGER. Who determines, I will ask the Senator, their expertness or their capacity for this work?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is left to the appointing power. We have to rely on that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is the Senator sure that the men appointed belong in that class?

Mr. OVERMAN. In my State they are of that class. I do not know how they are in the Senator's State.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it would be well to look into it a little.

Mr. OVERMAN. That might be. That is a question for the appointing power.

Mr. CUMMINS. How many of them have been appointed since the tariff law went into effect?

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand of the $7 a day men there are about 40.

Mr. CUMMINS. They are the men who have been appointed without an examination, and we have no knowledge that they are men of skill or training. Why are they paid $7 a day?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are paid exactly the same as the other revenue agents are paid.

Mr. CUMMINS. But formerly I assume they had very few of them, because there were but few prior to the tariff act of last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; there are a great many of what are known as internal-revenue agents. They get $7 a day. Their compensation is exactly what the internal-revenue agents get.

The revenue agents gets $7 a day and $3 a day in lieu of subsistence. The income-tax inspectors get exactly the same; that is, their salary is fixed by the tariff act. The deputy collectors, doing the same work heretofore, have been getting $5 a day and $3 a day in lieu of subsistence, and the income-tax collectors locally situated are getting exactly the same salary.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is the difference between the work of one of these traveling agents and the work of a traveling inspector?

Mr. OVERMAN. A traveling inspector is an inspector in a State who goes around from point to point and acquaints people with what they have to do in making their returns, who assists them in making their returns; and some of them in the office are receiving such returns and doing the bookkeeping. They act as do the deputy collectors.

Mr. CUMMINS. Are they called deputy internal-revenue collectors?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they are not; but they are put on the same salaries as are the deputy collectors of internal revenue, and do practically the same work in the internal-revenue business as do the collectors of internal revenue.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why are they not called "deputy revenue collectors," then?

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not answer that. The tariff law was framed in that way; but I do not know why; it has not been changed, and they were called deputy collectors; others are called inspectors. They get $5 a day, and are confined to the States. For example, the Senator might have two of them in Iowa—one of whom takes the western part of the State and the other the eastern part of the State, and looks after the income tax there. The general inspector, for instance, goes to Chicago, but to-morrow he may be called to San Francisco or to Boston to examine the books of a corporation or of a company or of an individual, if necessary.

Mr. CUMMINS. What is he called?

Mr. OVERMAN. He is called the general agent, and he gets $7 a day, the same salary as the internal-revenue agent gets. They are both called agents.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina what is the necessity for inserting the word "legal" in describing the kind of residence?

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator was appointed from Birmingham, that would be his legal residence, and he is not entitled to subsistence when he is in Birmingham, which is his home.

Mr. WHITE. Is that not simply his residence?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is his residence.

Mr. WHITE. Why, then, insert the word "legal"?

Mr. OVERMAN. That was done by the department. I suppose they thought that was a better word than "official." The language formerly was "official residence." The consequence was that the agents could not get any allowance when they were sent to Chicago, for instance.

Mr. WHITE. I will inquire of the Senator from North Carolina, if one of these agents should be appointed from the District of Columbia and lived here, his legal residence being in one of the States, would not he be entitled to pay all the time, he being absent from his legal residence all the time?

Mr. OVERMAN. He would be entitled to pay whenever, for example, he was called away from the District of Columbia to examine books. He is then entitled to his extra compensation, and he ought to have it.

Mr. WHITE. But his legal residence is not in the District of Columbia?

Mr. OVERMAN. He would not draw subsistence if he lived here.

Mr. WHITE. But if his legal residence is not in the District of Columbia, but in one of the States, he could get the subsistence.

Mr. OVERMAN. He would not live here. That would be supposing a case that would be impossible. If he votes in Alabama and has a legal residence there, he could not get any per diem; but if he is designated to come from his home State here for a month—they never stay at home; at least, not very long—or if he is to go and stay a month in San Francisco, he would be entitled to subsistence. That is the distinction.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from North Carolina does not get my idea.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am sorry.

Mr. WHITE. I am sorry I have not been able to make it more intelligible; but, as I understand it, people who live in the District of Columbia have their legal residence in the States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Some do and some do not.

Mr. WHITE. I know that generally when they ask for an appointment to office they have to state that their legal residence is in the State from which they originally came, and must obtain a certificate to that effect.

Mr. OVERMAN. A great many people under the civil-service law claim that they have a legal residence in my State who never saw the State.

Mr. WHITE. What I intended to suggest was this: If I am correct, the agent would have a legal residence in the State of North Carolina, but his actual residence would, in fact, be in the District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERMAN. That would be impossible. These agents do not and can not live here.

Mr. WHITE. But they do in fact live here and are here when appointed.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they are appointed from the States. If they are appointed from here this would be their legal residence.

Mr. WHITE. The point I am making is that while they actually live here their legal residence is in the State from which they came when they came here.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the way the department construes it.

Mr. WHITE. Their legal residence is in the State from which they came.

Mr. OVERMAN. If they are appointed from the District of Columbia the department recognizes the fact that that is the place from which they are appointed, and it is their legal residence.

Mr. WHITE. I think the word "residence" covers everything that is necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Or "official residence."

Mr. WHITE. But would not the word "residence" be sufficient?

Mr. OVERMAN. "Residence" would not; and that is the very point we are talking about. His official residence would be in Chicago for a month. There is where he is officially designated to go; but we are drawing a distinction between "residence" legally and "residence" officially. That is all there is in it.

Mr. WHITE. My view is that the agent appointed from the District of Columbia would be away from his legal residence, which is in some State, all the time when he is in office, and would therefore draw this subsistence all the time, because he is not at his legal residence, the District of Columbia not being his legal but his actual residence.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Alabama is assuming now that certain of these agents are appointed from the District of Columbia. I confess that it seems to me there might be something in his point. The District of Columbia is in some internal-revenue district, is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, Mr. President, they have the income tax here, and it is in some district. I do not think you will find a man here appointed from the District of Columbia, though there are 300 officials in the internal-revenue office here in this revenue district.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not talking about them. The District of Columbia is in some internal-revenue taxation district, and undoubtedly would have one or two of these agents appointed from its internal-revenue taxing district. The District man would be domiciled here, but he may have a legal residence, as the Senator says, in the State of Alabama, in the State of Georgia, in the State of Iowa, in the State of New Jersey, or elsewhere, and the question might arise as to whether or not you intended to pay a man while away from his legal residence.

Mr. OVERMAN. Nine-tenths of them, every one of them, I may say, are appointed from some legal residence—New Jersey, Alabama, North Carolina, or wherever it may be. This is to correct a wrong arising from the use of the term "official residence."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia (to Mr. OVERMAN). Strike out the word "legal."

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I could not do that. What residence would it mean then? How would the Senator fix it?

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE] suggested the striking out of the word "legal."

Mr. OVERMAN. If you just say "residence," what do you mean—"legal residence" or "official residence"?

Mr. WHITE. That means his actual residence.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the very thing the department asked me to correct in this proposed law, because whenever a man was designated to go to Chicago for a month they said under the law he could not get his subsistence there, although he was a thousand miles from home. That is what the comptroller ruled, and we are trying to correct that defect in the law.

Mr. HUGHES. Take the case of a man who is appointed to one of these places who is now actually residing in the District of Columbia. He has his legal residence in the State of Georgia, but he is working here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is not a supposable case.

Mr. HUGHES. This is where his home is. Is that possible under the law? I do not know.

Mr. SMOOT. The trouble with the Senator is that the man will not be working in the District of Columbia. I want to say to the Senator that these internal-revenue inspectors and also the agents under the provisions of this amendment are on the road nearly all the time. It may be that during the holidays, under a leave of absence, they may come home for a week or so; but that is all.

Mr. HUGHES. It must be true, however, that under the law, as it appears to me, there must be a time when these gentlemen are at home and not entitled to this compensation. Otherwise you might as well pay it to them all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. They are generally home during their leaves of absence.

Mr. HUGHES. In that case would it not give a man who is in the peculiar position of actually residing in the District of Columbia and working in the internal-revenue district of which the District is a part an advantage over another man because of the fact that he has a legal residence which he never visits under any circumstances, so that he is always away from his legal residence and always entitled to receive this additional compensation or per diem?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see how that could be so, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not imagine it.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not imagine a case of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from New Hampshire desire to address the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. I merely desire to make an observation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to remark, Mr. President, that Senators need not worry about these men being residents of the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia has no Senators and no Representatives in the other body, and these are political offices for Senators and Representatives from the States to take care of; and they have taken care of them outside of the civil-service law, a fact which I regret.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that the people who are living here make just about as many calls on Senators as any other persons can do upon the idea that they have a legal residence in some State. So that it really does not affect the situation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Some of them do, undoubtedly; they make demands; but they do not exhibit much reciprocity so far as the interests of their States are concerned at election time.

Mr. WHITE. I do not know about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am addressing myself to another point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor and declines to yield further.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that the objection just suggested by the Senator from Alabama will be considered, for I think there is very much weight in his suggestion respecting the construction of the committee amendment. However, I do not attack the amendment upon that ground. I was very much opposed to the provision in the income-tax law of 1913. I thought then and I think now that it represented an effort to overcrowd the Treasury Department with the political friends of the administration, and I regretted very much to see the invasion then made upon the civil service. I feel that it is my duty to do what little I can to render the places filled in that manner as unattractive as possible.

The income-tax provision of the tariff act of 1913 was rather a remarkable performance in this respect. Among other things, it said:

> The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to appoint and pay from this appropriation all necessary officers, agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, messengers, and janitors and to rent such quarters—

And so forth.

Without any limitation whatsoever; and I assume there is no limitation in the law at this time. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue can appoint not only whomsoever he pleases but as many as he pleases; and Congress has not attempted, save by a bulk appropriation, to restrict his liberty or power in that regard.

Then the act further provided:

> That for a period of two years from and after the passage of this act the force of agents, deputy collectors, inspectors, and other employees, not including the clerical force below the grade of chief of division employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the city of Washington, D. C., authorized by this section of this act, shall be appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury to insure faithful and competent service

I do not believe that employees so appointed should receive the compensation that is here provided, and this amendment of the committee relates only to the employees appointed under the act of 1913, part of which I have just read. For these reasons I move to strike out, in line 9, the numeral "7" and insert "5."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee on page 198, in line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$7" and insert "$5."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move to strike out, in line 14, page 198, the numeral "5" and insert "4."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 198, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$5" and insert "$4."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 198.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I inquire if the committee amendments have now been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have been disposed of, so far as they are printed in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will excuse me a moment, I desire to offer two amendments, neither one of which perhaps can be called a committee amendment, but I feel that the amendment which I now send to the desk ought to be presented practically as a committee amendment. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment, and then I will briefly explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 100, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For the protection of lands involved in Oregon & California Railroad forfeiture suit: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, with the cooperation of the Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, as in his judgment may be most advisable, to establish and maintain a patrol to prevent trespass and to guard against and check fires upon the lands involved in the case of the United States against Oregon & California Railroad Co. et al., suit No. 3340, in the district court for the district of Oregon, now pending on appeal in the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, $25,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the communication from the department to the Committee on Appropriations in regard to this matter was only received to-day, so that the committee has had no opportunity to consider the amendment.

It seems that the Government brought suit to forfeit some land in the State of Oregon which had been granted to a railroad corporation, and the district court decided the suit in favor of the Government. It not only decided that the lands belonged to the Government, having been forfeited to the Government by the railroad company, but that the railroad company had no longer any right to enter upon those lands or interfere with them in any way whatever. So that now there are over 2,000,000 acres of land—decided by the district court to be the land of the United States—which are entirely without protection. The department therefore recommends that $25,000 be appropriated to enable them to protect those lands from depredation and fire. It seems to me to be a matter of urgent importance. It was so represented by the department, and I ask the Senate to adopt the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. In the meantime I understand the suit has been carried to the higher court.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is now pending on appeal, but the railroad company have abandoned the lands, which are without protection. More than half of the acreage is fine timberland, which is subject to destruction by fire and is at present without any protection whatever. I think the Government can well afford to appropriate the small sum of $25,000 for the protection of this land pending this litigation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is one other small amendment which I will present. It is in no sense a committee amendment. I send it to the Secretary's desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 166, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Exposition to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of the negro and his achievements since emancipation: For expenses of an exposition to be held at or near Richmond, Va., in the year 1915, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of the negro and to show the progress, advancement, and achievements of the negro race in education and in the industrial work of the country, $55,000: Provided, That the expenses thereunder shall be paid by the Negro Historical and Industrial Association of Richmond, Va., under the direction and supervision of the governor of the State of Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I simply want to submit this matter to the sense of justice and the generosity of the Senate. It comes in a somewhat irregular way, but it has appealed to me very strongly. I live in the South, and have lived among the negro population all my days. I know them and I know their weaknesses and their strong points. They have many strong points, and they have accomplished a great deal. They have been struggling against the most difficult circumstances; and I think that they have made a progress that is almost astounding, considering the opportunities which they have had. They wish to celebrate their achievements during the 50 years of their freedom.

The Negro Historical and Industrial Association appeal to the Senate to give them this appropriation. The governor of Virginia writes me a most urgent letter appealing to me to ask the Senate to give this $55,000 to the negro population for the purpose of holding an exposition to celebrate their emancipation, their achievements, and the progress they have made in education, in industrial enterprise, and in the work of the world in all respects. I think it is a matter that ought to appeal to the more fortunate and stronger race. It appeals to me as a Virginian to hold out a helping hand to these people who have been struggling against disadvantages, and who have made immense forward strides which commend them to the kindliness of the white race. I sincerely hope that the Senate will, in its generosity toward these people, donate the small sum of $55,000 to aid them in the plans they have made for holding this exposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Virginia if he would not be willing to strike out the words "in the South," where the amendment refers to "the progress, advancement, and achievements of the negro race in the South."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am willing to do that if it is desired; but, as I understand, the exposition is really to be in celebration of the achievements of the negroes of the South. I inserted those words with a purpose. The South is the place where the struggle has been made, where the large negro population is found, and where it is supposed they have had fewer advantages than in the North, with its much more scattered population of negroes. I want the celebration to show to the world what the negro has done in the Southern States, in Virginia particularly, for it will not be patronized very largely, I am afraid, outside of Virginia.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. It is intended really, as I understand, for the benefit of the ex-slaves?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Fifty years have elapsed since the close of the war, and of course there are not many ex-slaves.

Mr. WHITE. Well, the descendants of the slaves—to show what they have done?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes. As I understand, the exposition is designed to show the advance made in the southern States, where the negro has made his struggle. I do not hesitate to say that he has accomplished wonderful results, of which his race may be proud and of which the white people ought to be proud. The white people of the South are as anxious to see the negro advance in all legitimate lines as are the people of the North or the people of any country anywhere.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will not offer an amendment to the amendment, and yet it occurs to me that there are a great many of these people who have gone from the South to the North, where they have also achieved great results, and for that reason I thought it might not be well to confine it to any particular section of the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In view of the Senator's suggestion, while I do not think it is material, for, as I understand, the proposed exposition is to exemplify the progress of the negro in the South rather than any general progress, I will ask that the words "in the South" be eliminated from the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator; I think it is desirable that that should be done.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, I should like to express my appreciation of his acceding to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire. I beg to inform the Senator that I am in receipt of a communication from Gov. Dunne, of the State of Illinois, asking that I likewise submit to this honorable body the advisability of granting this appropriation. I myself wish to speak for those particular negroes of the State of Illinois who are anxious to have a celebration of the events referred to by the Senator from Virginia, and an exposition to show what advantages they have accrued to themselves as the result of their industrious efforts. They would like to celebrate at Springfield, the home of Abraham Lincoln; and if there is anything in the amendment that would limit the appropriation so that they can not celebrate at Springfield, Ill., I should like to have it eliminated, in order that they may have an opportunity to celebrate as they desire.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It has been eliminated, so that it will be open for all.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the action of the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will say that I have a letter from a colored lawyer in the city of Richmond, a man of character and intellectual force, which I should like to have printed in the RECORD, but which I will not ask to have read. It is an excellent letter, and he presents the case in a most respectful and in a most intelligent way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE NEGRO HISTORICAL AND INDUSTRIAL ASSOCIATION,
Richmond, Va., July 7, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Again referring to the communication of the Negro Historical and Industrial Association, bearing date on the 6th day of April last, in which they submitted that the said association was formed under the laws of Virginia for the purpose of holding an exposition and celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the achievements of the negro since his emancipation, said exposition to be held near the city of Richmond.

Since our last communication the association has purchased 100 acres of land at Fort Lee, on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, 5 miles below this city, for the purposes indicated. We have received the encouragement of the white people throughout the city, including the governor and others high in authority. We wrote asking if you would give us an appropriation of $55,000 from the Government, to be expended by the governor of Virginia upon such objects as may be agreed upon by him and our said association. The righteousness of our cause had stimulated us to feel the assurance that we would receive the appropriation through your good office by presenting our petition, as we did on the 6th day of April last, and had hoped that you would see your way clear to insert the item in the sundry civil bill reported to the Senate yesterday, or some other bill most appropriate for such an appropriation, or through such other mode as to you may have seemed best. Now, as the Congress seems to be nearing the end of its present session and our anxiety being so great to secure aid from the Government, if we would not appear too persistent we would respectfully ask whether it is possible to grant our petition at this sitting of Congress. If we appear too persistent, we beg that you charge it to the head and not to the heart; and if we appear annoying, we ask that you will pardon us, as there is no one else for us to appeal to. Then, again, we are anxious for the appropriation and anxious for you to become interested in our cause, as we have no representative other than yourself, and hope you will grant our prayer, as it is seldom that the colored man asks for anything at the hands of the Government. We do not ask for political office, neither do we expect to receive any. We content ourselves by simply asking for an appropriation to help us make an exhibition to show to the world our capacity as producers and evidence of our thrift and progress, that the world may better understand the true worth of the southern negro and that our race is not predominated by the shiftless element. Such an exposition as we propose to have will show to our white friends the solution of the negro problem and will stimulate and encourage the shiftless negro to imitate those of the race who are making progress. After the exposition we propose to maintain an experimental farm to teach the young negroes how to become good farmers, as the land we own is eminently suited for such purpose, and to maintain a permanent exhibit of the negro's industrial achievements and to maintain an industrial school, something similar to the one conducted by Booker T. Washington at Tuskegee, Ala.

Another reason why we ask that you look after our interest is because 10 days after we applied to you for the appropriation a bill was introduced, on the 16th day of April, in the House of Representatives by Mr. MADDEN, of Illinois, bearing No. 15733, a copy of which is here inclosed, asking for the appropriation of $150,000 to aid the colored people of Illinois in holding an exposition at the city of Chicago for the same purpose that our association is endeavoring to carry out. While we have nothing to say against the colored people of Illinois, we must call attention to the fact, which is admitted by them in their circular here inclosed, that nearly all the progress that has been made by the negro since the war has been made in the South. Then why should we be put to the expense of hauling our products to Chicago, when we can exhibit the same in the South, at Richmond Va.? In other words, why should "the mountain be carried to the potato hill instead of the potato hill being brought to the mountain"? The fact that the colored men played such a conspicuous part in politics in Illinois, perhaps their representatives will press their claim, and should they get their appropriation, I am afraid it will defeat us entirely. Therefore you will see why we are so persistent and urgent upon you to help us secure our appropriation. It is evident that these people never thought of asking for a Government appropriation until after we had made such application. Although we asked for nearly two-thirds less than what they asked for, we feel that we can make a creditable exhibit with that amount, as shown by our plans here inclosed.

We beg that you pardon us for such a lengthy letter, and hope it will serve the purpose for which it is written.

Hoping a favorable reply, I am,

Very respectfully, GILES B. JACKSON.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia if the State of Virginia is contributing anything to this celebration?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think not. I think no doubt there will be private contributions, but the State of Virginia has not taken the matter up.

Mr. VARDAMAN. When is the celebration to take place?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is to take place in 1915, but the exact date is not mentioned in the papers I have received.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand it is proposed to make it a national affair rather than a southern affair.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is proposed to make it an affair for the colored race.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am not going to fight the amendment, because I do not think it will do any good; but I wish to say, Mr. President, that I think the conclusion which logically will be drawn from what the Senator from Virginia has said with reference to the negro's progress in the South and his fight against the odds against him there, to my mind, is not altogether correct. Really the white man has done more for the negro than the negro has done for himself. As a matter of fact, there is no race of people on earth who have received as much help from others as the negroes of the South have received from the white people of the South. They have always been helped; the white people have assisted them in every possible way, except to make citizens or voters of them, and, of course, that ought not to be done and, indeed, will never be done. I am perfectly willing to help develop the negro along certain lines. I wish him well; but I do not think any good will result from this appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I speak for the Virginia negro only. He has made wonderful strides in morality, in education, and in industry, and I feel like holding out a helping hand to him. I ask the Senate to make this appropriation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to concur in what the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has said; but I want to speak for the negroes of the South; not of Virginia alone. I do not know much about the negroes in other sections of the country. I suppose they have done well. If they sprang from southern negroes, they ought to have done well anywhere.

These people have accomplished more than we had any right to expect they would have accomplished. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is right when he says they have not been badly treated in the South. They have been treated well; and they have treated the southern people well. It has not been their treatment, Mr. President, that has burdened them; but it was a condition, and that condition was slavery. They have emerged from that condition and have made wonderful strides in progress. If they had not been interfered with after they were emancipated in 1865, if Mr. Lincoln could but have lived, there never would have been any strife between the southern white man and the southern negro; they would have continued to live together in peace, as they had done for generations past. We had shown our friendship for each other for more than a century. They were not brought there by us; they were laid at our door by others; they were brought to us as savages. We lifted them through slavery from savagery to civilization and manhood.

He has been our burden in the past; he was our burden when he was a slave; and yet, Mr. President, he contributed wonderfully to our race. We can point to as fine a race of white men as ever lived from the South, and those men received from the toil and sacrifice of the negroes the means with which they educated and accomplished. We are grateful to him for what he has done, and we are willing to show our gratitude by way of urging this appropriation for their benefit and to show the world what they have accomplished since acquiring freedom.

But, Mr. President, we are more truly grateful to them for what they did for us during the struggle in which their freedom was the issue than for what they did for us in other times. When all the colored man had to do to obtain his freedom was to cross the line and take up arms against our section, he stood by our side and fought our battles with us. He camped with us at night; he marched with us by day; he held our horses and guarded our tents while we stood in battle line and met death by thousands. He supplied our every want; he guarded our homes and protected our women and children; he was indeed our friend. He showed his friendship and his loyalty as no other race on earth had ever done by standing by us in the hours of our trouble.

The black men of the South carried their dead masters back to their wives; the sons who had fallen in battle back to their mothers' arms. They bore our sick and the wounded to them; and when they came bearing in their hands these precious burdens, they so endeared themselves to us that it has never been forgotten.

I want to say, Mr. President, in this presence, that nothing I have done, no appropriation for which I have voted, gives me more pleasure than does this one. To enable the black man of the South to show what he has achieved under the tutelage of the southern white man while he was a slave, and with his cooperation since his freedom, and by his own untiring efforts since he has had placed upon him the responsibilities of manhood, affords me genuine pleasure. Unfortunately for him and for the country he had political responsibilities thrust upon him which he was unable to carry. In this way he was made to compete in an unequal struggle with the white man, and this caused the only estrangement between the races in the South. It was a mistake; it should not have been made. Mr. President, I will with much pleasure vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill at page 113 by striking out lines 12 to 17, inclusive. The matter proposed to be stricken out is as follows:

Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.: Authority is granted the Secretary of the Interior to expend the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from the revenues, Hot Springs Reservation, for labor and material required in the remodeling of the Government free bathhouse on the Hot Springs Reservation and in expenses incident thereto.

If the drainage system that we have provided for to-day is installed there, it will be a waste of public money to improve the old bathhouse. It will necessitate the construction of a new one, which may be the subject of consideration at a later date. It is useless to expend this money at this time. I move to strike out that item.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no objection to that matter being stricken out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of additional ground at the Frankford Arsenal, $135,000.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say that this appropriation has been requested by the Secretary of War. I believe the clerk of the Appropriations Committee has a letter from the Secretary, received since the bill was reported. It is for the purpose of acquiring a tract of land, the only land available, for the extension of Frankford Arsenal.

In this arsenal there is an immense amount of work done. The output of the arsenal amounts to about $3,000,000 a year. It has 2,000 employees. With the exception of a small space for light and air in the center of a 63-acre tract, it is all occupied by buildings; and if there is any extension of the arsenal at all it must be by the acquisition of this land.

The land belongs to an estate of which the University of Pennsylvania is the residuary legatee, and while it is valued at a higher price than the appropriation calls for, I have no doubt, as it is yielding no income now, that the Government will be able to acquire it at that price.

I understand that the chairman of the committee is willing to accept this amendment, and I hope the acting chairman will do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken about agreeing to accept it. The committee looked into it, and it was not estimated for, and therefore the committee concluded——

Mr. OLIVER. I beg pardon; it was estimated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not this year.

Mr. OLIVER. It is estimated for in a letter which is in the possession of the clerk of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Since our meeting?

Mr. OLIVER. Since the meeting; yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not know that. It has been estimated for heretofore, and we do not propose to make any captious objection to it, but leave it to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, and with it I send up two letters from the Interior Department in support thereof, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, June 27, 1914.

Hon. H. L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: For your information in connection with the sundry civil bill, now pending before the Senate, I beg to inclose herewith two letters this date sent by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior to the Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, relative to two items in the sundry civil bill affecting the land service, namely, the appropriation for the support of the field service of the General Land Office and the appropriation for contingent expenses of local land offices.

These letters are self-explanatory, and I think fully explain the needs of the service with respect to these particular branches of the work of this bureau.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Permit me to call the attention of your committee to the item "Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands," etc., in the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, under which the field service force of the General Land Office is maintained.

In the estimates submitted request was made for the sum of $500,000, the same as for the present fiscal year, but as passed by the House of Representatives this item is reduced to $475,000 (H. R. 17041, p. 94).

I desire to urge upon you the importance and necessity of the retention of the appropriation of $500,000 for this work. In support of such request I beg leave to submit for your consideration some statistics indicating the value and importance of this work.

WORK ACCOMPLISHED.

During the year, June 1, 1913, to May 31, 1914, through cooperation with the Department of Justice, 162 civil suits were won, restoring 70,649 acres to the public domain and recovering $228,050. These suits include suits to cancel patent, timber-trespass suits, suits to abate unlawful inclosures, and suits to declare forfeiture of rights of way; 25 convictions were secured in criminal cases, resulting in 4 prison sentences and fines amounting to $2,400; 89 indictments were returned for violations of the public-land laws.

All of these cases, both civil and criminal, were brought as a result of investigations by the field force of the General Land Office.

Through direct action of the General Land Office 1,882 unpatented entries were canceled, restoring approximately 301,120 acres to the public domain; 150,417 acres were restored to the public domain from unlawful inclosures without suit; $43,713.05 was received through timber-trespass settlements and collected on sales of timber under permits; 22,394 cases were investigated in the field; 536 hearings to determine the validity of entries were held; 105 suits were recommended to the Department of Justice for the recovery of 33,531 acres of land and $115,340.

WORK PENDING.

In the Department of Justice on June 1, 1914, there were pending 183 trespass suits to recover $1,072,225; 510 suits to vacate patents to 146,400 acres; 39 unlawful-inclosure suits to restore 404,846 acres to the public domain; 30 suits to declare judicial forfeiture of rights of way; 6 miscellaneous suits; and 290 criminal cases.

In the General Land Office 19,168 cases pending for investigation in the field; 967 cases pending for hearing; about 1,300,000 acres involved in Carey Act lists to be examined in the field; 250,000 acres included in Indian allotments which will require field investigations; about 75,000 acres of State selections to be examined in the field.

These statistics differ in some instances from those presented to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, for the reason that the statistics presented to him cover the period from December 1, 1912, to November 30, 1913, while this statement covers the year June 1, 1913, to May 31, 1914.

The foregoing indicates the value of the Field Service work and the necessity for the appropriation asked.

In this connection I desire to refer to several important matters which deserve special consideration:

1. The investigation in the oil fields of California.

This is one of the large problems confronting the Field Service. The need for a speedy determination of the field work within the withdrawn area, about 1,500,000 acres, is imperative to protect the interests of the Government and to adjust promptly the rights of claimants. The office has been hampered in the investigation by a lack of sufficient force to put in the withdrawn area to make investigations to determine the rights of the applicants or locators and to clear away those that are invalid. The Navy Department is urging completion of the investigations in the naval petroleum reserves.

2. The investigation of irrigation companies which supply desert-land entries with water is increasing, and as the adjudication of the desert-land cases is dependent upon the finding of the office as to the resources and reliability of the company and the feasibility of its proposed irrigation system, it is essential that these investigations should be thorough and prompt.

3. The act of March 3, 1913, providing for the sale of fire-killed or damaged timber, has placed a large amount of additional work on the Field Service.

4. The work of cooperating with the Department of Justice in the trial of the civil and criminal cases which are prosecuted by that department on the recommendation of the Interior Department as a result of investigations made by the Field Service. Some of these cases are far-reaching in importance and will require a considerable portion of the time of a number of the special agents.

5. The work in Alaska.

The legislation recently enacted providing for the construction of a railway and the opening of the resources of Alaska will undoubtedly result in an influx of settlers and others seeking to acquire title to public lands in that Territory.

During the past fiscal year, working under an appropriation of $500,000, the commissioner has found it necessary to exercise rigid economy in order that the force may be maintained intact during the entire year. If the present 1914 appropriation is not maintained, a corresponding reduction in the field force and work accomplished will necessarily result.

Considering the volume of this work and its importance, both to the Government and the settlers and other public-land claimants, I most respectfully solicit the serious consideration of your committee as to the advisability of the reduction proposed by the House bill.

Very respectfully,

——— ———,
Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 27, 1914.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The estimates of appropriations required for the General Land Office service for the fiscal year 1915 included $350,000 for contingent expenses of land offices. The sundry civil act of June 23, 1913, provided $320,000 for that service for the fiscal year 1914, which was supplemented by an additional appropriation of $20,000 in the urgent deficiency act, making $340,000 for the fiscal year about to close.

For your information I submit a statement of the expenditures authorized during the fiscal year in land offices, as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices, 1914.

Appropriation	$340,000.00
Allotments:
For registration of letters	11,500.00
For drayage	500.00
For freight, advertising, and telegrams	1,196.24
For direct settlements (authorized to date), incidentals	3,209.62
For rent of offices	40,301.69
For incidentals (authorized to date)	3,929.82
For clerical services	279,059.30
For expenses of detailed clerks	216.35
Balance available for authorization	86.98
	340,000.00

It will be seen that there remains a balance of $86.98 available for further authorization before July 1, but in order to confine expenditures within the appropriation this office has been compelled to deny numerous requisitions for essential needs of the service in the matter of clerical assistance, equipment, etc., which should, if the appropriation permitted, have been provided. Telephone service, adding machines, and other necessities can not be allowed to these offices because of insufficient appropriation.

I observe from the proceedings in Congress, as shown in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that the estimate of $350,000 has been reduced by the House of Representatives to $330,000 for the incoming fiscal year in the sundry civil bill, now pending in the Senate, which appropriation, if enacted into law, will be inadequate to the needs of the service. On July 1 there will be 234 clerks employed in district land offices whose salaries will aggregate $279,362, being an average of approximately $1,194 per clerk. This will leave but $50,638—for the payment of office rent, $38,829.84; registration of letters, $11,500; drayage, freight on supplies, telegraphing, and advertising, $2,000; and equipment, $10,000, aggregating $62,329.84. This will not only prevent the promotion of clerks, but will also require a reduction of the clerical force to the extent of $11,691.84, unless the appropriation is increased to the amount estimated—$350,000. This latter amount would permit of the payment of the above-estimated expenditures, the promotion of deserving clerks in amounts not exceeding $5 per month, and leave a small margin for emergencies.

In view of the facts above stated, the consideration of your committee is invited to the advisability of increasing the appropriation to the amount estimated—$350,000.

Very respectfully, ———,
Acting Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 99, in line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$475,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this was estimated for. I have spoken to the chairman and practically all the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and there is no opposition to it, and I hope it will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 198, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

That for the relief of the sufferers from the recent conflagration in Salem, Mass., there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That all expenditures under this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the words "joint resolution," I think, ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HOLLIS. This is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; but I noticed the words "joint resolution" as the amendment was read. That, I think, ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is correct; it ought to be "under this provision" instead of "under this joint resolution."

Mr. President, the necessity for this appropriation for the relief of the destitute and suffering at Salem was brought to my attention during the temporary absence of the Senators from Massachusetts, and in order to have it in order I offered the amendment yesterday to be printed and lie on the table.

The matter was called to the attention of the Senate first by the President of the United States in the following communication:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The governor of Massachusetts has sent me the following telegram: "The Salem relief fund is increasing slowly. The expense of rehabilitation will be enormous, as 3,000 families are homeless and without work. If the National Government could appropriate $200,000, it would assist greatly. I am informed that the action of the National Government at the time of the San Francisco disaster furnished a precedent. Can anything in the way of substantial contribution from the National Government be obtained?"

In view of the great number of homeless and destitute in Salem I very earnestly urge the immediate appropriation by the Congress of $200,000, as requested by the governor, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 8, 1914.

This amendment was offered at the request of the Massachusetts delegation in the House of Representatives. I am very glad, indeed, to offer the amendment, and to state that I believe it will be accepted by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in the absence of the two Senators from Massachusetts, and after a conference with the Massachusetts delegation in the other House, and in view of the message from the President of the United States in respect to this matter, this amendment is presented to the Senate.

I realize that there may be objections, there may be arguments made, as to why an appropriation of this sort ought not to be made; but in the meantime about 17,000 people are in a state of actual suffering. I think in the presence of such an appalling disaster as this fire, which has destroyed a large part of the city of Salem, and in the presence of the actual suffering of 3,000 homeless and houseless families, about 17,000 souls in all, we can afford to ride over and jump over any impediments that in theory may exist, and afford some relief to this mass of suffering humanity in one of the States of this Union.

I think the humanitarian spirit which prevails in the Senate surely can reach out to the actual suffering of 17,000 people. We had manifestations of that broad humanitarian spirit on yesterday, when an appropriation of perhaps questionable character was made; but if it was questionable it was an error, if an error at all, in the interest of humanity, and for the amelioration of the human race. I think this is a case more pointed, more acute, and more necessary than that; and I sincerely hope the Congress of the United States will not deny the small sum of $200,000 for the relief of these sufferers.

I have been asked, "Why does not the State of Massachusetts come to the rescue?" The answer made to me has been that there is a provision in the constitution of Massachusetts that forbids it. I have not had time to inquire into that, and for my part I do not desire to inquire into it. If anybody else is at fault, it is no excuse for us. I want to see these people relieved. I want to see this suffering stopped. I want to see the Congress of the United States show a generosity toward these 17,000 suffering people; and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOLLIS obtained the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the statistics of this great disaster are worthy of being put into the RECORD.

Mr. HOLLIS. I was about to comment on those. I think I have all of them here, and if my colleague will pardon me I will state them briefly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I will not undertake to do it. I will only say that I sat on the porch of a friend's house 40 miles from the city of Salem and saw evidences of that great fire, lasting several hours, and it was a great disaster. I feel sure Congress will be glad to appropriate this small amount; and I hope my colleague will put in the RECORD precisely the data relating to it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I shall be very glad to do so, Mr. President.

The population of Salem at present is about 45,000.

The families who were rendered homeless by this fire number 3,000.

The persons rendered destitute or homeless on account of the fire are 17,000. That is more than a third, and nearly one-half, of the entire population.

The large industries destroyed are the following:

The Naumkeag Cotton Mills, with a capacity of 2,500 hands; 8 shoe factories; 8 leather factories; 9 shoe stock and finding factories; 6 machine shops; and 3 foundries.

The amount needed by the relief committee is stated to be $1,700,000.

The subscriptions to date are about $380,000.

The special State appropriation for poor relief in Salem is $100,000.

The militia appropriation for Salem is $25,000.

The State tax assumed by the Commonwealth is $25,000.

The assignment of State property from other institutions is $25,000.

The special loan authorized for Salem is $700,000.

The State appropriation probably will be increased.

The total loss of the fire, which is stated to be probably underestimated, is $10,000,000.

The men will be out of work until the industries are rebuilt. The Naumkeag Mills expect to reopen in January.

Congress gave to San Francisco, in a similar plight, $2,500,000. This was practically turned over to the Red Cross Society for expenditure. Rations were furnished at San Francisco to persons out of work for several months.

I feel, speaking for a neighboring State, and one that is closely in touch with Massachusetts in every way, that this comparatively small appropriation of $200,000 ought to be granted without raising any technical points which might be raised, and without debate.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to say just a word, having been absent from the Senate when this matter came up, to thank the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Virginia for their good offices in bringing this matter before the Senate. The facts which they have stated relating to the number of people who are homeless and who have lost practically their all are quite true. I have personally investigated them. The need is for immediate assistance in the way of clothing and food for those people.

The citizens of Massachusetts have contributed a considerable amount, about $400,000, and the State has made a small appropriation, which, with this $200,000, will be sufficient, I think, to provide for those people who are out of employment until they have an opportunity to readjust their welfare lines and get employment in other places.

I think there are ample precedents for this action, not only in the case of San Francisco, which has been cited, but in cases of distress due to floods and other calamities.

I hope the Senate will see fit to act unanimously in favor of this amendment.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the Government of the United States conducting its affairs economically. I am opposed to a waste of money in any manner or form, such as, I think, has been made in the appropriation for the exposition at San Francisco and the one that was made a moment ago to the negro celebration at Richmond, Va.; but I do not think a dollar can be invested more profitably than the dollar invested in alleviating the sufferings of humanity. The greatness of this country does not consist of its banks and railroads and enterprises of that character, but rather in the moral qualities and intellectual acquirements of the men and women who compose its citizenship. Men and women are the Nation's greatest assets.

The people of Salem, Mass., are in distress. This is a rich government, and while a few years ago I dare say I should have opposed this appropriation upon constitutional grounds, yet we have a precedent for it. We have drifted away from the moorings of the fathers in matters of constitutional construction, and I am willing to resolve the doubt in favor of the needy people of that stricken city. I shall be willing to vote not only for $200,000 but for $400,000, if it may be necessary, to meet their immediate wants. I do not believe you can use the money in the Treasury for a better purpose, and I believe the people who pay the taxes and bear the burdens of government will approve this appropriation.

Mr. President, service to man is the most acceptable service to God, and he who paints the pallid cheek of care with the rose of health, who causes to blossom in the garden of the heart made desolate by adversity the flower of hope, who fills the soul with cheer, stimulates courage, and helps the weak and faltering to try again—that man has lived and done the highest purposes of life. I hope this measure may receive the votes of every Senator in this Chamber.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should be doing violence to my own feelings if I did not express the hope that this appropriation will be voted without any hesitancy whatever.

A little more than 15 months ago my own great State, as well as the neighboring State of Indiana, suffered a very great disaster. I was through those flooded districts. I know what the people suffered there, and I can conceive the state of affairs in the city of Salem to-day. It was with extreme regret that I learned the other day that there was any hesitancy whatsoever at the other end of the Capitol in granting this appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is unanimously agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I move to strike from the bill the portion beginning at line 21, on page 54, and ending with line 17, page 55, and to insert in lieu thereof the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, commencing with line 21, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 17, on page 55, and in lieu thereof to insert:

It shall be the duty of every common carrier by railroad whose property is being valued under the act of March 1, 1913, to transport the engineers, field parties, and other employees of the United States who are actually engaged in making surveys and other examination of the physical property of said carrier necessary to execute said act from point to point on said railroad as may be reasonably required by them in the actual discharge of their duties; and also to move from point to point and store at such points as may be reasonably required the cars of the United States which are being used to house and maintain said employees; and also to carry the supplies necessary to maintain said employees and the other property of the United States actually used on said railroad in said work of valuation. The service above required shall be regarded as a special service and shall be rendered under such forms and regulations and for such reasonable compensation as may be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and as will insure an accurate record and account of the service rendered by the railroad; and such evidence of transportation, bills of lading, etc., shall be furnished to the commission as may from time to time be required by the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to say that I am perfectly satisfied to accept the Senator's amendment just as he has offered it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well, then, Mr. President.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I have no objection to the chairman of the committee accepting the amendment, but I had hoped to hear from the Senator from Iowa as to the necessity for this provision. Without the provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall decide what will be a reasonable compensation for the service rendered, would not that be the situation if no additional legislation were enacted?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. The House bill provided that it should be lawful for the carriers to furnish this service without compensation; that is, free service; that is, to give all these employees of the Government free transportation, to transport all the supplies of the Government without charge, and to house and maintain without charge the employees of the Government while they were in the performance of their duty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, and I am opposed to that as much as the Senator is.

Mr. CUMMINS. I regarded that as a very vicious proposal. I think it strikes a blow at the fundamental principle which precedes fair and reasonable and effective railroad regulation.

The amendment that I have offered—and I am stating this not simply because the Senator from Connecticut has asked it—follows the general language of the bill, but instead of providing for free service it provides for reasonable compensation, to be fixed by the commission. The reason for that is that this is a special service, as is there recited. A corps of engineers go upon a railroad for the purpose of making an inventory of its physical property and valuing it. They must be carried from point to point at unusual times and under unusual circumstances. They must be permitted to store their cars upon the side tracks at stations in a way not at all usual in the ordinary business of a common carrier. The railroad companies can not cover this service by filing tariffs. It is so exceptional in its character that there must be an especial regulation with regard to it. My amendment provides as it does simply in order to render it unnecessary that the railroads shall file tariffs, as the law requires for other service, covering this particular work which they are to do in cooperation with the employees of the United States.

I know of no other way in which the compensation can be fixed save through the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I have been informed by the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission that the railroad companies offered to render this service without compensation. I have no doubt that the Interstate Commerce Commission will fix a reasonable compensation for it that will do entire justice to the railroads, nor will it subject the work itself to those criticisms which might otherwise be made upon it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator entirely. I think it would be exceedingly bad policy for the Government, which is conducting a proceeding somewhat of an adverse nature possibly to the railroads, to compel the railroads to pay the expenses of it or to do anything in the nature of a favor to the Government. My sole inquiry was, or intended to be—at least, my thought was this: Suppose the House provision was simply stricken out and nothing offered in lieu of it, would not the railroads perform the service without filing the tariff the Senator has alluded to?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, of course, the Senator has given a good reason.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the railroad companies could not charge anything whatsoever for the service without covering it by a tariff regularly filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. On page 166, just before the Macdonough memorial amendment, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment heretofore agreed to, in line 11, page 116, insert the following:

For collecting and maintaining an adequate Alaskan exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, $50,000, to be expended for said purpose by and under the direction of the Federal exhibit board having charge of the Government exhibit at said exposition under the provisions of the law heretofore enacted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In this connection I wish to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 24, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
United States Senate.

SIR: In response to the request noted upon a copy of an amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. JONES to the bill making appropriations for sundry civil expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, in relation to an appropriation for an Alaskan exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, I would say:

There is no adequate provision for an exhibit of Alaska at this exposition. The whole amount appropriated for the Government exhibit board is $500,000, and this amount must provide for the executive departments, the Territories, and various commissions named for consultation. The amount which may be used from this fund for Alaska could not exceed a few thousand dollars at most.

It seems to be peculiarly desirable that Alaska be well represented at the exposition, because of the relation of that territory to the cities of the Pacific coast, and because of the interest in Alaska which has developed on account of the recent provision for railroads.

Congressional appropriations were made for exhibits of Alaska at previous expositions as follows:

Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis, Mo., 1904 (32 Stats., 1108), $50,000.

Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition, Portland, Oreg., 1905 ((33 Stats., 177), $25,000.

(The building for this exhibit was provided from the appropriation of $250,000 for Government buildings at said exposition.)

Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, Seattle, Wash., 1909 (public act, No. 141, approved May 27, 1908), $100,000.

(The building for this exhibit was provided from the appropriation of $250,000 for Government buildings at said exposition.)

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Mr. BRADY. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 100, after line 20, insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make field experimental demonstrations for the purpose of utilizing the by-products of the several species of trees grown in the United States and of the stumps and roots on logged-off land, and to ascertain and investigate methods of processing and treating the several species of wood and of such stumps and roots, and determining the merchantable value thereof, $15,000.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, this amendment was offered to the Agricultural appropriation bill. It was estimated by the Department of Agriculture and approved by that department and approved by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It was voted favorably upon by the Senate, but was disagreed on in conference.

At the time the conference report was made I am quite sure the Senate would have been willing to have returned the report to the conference again on account of this amendment, but I did not desire to delay the bill. I said at the time I would depend upon the fair treatment of the Senate when the matter came up for consideration again.

This is a matter of much importance to the people of the West, and great good will result by the adoption of this amendment. Dean Shattuck, of the University of Idaho, and his assistants are now actually engaged in demonstrating what can be done with the by-products of our forests. They are securing results that are very satisfactory indeed, and if this amendment is adopted and the funds made available by the passage of this bill they will be able to make a showing that will be pleasing to every Member of this body.

I sincerely hope that the Senator having the bill in charge will not raise a point of order, and I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not going to make a point of order; but this proposition was settled by the Senate on the Agricultural appropriation bill, and it is not right to bring up the same question on this bill. The item went out in conference, and if put on this bill it will very likely be stricken out again in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEEKS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as an additional paragraph, after line 10, on page 135:

For changing existing lights and moving additional lights for the aid of navigation at the eastern and western entrances to the Cape Cod Canal, $50,000.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Cape Cod Canal, which has been under construction for three or four years, is nearing completion. About $7,000,000 have been spent in the construction of the canal by private capital. About $1,000,000 has been expended in deepening the entrance to the canal on the Buzzards Bay or western end of it. The section which is covered by this development is already lighted, but not suitably lighted for the purpose of supplying the lights for the entrance to the canal, either at the western or Buzzards Bay entrance or on the eastern or Barnstable Bay entrance.

This matter was taken up in March, and a bill passed the Senate, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], directing the Secretary of Commerce to provide suitable lights for this canal service. The amount estimated by the department is $50,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, this amendment, as far as I recollect, was not before the committee. I do not know why it was not presented to the committee, but, at any rate, I have looked into it very carefully. The Cape Cod Canal has been built by private parties at an expenditure of many millions of dollars. The lights as heretofore existing do not serve the purpose of the canal and the entrance to the canal. It is necessary to change the location and character of the lights; and I think it is eminently proper that the Government should provide the lights. The lights are to be on the open navigable waters of the United States; they are not to be on the private canal, but on the open navigable waters of the United States. I think the amendment should be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer which, if adopted, will bring money into the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, after line 11, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, as a reward, 10 per cent of any sum which may be recovered in the nature of penalties, fines, forfeitures, or otherwise to the person or persons who shall first furnish evidence to the Government of the violation of the antitrust or interstate-commerce laws, or of the commission of any frauds against the Government, resulting in the recovery of such penalties, fines, forfeitures, or recoveries.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make a point of order against the amendment. It is legislation, and I am opposed to the policy of penalties and espionage.

Mr. LANE. I call attention to the fact that there are items already in the bill of the same character.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We are dealing with this item now, and I make a point of order against it.

Mr. LANE. It calls for no expenditure of money; it will bring in hundreds of thousands of dollars. It will bring in millions of dollars. It will stop frauds that are being perpetrated upon the Government. It is a useful provision. It is not against the law. It is in line with items already incorporated in the bill and it is in conformity with other measures which have been passed by Congress. It will help furnish money to pay for the celebration already appropriated for in the bill and some other items of expenditure.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is regular legislation.

Mr. LANE. I am surprised that the distinguished Senator from Virginia should offer an objection to it. It is a good provision. It is a proper amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the point of order insisted on?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The point of order is insisted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order will have to be sustained.

Mr. LANE. On what ground?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the ground that it is general legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment on page 103, following line 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 103, after line 2, insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That not to exceed $25,000 of the above amount may be used to bring up the arrears of office work in Surveyor General's office upon returns of surveys filed therein prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. This does not increase the appropriation, I will say to the Senator from Virginia. It simply allows $25,000 of the appropriation to be used for this specific purpose, as recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. I move the following amendment: On page 121, beginning after the figures "$300,000." in line 11, I move to strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, line 11, after the numerals "$300,000," it is proposed to strike out the provisos down to and including line 21, in the following words:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act

done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the language of the provisos which this amendment proposes to strike out is identical with the language of the provisos contained in the sundry civil bill of last year. President Taft vetoed that bill on the ground that it was vicious class legislation, and that if standing alone and without being connected with any appropriation no one would doubt the unconstitutionality of these provisos exempting, as they do, labor and farmer organizations from prosecution. In other words, the provisos are a limitation upon the expenditures of the $300,000 appropriated so that none of it may be used for the prosecution of these organizations under the antitrust law.

I do not propose, Mr. President, to enter into any discussion at length of this proposed amendment or of these provisos. The question was very thoroughly discussed last year, but at the time of the discussion here, and at the time of the vote here, it had not been discussed by the then President of the United States. I simply wish to call attention to and to read the communication of the President at the time of his approval finally of the sundry civil bill. He said:

I have signed this bill because I can do so without, in fact, limiting the opportunity or the power of the Department of Justice to prosecute violations of the law by whomsoever committed.

If I could have separated from the rest of the bill the item which authorized the expenditure by the Department of Justice of a special sum of $300,000 for the prosecution of violations of the antitrust law, I would have vetoed that item, because it places upon the expenditure a limitation which is, in my opinion, unjustifiable in character and principle. But I could not separate it. I do not understand that the limitation was intended as either an amendment or an interpretation of the antitrust law, but merely as an expression of the opinion of the Congress—a very emphatic opinion, backed by an overwhelming majority of the House of Representatives and a large majority of the Senate, but not intended to touch anything but the expenditure of a single small additional fund.

I can assure the country—

Says the President—

that this item will neither limit nor in any way embarrass the actions of the Department of Justice. Other appropriations supply the department with abundant funds to enforce the law. The law will be interpreted in the determination of what the department should do, by independent and I hope impartial judgments as to the true and just meaning of substantive statutes of the United States.

This is about all I care to say, Mr. President. I was opposed to these provisos last year, and I am still opposed to them. I think, as the President says, they are unjustifiable in character and in principle. He declares, further, that this limitation upon the expenditure of this $300,000 will not in any way deter the Department of Justice from enforcing the law. If that be true, then why have it in this bill as an exemption or as a limitation upon the expenditure? The limitation serves no other purpose than to mislead. It seems to me, Mr. President, that it ought to be beneath the dignity of the Senate or the Congress of the United States to put into a bill a provision that is unjustifiable in character and in principle and which will serve only to mislead, and that manifestly if not confessedly so.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President, on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I had no desire to open up this discussion. I had not intended to say anything on the subject, and I do not know that it is worth while to say very much now. There is no Senator in this Chamber who is not familiar with the subject. The history of this amendment shows it was a product of peculiar conditions. It was first the effort of the lower House to legislate upon the proposition which it was impossible to get from the committee. There were those who believed that in another body there was an overwhelming sentiment in favor of the proposition that organizations of labor and laboring people in general were not and should not and never were intended to be within the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. We knew that the debate occurring upon that famous measure clearly showed to any student who has interest enough to read them that it was not in the mind of the authors of that law that men of this character should come within its provisions. Yet a quarter of a century afterwards the friends of the laboring people of this country and their friends were confronted with the proposition that practically the only people who had ever been effectually reached, effectually hindered and hampered and punished, were the laboring people as laboring people.

The provision rejected in the other House came to this body. The next time it came it was carried into the law and it is now a part of the law. I hope and believe that before this Congress adjourns the principle embodied in that limitation will be enacted into substantive law. I will say that if I did not believe that I would do what I could to limit not only this appropriation but every appropriation carried in this bill. If I could not do it by substantive law, I would limit every single appropriation to be expended by the prosecuting officers of this Government so that they could not put the machinery of this law in motion against the laboring people of the country.

I want to be absolutely candid and frank. If that is class legislation, make the most of it. I have no difficulty in distinguishing between the Standard Oil Co. and the toiling people of this country. The great statesmen—though I do not put myself in that category—not only in this but other countries have seen no difficulty in differentiating between the toilers and great combinations of capital.

Practically every civilized nation in the world has made this distinction. The courts of this country are more amenable to public opinion and to right and justice than the elected and selected representatives of the people, and they have accepted the principle embodied in that limitation. In two recent decisions the courts of the United States have practically granted to the laboring people what they claim in this language. They have recognized the principle it stands for, and the Congress of the United States, if it enacts it now, comes halting, blindly, and lamely behind the courts, against which these people have been asking the legislative department of the Government for protection.

Mr. President, there is no occasion for discussing this amendment any further. I hope and believe the language proposed to be stricken out will be permitted to remain a part of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, this subject was very fully discussed by the Senate last year when a similar provision was written into the sundry civil appropriation bill. I myself discussed it at some length at that time, and I do not intend to repeat what was then said, but I do not want to vote upon the proposition to strike out the language without very briefly expressing my reasons for casting the vote which I shall cast.

I intend to vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. This provision is either an unnecessary and useless thing or it is a vicious thing—one or the other. If this provision means only that a labor organization shall not be prosecuted under the antitrust law for any legitimate attempt by combination or contract or otherwise to increase the wages of its members or to shorten the hours or better the conditions of labor, then it is a needless thing, because labor organizations have that right now. The labor organizations of the country have the right, and have always had the right, to combine for the purpose of increasing their wages. The members of a labor organization have a right to agree and to combine and to strike for the purpose of increasing the price which the thing they have for sale, namely, their work, will bring. No manufacturer has any such right as that.

Mr. HUGHES rose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment. Manufacturers are forbidden to combine for the purpose of raising the prices of their commodities. The right of the workmen to combine together for the purpose of enhancing the price of what they sell—to restrain full competition in the field of labor—already puts them in a favored class before the law; and rightfully and justly so. The antitrust law does not reach such a combination, because labor is not an article of commerce.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator from Utah permit a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say that I agree fully with what the Senator has said up to this time, but the proposition that the Senator makes was not always admitted, and has not been admitted upon the floor of the Senate until very recently; in fact, according to my information, it has not been admitted by the Senator or by any man who voted against this amendment until the Senator just admitted it. It was because it was not admitted that that amendment was offered. I am glad the Senator does admit it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is in error about that. I have personally always conceded it, and always believed in it, and expressly so stated in my remarks a year ago. I have never heard it seriously doubted. I do not recall any decision of a court which has held the contrary. But, however that may be, the rule is recognized now beyond any question whatever, that labor organizations have a right to exist; they have a right to combine for the purpose of increasing their wages or bettering their condition or shortening their hours of labor. It is a right which they ought to have, and a right which nobody concedes to them more freely than I do. Men have a perfect right to organize labor unions, and if they can not obtain what they regard as fair wages or fair hours of work or proper conditions, they have a right to quit work, and they have a right to strike. All of that they have a right to do under the law as it is now. If this provision means nothing more than that, then I say it is absolutely needless; but if it means that labor organizations having come into existence are given the right to combine with one another for the purpose and with the effect of restraining interstate commerce, then it is vicious.

Mr. President, we do not undertake to prosecute organizations of capital simply because they are organizations of capital; we do not undertake to prosecute organizations of merchants simply because they are organizations of merchants. Capital has a right to organize; it has the right to carry on legitimate business; capitalists have the right to do that; and they can not be prosecuted unless they enter into such combinations or perform such acts as are intended to restrain or do restrain trade among the several States. That is declared by the antitrust act to be an evil thing; and if it is an evil thing, if it is a wrong to restrain trade among the States of this Union, what difference does it make who commits the wrong? Is it not as great a wrong for a number of workingmen to combine to violate the antitrust law as it is for a number of capitalists or a number of manufacturers to do the same thing?

We must look at the quality of the acts that are performed, not at the quality or the calling of the persons who perform them. We make no such distinction about other offenses. Murder is murder, by whomsoever committed; larceny is larceny, by whomsoever committed; and restraint of interstate commerce is restraint of interstate commerce, whoever commits it.

I think that this provision goes further than being merely a useless thing. The provision is:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor.

Let me pause at that point, because up to that point we have a complete proposition. We are not to prosecute, so far as this appropriation is concerned, "any organization or individual for enterning into any combination or agreement," provided that combination or agreement shall contain one element, namely, that it shall have "in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours," and so on. It makes no difference what the character of the agreement or the combination may be—however offensive in every other respect it may be, however violative of the antitrust law it may be—if it have in view the increasing of wages or the shortening of hours, it can not be prosecuted. Does the Senate of the United States want to write into the statute books a proposition of that kind? Then the provision continues:

Or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful.

The phrase "not in itself unlawful" referred to its immediate antecedent means that for any act done in furtherance of this combination or agreement, provided the act itself is not unlawful, shall not be prosecuted; but the combination or the agreement itself, no matter what it may be in other respects, no matter how violative it may be of the law in other respects, can not be prosecuted under this appropriation if it has in view the increase of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering of conditions of labor.

Now I come to the next proviso, which reads:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Again, it does not make any difference what the effect may be upon interstate commerce. If they have cooperated and organized for the purpose of obtaining what they regard as a fair, reasonable price, then they can not be prosecuted. Suppose we were to substitute for the provision as it reads the words:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of lumber producers or manufacturers of steel who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

I think nobody in the Senate would accept an amendment of that character. Is it any more legitimate for an organization of farmers to cooperate than it is for an organization of lumber dealers to do the same thing? Both of these classes of people have the right to organize and combine, provided their organization and combination does not constitute a violation of the antitrust act. If it does, they should be prosecuted; and if a body of farmers or of horticulturists do the same thing, I should like somebody to tell me why it is that they should not be prosecuted for violating the same law?

Mr. President, I hope that I never will be able to get my own consent to vote for so utterly indefensible a piece of class legislation as this proviso would write into the law of the land.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this matter, as has been stated, was very elaborately argued a year ago when the constitution of this body was practically what it is now, and I apprehend that every Member of the Senate has quite definitely made up his mind concerning the wisdom of this provision in the bill. The discussion that has thus far been indulged in, it seems to me, is quite irrelevant to the matter now before the Senate.

The Judiciary Committee has under consideration now, and will soon report, the Clayton bill, when there will be presented the question as to whether or not these organizations should fall under the condemnation of the Sherman antitrust law. At that time, it occurs to me, it will be appropriate to address ourselves to the considerations to which we have now listened.

For the present, Mr. President, permit me to state, as I stated a year ago, that that is not the question at all. There are provisions made in other portions of this bill for the prosecution of any man who commits any offense against the laws of the United States. If labor organizations fall under the condemnation of the Sherman Antitrust Act, or if farmers' organizations are amenable to its provisions, there is ample provision made in the bill for their prosecution, just as there is ample provision made for the prosecution of any crime against the Government of the United States.

There is no exemption given by the bill to anybody who violates the antitrust law, no matter who he is; but, Mr. President, it is found that in the enforcement of the Sherman Antitrust Act the officers of the Government encounter great, powerful combinations of capital able to bring to their help as a defense in the actions brought against them unlimited resources, and we want to so equip the officers of the law that they will be able to meet them upon somewhat even terms. It is believed, and everybody recognizes that it is the fact, that the Department of Justice is otherwise amply provided with funds if, perchance, it should find that a labor organization has violated the antitrust act. That is all. It is simply a question as to whether we shall devote this money to the purpose of prosecuting those cases in which the powerful defense to which I have referred may be interposed, or whether we shall permit a considerable portion of it to be diverted, perchance to some purpose that is not at all within the contemplation of the act.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Virginia to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the motion because the subject has been debated by the Senate many times, and I am anxious to finish this bill now. The matter has been debated and debated and debated, and I hope Senators will understand that it is because of the necessity of completing this bill that I must ask that the question be put on the motion that the amendment be laid on the table.

So Mr. STERLING's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield to me? I wish to move an amendment to the same paragraph we have just had under consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In line 14, on page 121, after the word "view," I move to insert the words "by lawful means," so that the provision will read:

> That no part of this money will be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view by lawful means the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. All those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." [A pause.] Those opposed will say "no." [A pause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I was going to move to lay the amendment on the table, but perhaps it is too late now. I understand the amendment was defeated. I should not make the motion, anyhow, in view of that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not announced the result.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 121, line 14, after the word "view," it is proposed to insert the words "by lawful means," so that it will read:

> Having in view by lawful means the increasing of wages, etc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I transfer my pair as before announced and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I make the same announcement as on the last roll call with reference to my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND]. If he were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH. I transfer my pair, heretofore announced, to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce a pair existing between the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] and the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. The Senator from Wisconsin is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

So Mr. SUTHERLAND's amendment was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. I send the following amendment to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, after line 19, insert:

For care, protection, and maintenance of Confederate Stockade Cemetery, Johnstons Island, in Sandusky Bay, $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. After the numerals "$5,000," after line 7, on page 21, I move to insert as a separate paragraph what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the purchase of that portion of the block whereon the United States courthouse and jail now stand, in the city of Fairbanks, Alaska, not now owned by the United States, at a price not in excess of $15,000.

Mr. JONES. I desire to say that this has been favorably reported by the House committee as an emergency measure. I understand the chairman of the committee will not oppose its acceptance.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am without information with respect to the matter, but on the statement of the Senator from Washington I interpose no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I send the following amendment to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 111, strike out all of lines 23, 24, and 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the administration and improvement of Glacier National Park, Mont., the construction of roads, trails, bridges, and telephone lines and the repair thereof, including the construction of a road, together with the necessary bridges and culverts, from the old town of St. Mary, across St. Mary River, between upper and lower St. Mary Lake; thence in a general northerly and westerly direction through that part of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation west of lower St. Mary Lake to a point in or near section 35, township 36 north, range 15 west, on the boundary line between the Glacier National Park and the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, $100,000. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept patented lands or rights of way over patented lands in the Glacier National Park that may be donated for park purposes. (Acts of May 11, 1910, vol. 36, p. 354, secs. 1, 2; June 23, 1913, vol. 38, p. 49, sec. 17.)

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is an increase of $25,000, but it is within the estimate, and it seems to be necessary. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask one question. Is it confined to Government land, to the park?

Mr. WALSH. It is within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

Mr. WARREN. It is all on Government land?

Mr. WALSH. It is all on Government land.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the following amendment to come in on page 94, after line 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 94, after line 3, insert:

To authorize the Secretary of the Senate to pay those officers and employees of the Senate borne on the roll known as the soldiers' roll, in accordance with the provisions of Senate resolution of July 14, 1911, and continue such persons on said roll who are now designated as "mail carriers," "folders," "skilled laborers," "policemen," or by other designation, but who are now serving as messengers in and about the doors of the Senate and performing service exactly similar to those performed by messengers whose compensation is $1,440 each per annum, a sum sufficient to make their compensation at the rate of $1,440 per annum each, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, $5,229.50, which amount shall be immediately available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 159, after line 16, insert the following paragraph:

Nothing in section 7 of the act of March 4, 1913, shall be construed to limit the power of the Secretary of Labor to fix, raise, or decrease the compensation of the subclerical, mechanical, and marine employees in the Immigration Service.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask that the amendment be read again. It sounds strangely to my ears.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from New Jersey kindly explain what the amendment means?

Mr. HUGHES. It has been recommended by the Secretary of Labor. The amendment deals with the subclerical force, watchmen, and men who are drawing extremely small salaries. Under the provisions of the law of 1913 it is impossible for the Secretary of Labor to regrade these men or to in any way advance their wages.

This provision does not call for any additional appropriation. According to the statement made to me by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, the Secretary of Labor has been given sufficient money to regrade and advance the wages of these men.

We all know that the wages in the upper regions of the Government service are to a certain extent liberal, but we all must have observed that the ordinary employees are very often neglected. Here is a class of men who are receiving about $70 a month. I have a most interesting letter here from the Secretary of Labor, in which he says he has made an investigation of the conditions of life among these men and that it is impossible for them to live as they ought to live on the salaries they are now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that this is giving to the head of a department the authority to reduce certain salaries and increase other salaries at his pleasure?

Mr. HUGHES. No; it is to increase them. It gives him no authority to reduce salaries but it gives him authority to increase salaries. A certain amount of money has been given to him by Congress. He asks for no additional or further appropriation, but he asks that he may be relieved from the inhibition of the act of 1913, which prevents him from increasing a salary paid out of a lump-sum appropriation. That is a wise and salutary provision, and it came into being because of the abuse that had grown up in transferring men from one service to another or increasing their salaries in such a way out of a lump-sum appropriation, but it has worked very much to the disadvantage of a class of employees who are not powerful or influential enough to make their demands known and to command the attention of Senators and Representatives. The Secretary of Labor, as we all know, is a man who has toiled with his hands. He himself is an old miner and he has sympathy with these underpaid public servants.

Mr. GALLINGER. If we have any class of officials who are underpaid we ought to be brave enough to increase their salaries in the right way. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish the Senator would withhold the point of order and give me a chance to make a statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will certainly do that.

Mr. HUGHES. I want the Senator to give me a chance to make a statement on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I said to the Senator that I will withhold the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES. I will read the letter of the Secretary of Labor. He says:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 3, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM HUGHES,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to respectfully direct your attention to the urgent necessity existing in the Immigration Service for funds sufficient to provide for a general regrading in subclerical positions, such as watchmen, gatemen, messengers, etc.

I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is no attempt on the part of anybody to increase or reduce the salaries of the clerks, the chiefs of divisions, and the men holding lucrative places in that service. It simply applies to watchmen, gatemen, messengers, and so forth.

For a long time it has been apparent that the numerous petitions of these employees that their salaries be raised were worthy of recognition, but the insufficiency of the appropriation for the support of the said service has rendered the department powerless to meet the situation, more especially since the relief of an isolated case would serve no good purpose, it being essential to apply the increases throughout the service in justice to all.

Referring, of course, to this particular branch of the service.

Mr. GALLINGER rose.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not finished yet, I will say to the Senator. The Secretary proceeds:

The duties of these employees are very exacting and at times dangerous. They are required to handle insane aliens and criminals; their responsibilities are heavy, their hours long. They must provide their own uniforms, not a small item considering the fact that the majority are married and have dependent families and children to educate. An additional argument is found in this fact, that many served their country in time of trouble, and because of this are entitled to additional consideration. Yet salaries have remained stationary for many years, during which period of time the cost of living has risen steadily, rendering it difficult, sometimes impossible, for these men to make ends meet.

One employee cites his own case as an example, duplicated in other instances, in making his appeal for a living wage. He has a wife and six children, the oldest 14 years, the youngest 3. He receives $840 per annum—$70 per month. His lowest minimum expenses per month comprehend: Life insurance, $7.50; fuel, water, light, $7; street car fares to work, $3; county taxes, $2; total, $19.50; leaving $50.50 to be divided into eight equal parts, each member of the family thus being allotted $6.30 per month for food, shoes, and clothing, with no margin for illness and its attendant expenses. In vouching for the truth of the foregoing a gentleman writes that if the actual conditions were known as to how the husband and wife were denying themselves to educate their children there would be no doubt of a quick remedy being provided.

It has been contemplated to place these employees on the same basis as customs guards in the Treasury Department, to make the entrance salary $840 per annum instead of $720, the maximum $1,080 in lieu of $840, also to change the designation from "watchmen" to "guards." These positions are covered by third-grade subclerical examinations, and there are approximately 51 receiving $720 per annum, 26 $780, and 93 $840.

The money has been appropriated; the money has been given to the Secretary of Labor. This legislation calls for no additional appropriation. I want to assure the Senator from New Hampshire that if he insists upon his point of order and it is held to be good he will be preventing the Secretary of Labor from performing a duty which, it seems to me, some one long ago should have performed as a matter of justice to these underpaid workingmen in the Government service.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have made a great many lump-sum appropriations for all the departments. What would the Senator from New Jersey say if we made the provision general and permitted the head of every department to take those lump-sum appropriations and increase salaries?

Mr. HUGHES. I would not be averse to permitting him to increase the salary of watchmen and men performing laborious service for the Government, because it has been in my experience both in the other body and in this that no one pays very much attention to men who are doing actual labor for the Government in these departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. My observation in the Committee on Appropriations is that the committee pays particular attention to that class of men. I have been instrumental in getting a good many of those small salaries increased. Has the Senator, I will ask him, made a comparison between the salaries paid those people and similar employees in other departments and in the municipal government of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they are all underpaid.

Mr. HUGHES. I agree with the Senator; but it seems that men in this particular employment, on account of certain regulations, were classified and given the status of customs guards at one time, and an attempt was made to increase certain salaries; but what Congress attempted to do was not done. The net result of it is that these men are underpaid, and because of the provision with reference to lump-sum appropriations they will continue to be underpaid.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if he presented this matter to the committee?

Mr. HUGHES. I did not get it in time to present it to the committee, but I have presented it to the chairman of the committee, and I presented it so persuasively that he has not yet shown any desire to make a point of order on it or to oppose the amendment. I think he will leave it to the Senate. I sincerely hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not make the point of order. I will say to him I have not the slightest interest of any kind in this amendment. No one will be affected by the provision whom I know personally or so far as my knowledge is concerned who lives in my State, but I have known for a long time that there is a certain class of Government employees who have been underpaid. They are not, perhaps, underpaid as compared with people working for private firms and individuals and corporations, but they are underpaid, it seems to me, from the standpoint of a man who thinks the Government of the United States should be a generous employer and should set an example to other employers.

I am in favor of economy, and I have not joined in any attempt to increase the amounts carried in these appropriation bills. I have not attempted to get anyone's salary raised, and I do not expect to do so unless there are good reasons presented to me. But I have always felt that there is a certain class of Government employees who, because of the character of their employment, are not regarded as particularly important and who do not get the attention that they deserve. These men are of that class.

The Secretary of Labor can be trusted to do this thing. It comes peculiarly within his province. I would scrutinize as cautiously as the Senator from New Hampshire any attempt on his part to raise salaries generally throughout that service, because I know how difficult it is to resist the importunities of men to have their salaries raised. I have helped to get men appointed at a given salary and before the next year they wanted to get twice as much as they were receiving. I have not any particular sympathy with that class, but I want to say to the Senator that I think these men are deserving, and nobody voices their complaint, and they get little or no consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have always found the Senator from New Jersey to be frank and to desire to do the right thing, but I will ask the Senator from New Jersey if he does not realize the fact that if in this indirect way we increase the salaries of certain low-grade and underpaid officials there will be a demand all along the line for a similar increase?

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that I would oppose any proposition to give power generally to the head of any department to increase salaries paid out of lump-sum appropriations or to increase salaries in any other way, and I would not be in favor of this proposition if it was not confined to a well-defined class of men, the number of which is known and the amount of money which it will cost to grant the increase is already determined, and it is quite moderate in amount.

Mr. GALLINGER. My observation, which has been largely confined to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, is that when, upon the importunity of some individual Senator or of some influential party outside, we in the goodness of our heart increase the salary of a watchman or messenger, immediately we are bombarded by every individual holding a somewhat similar position for an equal increase, and we can not very well resist it. It will run all through our departments if we increase salaries out of lump-sum appropriations without investigating the matter very carefully as to where it will lead us.

I sympathize with every man in the service who is getting an inadequate salary. I have sought to increase the salary of the men who are getting $40 or $50 or in many cases $60 a month, because I do not see how they could support their families on it; but there are a great many left of that class, and I think we ought to equalize them if we possibly can do it.

It seems to me this simply throws into the equation a very troublesome situation. That is the way it occurs to me.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that some investigation has been made. I am quoting from a letter from the Secretary of Labor, who calls attention to this particular situation. The lump-sum appropriation provision was a good thing. It has resulted in saving a good deal of money to the Government and was the means of rendering a great service to the people, but it worked hardship in many instances. I had occasion not long ago to go to one of the departments to attempt to get for an employee what was regarded as a deserved promotion. I went to the head of the department and asked to see the record of that employee. It was shown to me. They had recorded in the department the fact that this employee was entitled to a certain salary—say, $900 a year—though he was then receiving but $840. They said, however, because of the general language of that lump-sum appropriation provision the increased salary could not be paid, and that the only way it could be paid was for the head of that department, when he went before the committee and submitted his estimates, to have this particular employee in mind, to ask for this increase, and to have it recommended by the committee and granted by Congress. Although the efficiency record of this employee was there, and although they themselves said the employee should receive this amount of money, he did not receive it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator about how many of these employees are there?

Mr. HUGHES. I will read it again.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, approximately, how many?

Mr. HUGHES. The expenditure amounts to $28,000 in all. The money has already been provided. I can not find the exact number of the employees provided for in the bill, but they are comparatively few.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that it was a long time before we were able to pass section 7 in the law referred to in the Senator's amendment, to do away with the increase of salaries in the different departments of this Government under lump-sum appropriations, which had been abused for years and years. The grossest favoritism had been shown under that practice. I believe the law was a very wise one, indeed; and while all that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] says may be absolutely true, that every man to whom he has referred should receive an increase of salary, I say to the Senator that this is not the way to grant such increase. It would be opening the door, Mr. President, to the reinauguration of the old practice of increasing salaries by the head of a department to those he might feel inclined to favor.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope the Senator from Utah will not put me in that position, because I have as much regard for the provision of the law to which he refers as he can possibly have; and I would not be urging an amendment to give the Secretary of Labor or any other Cabinet officer of this Government the right to increase any salary he saw fit; but this I regard as a direction from us to him to increase the salaries of certain men who, I submit, are notoriously underpaid.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the Secretary of Labor, as well as Mr. McDonald and those who are assisting him, appeared before the committee and made requests for everything they thought their department needed. I say to the Senator now that this question was not brought before the committee; it was not considered; and, again, to be perfectly frank, Mr. President, I will say that if it had been, as a member of the committee, I would have opposed it; but when the next bill is brought before the Senate committee for consideration, if the Secretary of Labor can point out to the committee men holding certain positions, and can show that their qualifications are such that they should receive an advance in salary, I feel positive the committee will sanction it, but not in this way. I do not believe that the Senate will ever again undertake to make lump-sum appropriations, giving authority to the head of any department of this Government to increase the salary of anyone whom he may think proper. It is wrong; and I certainly can not approve of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, In view of the appeal made to me by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES], I will refrain from making a point of order and let the Senator pass upon the amendment. I feel very sure that the Senate will not go back to this bad system, for it is a bad system; it is an invitation to favoritism of the rankest kind. We have legislated on it and we once got rid of it; yet, if the Senate wishes to return to it, the Senate can do it over my vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, who has had long experience here, whether he does not think that if we begin this practice it will extend to the other departments?

Mr. GALLINGER. It would extend to every department.

Mr. THOMAS. And that this amendment will be considered as a precedent for the introduction of a similar practice throughout the system?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Colorado is absolutely right; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to read into the RECORD section 4 of the last legislative appropriation act. It is as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 7 of the general deficiency appropriation act approved August 26, 1912, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That no part of any money contained herein or hereafter appropriated in lump sum shall be available for the payment of personal services at a rate of compensation in excess of that paid for the same or similar services during the preceding fiscal year; nor shall any person employed at a specific salary be hereafter transferred and hereafter paid from a lump-sum appropriation a rate of compensation greater than such specific salary, and the heads of departments shall cause this provision to be enforced: Provided, That this section shall not apply to mechanics, artisans, their helpers and assistants, laborers, or any other employees whose duties are of similar character and required in carrying on the various manufacturing or constructing operations of the Government."

Mr. President, if we give that right to the Secretary of Labor, we certainly ought to give it to the head of every other department.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or we ought to repeal that section.

Mr. BRYAN. We ought to repeal that section or we ought to turn the matter loose to the heads of departments to do as they please with the public money.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Senator from Florida permit an interruption there?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Florida has read a provision which I neglected to read, and he has thrown light on this subject by the mere reading of it. That provision really attempts to do what I am attempting to do, and what the Secretary also wants to do under this amendment. It differentiates and takes out of that limitation the mechanics and artisans, and the point the Secretary makes is that these employees are practically mechanics and artisans.

Mr. BRYAN. If they are mechanics and artisans, then the Senator's amendment is not necessary.

Mr. HUGHES. They are not, but they are paid as those men are paid; they come from the same walk of life as that from which those men come, and they should be dealt with in about the same way.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations always hears the heads of departments very patiently and gives them such increases and such changes of salaries as the committee believes they are entitled to have; and the bill then comes into the Senate for its action. I think it is as little as could be asked of the heads of departments to get up a statement of how much the men under them ought to receive, for they certainly ought to know.

Inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has withdrawn his point of order, I renew the point that the amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill in that it proposes to repeal general legislation upon this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WORKS. I move to amend by inserting after line 11, page 166, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 166, after line 11, following the amendment already inserted at that place, it is proposed to insert.

To install and maintain an outdoor exhibit at the Panama-California Exposition, to be held at San Diego, Cal., during the year of 1915, to illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States pertaining to irrigation and reclamation and their adaptation to the needs of the people, $75,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order against that amendment. I think we have dealt very liberally with the California Exposition, and I am surprised that the Senator should come in here at this late hour, without having presented the proposed amendment to the committee—I do not know that it was presented to the committee, at any rate, it was not when I was present.

Mr. WORKS. Will the Senator withhold the point of order for a moment so that I can explain the situation?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. My object in making the point of order is to cut off debate. I want to finish the bill to-night, and there are half a dozen amendments yet to be offered.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator is mistaken as to the facts, and I certainly think he does not want to be unjust about it.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will forego the point of order for a few moments; but I may say it will not do the Senator any good, because I am going to insist upon the point of order when he concludes.

Mr. WORKS. Very well; that may be.

Mr. President, I proposed this amendment some time ago. I did present it to the Committee on Appropriations, notwithstanding the statement made by the Senator from Virginia, who was present at the time.

Mr WARREN. Mr. President, I want to say that the Senator from California is correct in stating that he presented the proposed amendment to the committee, but I think the attention of the chairman of the committee was diverted in another direction at the time it was presented to the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have no doubt the Senator from California is right, but I happened not to be present; I did not know anything of the amendment, and this is the first time I have ever heard of it. I will say that I was away one night, being obliged to go to Virginia.

Mr. WORKS. It was suggested by the committee that an estimate should be obtained from the Secretary of the Interior, and I undertook to communicate with the Secretary upon the suggestion of the committee. I did so, and the Secretary desired to know what kind of an exhibit would be expected. Mr. KETTNER, the Representative in the other House from the San Diego district, had introduced a bill providing for this exhibit. I asked him to confer with the Secretary of the Interior on the subject. He did so, and the following communication was received by him from the confidential clerk of the Secretary of the Interior:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 7, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM KETTNER,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. KETTNER: I am sending to you herewith an estimate prepared by Director Newell of the cost of preparing a model of the Salt River Valley reclamation project.

By direction of Secretary Lane.

Cordially yours, JOS. J. COTTER,
Confidential Clerk.

The letter of the Director of the Reclamation Service to the Secretary of the Interior is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES RECLAMATION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1914.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

MY DEAR MR. LANE: With reference to the San Diego exposition, I have had several talks with Hon. WILLIAM KETTNER, who is greatly interested in the matter of having a working model of one of the reclamation projects, presumably the Salt River Valley project, Arizona, as being the most instructive.

The cost of preparing such a model on the scale desired and one which will show the relative position of the storage reservoir, the diversion dam, and irrigated lands, would be from $60,000 to $75,000. It is not practicable to accomplish anything worthy of the effort for much less than this, as shown by the various models which we have had built for other expositions.

For this sum it will be possible to construct on the ground a working model in which water can be run and plants grown by the direct application of the water.

Cordially, yours, F. H. NEWELL, Director.

Mr. President, the San Diego exposition is being held largely for the purpose of exhibiting the plans that have been carried out in part by the Government for the irrigation and reclamation of arid lands, and will be most instructive. Through the Secretary of State invitations were sent to the South American States, which are very much interested in the question of irrigation and reclamation of arid lands; and a number of those States have signified their intention of exhibiting at the exposition.

The people of San Diego have contributed $2,000,000 toward the carrying out of this project. It is well under way; buildings have been constructed, and the exposition is going to be one that will be a credit to the State and to the country at large.

I should be glad if the chairman of the committee would allow this amendment to be adopted, and take it to the committee of conference, where the Secretary of the Interior can be conferred with on the subject, and it can be determined whether it is a proper appropriation to be made. For that reason, I hope the Senator will not insist upon the point of order. I think the Senator was mistaken as to the efforts I had made.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from California that he does not seem to realize the burden he is putting on the conferees in carrying the half-million-dollar appropriation for the Panama-Pacific Exposition. It is very doubtful whether we will be able to sustain it. The Senate, I think, has been very liberal to California, and I am very much afraid, while I am earnestly in favor of the provision respecting the Panama-Pacific Exposition and will do all I can to retain it, that we can not sustain it if we continue on that line further. I can reciprocate the Senator's request to me by making the request that he withdraw his amendment; I can not withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WORKS. Well, Mr. President, it is hardly necessary for me to withdraw the amendment if the Senator makes the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, it is proposed to strike out lines 24 and 25 and insert:

For additional facilities for storing artillery ammunition, either by an extension of the present storehouse or by the construction of a new building, $17,500.

Mr. OLIVER. That amendment adds nothing in the way of an appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not object to that amendment; it does not increase the appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 158, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Labor to carry out the provisions of Senate resolution 68, agreed to June 30, 1914, directing him to "investigate and report, as far as it is practicable, upon the mortality and the disability by accident or by disease incident to or resulting from the various occupations in which the wage earners of the United States are engaged," the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized to employ, through the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, such temporary assistance as may be necessary to tabulate the material secured in compliance with Senate resolution 68, to be paid from the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses, Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1915.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think there is no estimate for that. I will ask the Senator whether it has been estimated for?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics did not discover that he would need this special authority until two or three days ago. He then wrote me a letter explaining the situation, and I showed the letter to the chairman of the committee. The amendment does not involve any appropriation, but specific authority is required to make the miscellaneous fund available for this particular purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I think the matter ought to be withheld and taken up when the committee can consider it. There is still another appropriation bill to follow.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does not involve any additional appropriation. I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. It is a matter of legislation, and I feel that I should make the point of order against it. It may be brought up as an amendment to a following appropriation bill, at which time we will have an opportunity to examine it, but it has not yet had any examination by the committee. I make the point of order that it is not estimated for and that it is general legislation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There does not seem to be any appropriation involved.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is legislation, though.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not involve an appropriation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It does not involve an appropriation, and it is in accordance with a resolution passed by the Senate at this session.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it seems to me that the heads of departments ought to communicate with the committee in charge of these bills and not with individual Senators.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just one moment. The Chair assumes that a Senate resolution instructing or authorizing a certain investigation to be made is as binding on the Senate as a law or anything else, and it seems to the Chair that the proposed amendment is simply to carry out the provisions of a Senate resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I call attention to the fact that a Senate resolution is not the law. It has not the semblance of law. It takes the action of both Houses of Congress and the approval of the President of the United States to make a law.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If I had known the chairman would have objected, I would not have presented it. I understood he would have no objection to it. I understood that I had explained it to him satisfactorily.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I have been so occupied, Mr. President, in attending to matters before the Senate that when Senators come and talk to me I frequently do not take in what they are saying. My recollection is I told the Senator he must see me when I could listen to what he was saying. I am without information regarding the matter. I have no objection to its being adopted. I do not know anything about it. I do not know now, from the hasty reading of it at the desk; I have a very imperfect comprehension as to what the Senator is driving at.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the matter is a very simple one.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understood, from a hasty reading, that it did involve an appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order made against the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Chair please state on what ground?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; on the ground that upon an examination it is for the payment of money out of money appropriated; and, also, that it has not been estimated for.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will state that I do not seem to get the same treatment from the Appropriations Committee that other Senators do. Senators have been offering these amendments all day. It is not due to any fault of the head of the department that he did not communicate with the chairman of the committee. It is my fault, if there is any fault in it at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am very sorry the Senator takes that view, but it is entirely agreeable to me if he desires to do it. I have offered him no discourtesy of any sort. I have been anxious to aid him as far as I could, but I was entirely without information. When he talked to me, I was attending to a matter before the Senate and I could not take it in, and I simply made the point now. That is all I have said to the Senator on the subject.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator to say that I should have presented the matter to him again, else I should have gladly done so.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I move to strike out "$5,000," on line 11, page 77, and to insert in lieu thereof "$7,500." This appropriation is for the expenses of the Commission of Fine Arts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 11, it is proposed to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$7,500."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state that this commission is entirely——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator, if it is agreeable to him, that I have no objection to the amendment. It has been estimated for, and it is simply for the difference between $5,000 and $7,500. I am very willing to have it adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 9, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

Washington, D. C., National Archives Building: For employment of technical and engineering services in the Office of the Supervising Architect, for the preparation of designs and estimates for the National Archives Building, as authorized in the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, or regulations, $5,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am perfectly willing to have that amendment adopted. It is in pursuance of existing law and has been estimated for.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask leave to print in this connection a statement prepared by W. G. Leland with regard to the need of this building.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PRESENT CONDITION OF THE GOVERNMENT ARCHIVES.

(Statement by Mr. W. G. Leland, of the Carnegie Institution, joint author of its "Guide to the Archives of the Government of the United States in Washington.")

Long-continued neglect to provide for the proper care of the records of the Government has been attended with the most unfortunate consequences, which might have been clearly foreseen.

Repeated warnings as to these consequences have not been lacking from the earliest days of the Government. In 1800 the archives of the War Department were destroyed by fire; in 1833 the most important part of the archives of the Treasury Department were similarly destroyed, and in 1877 the same fate befell the material in the Patent Office. It is a matter of common report that during the Civil War great quantities of documents stored in the Capitol were actually thrown away in order to provide soldiers' quarters, and that at a later date the archives of the House of Representatives were systematically looted for papers having a market value, such papers being sold to dealers in autographs.

The fact that the governmental records are scattered among over a hundred depositories gives rise to the greatest confusion. It frequently happens that one part of a series of documents is held by one office or bureau, and another part of the same series is in the possession of another bureau, which is perhaps not even in the same department. Such is the case of the Territorial archives, among the more valuable historically of the groups of papers. A portion of these papers is in the State Department, another portion in the Department of the Interior, and there is a tradition that another portion has been lost somewhere between the two departments. In the State Department most of the papers relating to claims are in a certain bureau, but the balance, without any logical reason therefor, are in another. It is generally believed that the archives of the Indian Office suffered greatly at the time of their transfer from the War Department to the Department of the Interior. Often only the vaguest ideas are possessed by officials as to the location of records that have once been or should now be under their care. In the development of the governmental machinery the records of bureaus have been divided, transferred, consolidated, and too often lost. Papers that have been temporarily transferred for special purposes have sometimes not been returned to the office from which they came, as in the case of a considerable body of material sent to the Capitol from the War Department about 1850, and thereafter lost sight of.

Another result of the scattering of the archives is great diversity in methods of administration. To have a hundred depositories of archives means to have a hundred archivists, each with his own ideas respecting the care of such material. In one office a certain method of filing is employed; in another a totally different method. In some places the material is as well cared for as circumstances permit, while in others it is as completely neglected as possible. In one bureau will be found satisfactory knowledge respecting the records, in another the most distressing ignorance. In short, it can never be assumed that any queries, whether arising from within the Government or from without, can be answered or even that the material in which the answer should be found can be located.

Not only are the archives of the Government thus scattered and disorganized, but they are in some cases in serious danger from fire; in others they are slowly or rapidly deteriorating and going to pieces from the effect of damp or heat; in others they are being damaged by crowding, by dirt, or by careless handling; in still others they are in danger of being condemned as useless papers, because not being used in current business they encumber offices already overcrowded, and the easiest way of taking care of them is to destroy them.

That valuable records have already been destroyed by fire at various times is a matter of history. That other records are exposed to constant risk will hardly be questioned by anyone who examines the so-called Cox and Winder Buildings, and as it is a notorious fact that the buildings of storage companies are frequently burned the great mass of records of the Treasury Department on E Street can hardly be said to be exposed to no risk at all. In case of a serious fire breaking out in any one of half a dozen localities in Washington the Government would lose vast quantities of records. This, it is obvious, might entail the loss to the Government of millions of dollars. Nor are records preserved in the main departmental buildings themselves wholly free from danger. They are kept for the most part in wooden cases in rooms filled with combustible materials. Smoking is not infrequently allowed in close proximity to or even among the records; in the wintertime open fires of wood are kept burning.

When, as in the Treasury, State, War, and Navy, and Interior Department Buildings, there are papers stored in the attic, they become, under the influence of the summer heat, as dry as tinder, and it would take but little to start a fire that would consume entirely the records of certain bureaus before it could be controlled. On the other hand, there are various bodies of archives that are kept in close proximity to furnaces and boilers, and are thus exposed to constant risk.

But the danger from fire is not all. Thousands of volumes of papers have been found stored in places so damp that the water, oozing from walls and ceilings, dropped upon them, and these books were so covered with mold that the titles could not be read. The pages of such volumes were damp and stuck together. Great masses of important materials in the Land Office have had to be stored where they received the drippings from steam pipes, or where they collected thick coatings of dirt. Papers stored in attics often become so dry and scorched that the paper crumbles at the touch, while those in the cellars frequently mold and rot into pulp. In most of the departmental buildings a great deal of material has to be stored in the corridors—or anywhere where there is a cubic foot of space. Papers have to be stacked up in bundles like cord wood, or even—as has been known to be the case—thrown down into huge piles.

Under such conditions it is no wonder that there is a temptation to condemn as useless large bodies of material that may still have historical value. Some 10 tons of Confederate archives, as well as the original census schedules, were once thus condemned, but were fortunately saved. The Government is now printing some of the census schedules that so narrowly escaped going to the paper mill.

Worst of all, perhaps, from the point of view of the public business, is the tremendous waste of energy, time, efficiency, and money resulting from such conditions. When, for example, certain papers are desired from among the files of the Secretary of the Treasury, search has to be made in the subbasement and in the attic of the Treasury Building, as well as in a commercial storage building half a mile away. In many cases finding a paper involves hunting with a candle or with an electric drop light through stack after stack, climbing ladders, untying bundles, searching in out-of-the-way corners, taking down huge piles of papers, until the document is finally run down. In case it is not found, there is no assurance that it is nonexistent. When conditions are as have been described, ability to find anything is possessed solely by one or two employees. Search by the uninitiated is well-nigh useless, and in the absence of the one or two who hold the key to the situation, only the most obvious things could be found.

Such a state of affairs is the direct result of lack of room and of nothing else. In general the chiefs of bureaus and the clerks in charge of files have done as well as could be expected, but it is not to be expected that much can be done in cellars and attics and storage buildings and corridors.

It is perfectly possible, a suitable building being provided, to arrange all the records and files of the governmental offices in an orderly and systematic way, to insure their absolute safety from fire, damp, dirt, and neglect, to devise a system of finding lists and indexes that will enable any document called for to be found in a few minutes, and to insure for the future uniformity and consistency in the matter of making and filing records.

Such provision would do much to relieve the congestion in the departmental buildings; it would enable the public business to be transacted with greater efficiency and with saving of time and energy; and what is not wholly to be overlooked, it would make available for historical purposes a great body of archives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee for some explanation of section 11, on page 197. I will state, while he is turning to the paragraph, the object of my inquiry. I shall have to read two or three lines to make my point. It provides:

That no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used during the fiscal year 1915 for the purchase of any typewriting machine at a price in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and model of machine during the period of the fiscal years 1913 and 1914.

I understand that the same provision was in the legislative bill, which I have before me; and I assume, from its repetition in this bill, that it is the policy of the committee to incorporate it in every appropriation bill where any money is appropriated for the purchase of typewriting machines by the Government.

What I want to suggest to the chairman is this: I have heard that a certain make of machine, or certain makes—I am not sure which—have changed the model o their machine a very little, but it is substantially the same machine. They have made just a slight change in the model. Under this provision, if it stands as it is, every make of typewriting machine which remains the same would have to be sold at the lowest price for which it has ever been sold to the Government, even if that price was a special price; whereas the one maker who has made a slight change in his model would not be subject to this restriction and limitation and would practically have a monopoly on all of the Government purchases of machines.

I will say to the Senator that I have no interest whatever in the matter, and I may not be correct in the facts; but I have simply heard that. I was going to ask, therefore, if the chairman would be willing to insert enough of an amendment here to carry the matter to conference, so that he can make inquiry about it.

I suggest, in line 5, after the fourth word from the end of the line, the word "and," the insertion of the words "substantially the same," so that it will read "substantially the same model."

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am satisfied to accept that amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then I know the chairman will have a chance to look it up in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 197, line 5, before the word "model," it is proposed to insert "substantially the same."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON obtained the floor.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds I wish to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Brady	Hughes	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	James	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Johnson	Page	Smoot
Burton	Jones	Perkins	Swanson
Catron	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Chilton	Lane	Saulsbury	Walsh
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Warren
Colt	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	White
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Shively	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators; and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. REED, and Mr. SHIELDS answered to their names when called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Iowa desires to make some remarks on the bill. I have an amendment which I wish to present, with his permission.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. I occupy the unique position of offering an amendment the purpose of which is to reduce the expenditures of the Government and not to increase them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 125, after the word "Oregon," in line 18, it is proposed to insert "or Montana."

Mr. WALSH. I will explain the amendment. An amendment was introduced the other day the effect of which is to reduce the salary of the clerk of the district court for the State of Oregon from $7,000 to $3,500. In the year 1908 a clause was put in an appropriation bill fixing the salary of the clerk of the United States district court for the State of Montana at the same figure as that of the State of Oregon. Now that Oregon has come down, it is quite appropriate that Montana should come down as well.

In this connection, however, I desire to say that there are eight other Western States that are in the same situation, and I trust that some time soon a general act will be passed covering them all.

I do not desire to let the opportunity pass, however, without saying that the present occupant of the office in the State of Montana has filled the place for a period of 20 years and has been uniformly courteous in the discharge of his duty and exceedingly efficient therein; but it is eminently unjust that he should receive a salary of $7,000 a year while the judge of the court gets only $6,000. Three thousand five hundred dollars is a very fair and reasonable sum.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I agree to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, on the same page, line 22, after the word "Oregon," it is proposed to insert the words "or Montana."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I feel that it would be a crime to detain the Senate here at this time of night. I very much hoped the bill could go over until to-morrow; but as the chairman of the committee is of the opinion that it ought to be acted on to-night, I will only take the time that it seems to me a sense of public duty requires to call attention to the river and harbor appropriations in this bill. I do that in place of calling attention to this when the river and harbor bill is reached only because I feel that a discussion of it at that time would not be as appropriate. I shall take, however, only a very few moments. Of course, I know that anything said here will have no effect; but I am anxious that the country shall understand the river and harbor bill and its connection with this bill.

This bill carries $8,990,000 for rivers and harbors. The House river and harbor bill carried $43,289,000.04 of cash, and of obligations $32,897,871. This bill carries $6,990,000, as I have suggested, and the increases of the Senate in the river and harbor bill amount to approximately $10,312,600, running the total river and harbor appropriations up to something like $93,000,000.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to correct the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is under a misapprehension. This comes from the fact that in the various river and harbor bills for years there has been a provision for continuing contracts; and there were no more of those continuing contracts in any bill than in the bills that were gotten up by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] when he was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House.

If the Senator will look up the matter he will find that some of these appropriations come from continuing contracts away back in that act in 1907, and he will find it perhaps in some older acts than that. That is how those appropriations come to be in the sundry civil bill. It is because the river and harbor bill from year to year has provided for continuing contracts and contracts have been made, and this year an appropriation to pay for what has been contracted for has been in the sundry civil bill. That is a thing we have inherited from the continuing contract system.

Mr. KENYON. It is a very bad inheritance. I think the relation is not generally understood in the country as to the appropriations in this bill and the river and harbor bill and as to why this bill should carry certain appropriations that might come in the river and harbor bill. The Senator from Minnesota may have made that clear to some. It is not to me.

I am at a loss, too, to understand, Mr. President, for instance, the items for the Ohio River. This bill carries for the Ohio River below Pittsburgh $1,976,000, and for continuing improvement in the Ohio River by the construction of locks and dams, $2,200,000. The river and harbor bill proper carries some $3,000,000 for the Ohio River in contracts and $2,000,000 in cash. So we are appropriating for the Ohio River approximately $9,176,000. The commerce on the Ohio River decreased 34 per cent between 1905 and 1911. It was 13,000,000 tons in 1905, 11,000,000 tons in 1906, 8,000,000 tons in 1912, and only 10 per cent of that 8,000,000 went through the canal at Louisville, and only about 1 per cent of high-grade freight goes through the canal in any event.

Now, we are embarking on a proposition as to the Ohio River, or we have embarked on it and ought to stop, that will entail a cost upon this country, according to the report of an examination of the Ohio River made by a board of engineers, of some $63,000,000, and that for a constantly decreasing traffic.

I think I will not read that part of the report at this time, but will read it in the discussion of the river and harbor bill. The locks and dams are to be constructed at an estimated cost of $63,731,488, with a maintenance of $810,000 per annum for the 9-foot project.

Mr. President, I know that everybody who objects to appropriations is placed in the category of cranks and reformers, but I can not understand how we can go ahead appropriating these large sums of money, as in the case of the Ohio River, under the theory that it may be a competitor of the railroads in fixing rates. It is too expensive to employ a competitor of this kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that we are now obligated to pay $63,000,000 in addition to what has been appropriated?

Mr. KENYON. I am not clear that we are obligated. That is for the canalization of the Ohio River, which the engineers have recommended and that we are proceeding to put into effect, and this bill carries many millions for that purpose. Many millions more have been spent on this project in years gone by, and we are now committed to the enterprise of canalizing the Ohio River at an expense of $63,000,000. I think it very wrong.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is agreed that the projects recommended will cost $63,000,000?

Mr. KENYON. That is, in construction. My amendment I have introduced—and I am embarrassed with this discussion, and I am going to get through very quickly with what I have to say—did not relate to the Ohio River, but it related to the Passaic River in New Jersey. I discussed the Ohio project in passing. This bill carries $92,000 for that river, while the river and harbor bill carries $150,000. That improvement, whether intended or not, will possibly help to reclaim or improve for a land scheme near Newark, N. J., some 33,000 acres of land. The matter is now somewhat in litigation, and I have here some of the court records and comments of papers as to the plan and scheme of freezing out certain bondholders. For the improvement of the Passaic River this large sum that we are spending and have spent may be in the interests of navigation, but at the same time it increases the value of these 33,000 acres some 40 per cent. That improvement benefits that land, and the burden of it ought to be borne partly by the land that is improved. There ought to be some cooperation in these river and harbor appropriations, especially where land is reclaimed.

The amendment I rose to present was to strike out the sum of $92,000, inserting one-half of that conditioned on a contribution of $46,000 from the local interests, which amount should be paid to the Secretary of War by the local interests before any part of this sum is used. That is on the theory and the principle that there should be cooperation in any plan and scheme of river improvement where land is benefited as well as navigation.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he does not think there is a great deal of cooperation in this bill?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think it would ever pass if there was not.

I must call attention also to the item in passing on page 79, Puget Sound and Lake Washington waterway. We have spent on this project nearly $3,000,000. The total project, as I understand the figures of the engineers, will cost $3,554,000. I do not know just what the project is, except lowering a lake to the level of the ocean, but the report in volume 3 of the Chief of Engineers of the Army shows a commerce of short tons of 112,810, and of that approximately 106,000 were logs, piling, and poles—lumber for which navigation is not required. But the Chief Engineer in the engineer's report says that seven steamers of various tonnage, respectively, travel to and from the different points on the lake during the year, carrying 687,501 passengers.

I may be wrong, but it seems to me that this is merely a passenger-boat affair coupled with some kind of a sawmill project.

Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. KENYON. I see the Senator from Washington rising and I yield to him.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I have simply risen to state to the Senator the facts with reference to that situation.

The Lake Washington Canal is a canal connecting Lake Washington with Puget Sound, and in order to do that there must be a lock and canal constructed. It is not for the purpose of passenger boats but for the purpose of commercial traffic. There has been no traffic over this line of this canal except logs.

Mr. KENYON. No passenger traffic?

Mr. JONES. No passenger traffic except on the lake itself. It was connected with the ocean or Puget Sound simply by a runway, and the line where the canal and lock are constructed is simply along this outlet from the lake into Puget Sound, and there has been no traffic between Puget Sound and the lake for the same reason there has been no ship traffic across Panama. The locks and the canal have not yet been constructed, and until they are completed there could be no traffic except that logs might be floated down.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator think there ever will be any?

Mr. JONES. There is no question about it. Lake Washington is simply back of the city of Seattle, practically a part of the city. The canal and locks will connect that lake with Seattle and with all the Puget Sound commerce, foreign and domestic. A great part of that commerce it is expected will go through this canal into the fresh water lake.

Mr. KENYON. Will tolls be charged?

Mr. JONES. There will be no tolls on that canal, under the law of 1884, and that we thought applied to all our canals. It seems it does not.

The cost of these locks and the canal, as the Senator pointed out, will be about $3,000,000. All the money has been appropriated for the completion of the work, and the lock is now almost completed. It is the largest lock in the country outside of those in the Panama Canal.

I want to call the Senator's attention to what our people have done out there with reference to this proposition. We have been cooperating on the principle suggested by the Senator a moment ago, and I will say that nearly all along the Pacific coast, at least in the State of Washington, there has been cooperation in a great many of these river and harbor projects. Under a law that our legislature has passed, port commissions have been created in different localities, and they have been levying taxes that they may use in conjunction with the appropriations made by the Federal Government in the carrying on of these local improvements.

Mr. KENYON. What about the local contributions to this project?

Mr. JONES. That is just what I am coming to right now. In the first place, the county of King, in which is located Seattle, purchased a right of way for the canal at a cost of $250,000 and donated it to the Government under a provision of law requiring them to do it or making this a condition of the original appropriation. Then, when provision was made for the construction of locks, the county of King, or at least the local authorities there, contracted with the Government to do all the excavation, and they have done it.

My recollection may not be exactly right about it, but it is my recollection that the county of King or the city of Seattle voted $1,000,000 in bonds, and that money has been used by the locality for the excavation necessary to connect the lock with the lake. So the local authorities have put up possibly a million and a half dollars already in connection with this improvement, showing their interest in it, and their faith in it, and their willingness to do their part toward the work.

When the work is done there will be a fresh-water harbor, and domestic and foreign commerce will go through the locks and canal; and in addition to this traffic that is on the lake, that is referred to there, and which is even greater than I expected, there will be this large Puget Sound and Seattle commerce going into this fresh-water lake, so that this is one project that I think is not only a great benefit to the commerce of the country, but also one in which the locality has certainly contributed its part. This is a meritorious project, and the locality has shown its faith in it by its cooperation, and the future results will fully justify the large expenditure, both on the part of the locality and the National Government.

Mr. KENYON. That is one of the best defenses I have heard of any of these projects.

Mr. BURTON. I think, for the sake of greater clearness, it would be well to add to what the Senator from Washington has said. Lakes Union and Washington are two separate lakes. Lake Union covers less than a thousand acres. Lake Washington is of considerable size—at least 8 or 10 miles in length.

Mr. JONES. It is about 29 miles in length.

Mr. BURTON. That is, if you go around the outer fringe of it. The approach to it from the deep water of Puget Sound leads to Shilshole Bay and Salmon Bay. The exact estimate for this improvement was $3,554,000. It involves the building of a lock 825 feet long at the mouth of the waterway leading into Puget Sound. It has been agreed that the Government should construct that lock at a cost of about $2,500,000, and that the county of King or the city of Seattle should dredge the channel and make the excavation from that point to Lake Union and then to Lake Washington. Lake Washington is on a higher level than Lake Union. In carrying out the project it will be necessary to lower the level of Lake Washington.

Mr. KENYON. That is being done?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; by the county of King. Of course the object of this improvement is to provide additional harbor facilities for Seattle. There is a considerable water front along the front of the city on the Sound. The tide, however, is very considerable. It is some 14 feet, as I recall it, but differing at different times, and that is a disadvantage in handling boats. These two lakes will afford a fresh water inland harbor, where wharves may be constructed, and especially where there will be no rise or fall of the tide. It is estimated that the lock will cost about $2,500,000, the digging of the canal or channels to Lake Washington about a million.

While the claims of the city of Seattle were recognized in 1907 and prior years, there had been no appropriation for that part of the harbor which fronts on Puget Sound. In fact, no appropriation was needed for there was ample depth, yet the appropriation of $3,554,000 seemed very large to the House committee in those years. The project was nevertheless adopted in 1910. It is not without merit. The obstacle to its earlier adoption was the large amount required.

I will say while on my feet in regard to the Passaic River that I think there is no ground for striking out this provision here. This improvement was adopted in the year 1907. There was a project involving an expenditure, according to the estimate, of $1,216,775 to provide a channel from deep water in Newark Bay 9.7 miles up the Passaic River to and into the city of Newark and an additional channel of 1⅛ miles beyond that. The 9.7 miles were to have a depth of 16 feet and a width of 300 feet, and the 1⅛ miles above that a somewhat lesser depth and width. That was regarded in 1907 as a very desirable improvement. There is a tonnage of between two and three millions in the Passaic River up to the very prosperous city of Newark.

On examination, it was found that the work could be done for less than $1,216,775, because of finding a place near at hand where the spoil could be deposited. The revised estimate was $850,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Spoils?

Mr. BURTON. That is used in the sense of something taken out of the channel—the dredged material.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator had better not use that term.

Mr. BURTON. I think the words "dredged material" would be less open to criticism at this time.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest to the Senator that the river and harbor bill carries an appropriation for that river. We will discuss the question on that bill.

Mr. BURTON. I think, when we reach the river and harbor bill, it had better be examined into. All of the $850,000 appropriated and authorized must be carried in the river and harbor bill or the sundry civil bill except the $92,000. That is the last of the amount appropriated or authorized, and if any more money is to be expended, it will be a new item.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the Senator from Ohio to inform the Senator from Iowa that this appropriation of $92,000 was authorized in the act of 1907.

Mr. BURTON. In the act of 1907.

Mr. KENYON. We will discuss that when we discuss the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HUGHES. The particular appropriation of $92,000 to which the Senator called attention and which compelled me to make a comment upon the Senator's statement was, as the Senator from Ohio says, authorized by the river and harbor act of 1907, which has been adverted to in this discussion as being a model bill. I want to say for myself that I think it was a good river and harbor bill, and I am sorry that the policies initiated in that bill have not been adhered to.

Mr. KENYON. I am not prepared to dispute the Senator's statement.

Mr. BURTON. The appropriation for $150,000 carried in the pending river and harbor bill now before the Senate is evidently on a new project, but the $92,000 here is on a project which was thoroughly examined at the time, and I think it a very meritorious project.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, this simply illustrates how unfair it is, both to the Senate and to the person who is trying to discuss this bill, to be forced into a discussion at this time of the night.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I was going to proceed for a few moments, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will yield, I want to ask the Senator from Washington a question about the Puget Sound-Lake Washington project. I was in Seattle probably 15 years ago or thereabouts, and I was taken out by a committee of distinguished gentlemen who pointed out to me, pretty much as the promised land was pointed out to Moses, the great desirability of making this connecting waterway; but, as I understood, it was then designed for the purpose of having ships go into fresh water for the purpose of getting rid of the barnacles on them. That was their argument. Am I correct?

Mr. JONES. That is one of the arguments. That was one of the purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was the argument then made. I want to ask the Senator if that project has been enlarged to the extent of contemplating the building of docks along the borders of the lake and developing commerce?

Mr. JONES. There is no question but that a great part of the lake frontage will be used for docking and commercial purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was just wondering whether the project had been enlarged, because I know the argument, as presented to me at that time, was that it was extremely desirable to get our ships into fresh water to rid them of barnacles which they had gathered at sea, and that it would be an almost incalculable advantage to the shipping interests of the Puget Sound region if that improvement were made.

Mr. JONES. That would be a very great improvement; but the city of Seattle has grown so rapidly in that time that the necessity for docking facilities is also very great. This will be used for that purpose.

I did not intend to go into the details in connection with the matter quite so much, but will make just one further suggestion in addition to what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has said, so as to make the matter entirely clear.

This lock, as the Senator has said, is placed below Lake Union. There are two lakes—Lake Union, first, on Puget Sound, and then Lake Washington. My recollection is that the lock raises Lake Union some 7 or 8 feet and that Lake Washington is lowered about 7 feet, bringing the two on a level.

At first it was contemplated that we should have a lock between Puget Sound and Lake Union, and then another between Lake Union and Lake Washington, but that project has been changed, until finally the existing project which the Senator has described has been adopted, and I think it will probably commend itself to the Senator when I state that the project as now carried out has the approval of the able Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. The approval; but not while I was connected with the River and Harbor Committee to the extent of this $3,554,000; no.

Mr. JONES. My recollection is that the Senator, while he was chairman of the committee—and I was a member of the committee at the time—accepted this project.

Mr. BURTON. It was later than that.

Mr. JONES. I know the final appropriation was not made, but the contract and the agreement between the Government and the county of King and the city of Seattle for cooperation was adopted

Mr. BURTON. I only thought that something should be done.

Mr. JONES. I know the Senator thinks it is a pretty good project.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if we may pass over that for later discussion, I will read another provision in the pending bill, as follows:

Improving Sabine-Neches Canal, Texas: For continuing improvement of sections "a" and "c" from Port Arthur Canal to mouth of Neches River and from mouth of Neches River to Beaumont, in completion of contract authorization, $93,000.

For continuing improvement of section "b" from the mouth of Neches River to the mouth of Sabine River and up Sabine River to the town of Orange, in completion of contract authorization, $43,500.

Mr. President, we have spent in and around Sabine Lake on these various projects over $6,000,000. I merely call attention to that in passing.

For Houston ship channel, Texas, this bill carries $200,000. The river and harbor bill likewise carries $200,000. We have expended on this project $2,000,999.35, and the engineer in his report says:

The effect of this project on freight rates is unknown and is indeterminate because of a railroad rate differential in favor of Houston, authorized by the railroad commission of the State of Texas.

Therefore, if this is a proposition to regulate railroad rates, we have spent over $2,000,000 there, and it has amounted to nothing, according to the report of the engineer, in the regulation of rates.

Providence River and Harbor I should like to refer to if time permitted. I will do so in the discussion of the river and harbor bill as the hour is now late. Those Democrats who have talked a good deal about a subsidy in relation to the Panama Canal—and I joined them on that proposition—ought to look into this question of Providence Harbor and other harbors, where the water frontage is owned practically entirely by the railroads; and we are voting money for the improvement of harbors where, in many instances, there are no public docks at all. The next is the last item to which I shall refer:

Improving channel between St. Johns River and Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: For completing improvement, $51,000.

We have spent on this project $950,000, and here is the result—I am reading from the report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, 1913:

No formal project for this improvement has ever before been adopted, but between 1828 and 1880 the sum of $97,565.55 was expended by the United States in dredging Kingsleys and Gunnisons Cuts and in dredging various shoals between Nassau Sound and the St. Johns River. As a result of this work a narrow tortuous channel, 4 feet deep at mean low water, was secured. Shoaling has occurred in points along the waterway, so that at the present time there is only 2½ feet of water available at mean low water. The navigation of the waterway is, furthermore, seriously hindered by the numerous sharp bends.

So that is what we have secured there—a narrow, tortuous channel by the expenditure of $97,000.

Mr. President, I am going to keep faith and will not occupy further time. I am not to blame for taking this much time, for I have been interrupted. I have gone on in a very unsatisfactory way, but I did want to call attention to some of the river and harbor appropriations in this bill, and I shall refer to them later in the river and harbor bill, if I reach the discussion of that measure, which is contingent upon the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] completing his remarks on that bill during the present session. My amendment can then be introduced, so I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw anything I may have said this afternoon that seemed to be a criticism of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee or of any member of that committee. I have the highest regard for every member of the committee, and I do not believe that the chairman or any member of the committee would intentionally discriminate against any Senator. The misconception under which I was laboring was due to a misunderstanding on my part. I cheerfully make this statement.

Mr MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am certainly glad to hear the disclaimer of the Senator, and I assure him that I have no feeling whatsoever about the matter. I feel sure that anything he may have said was entirely due to momentary irritation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on page 125, line 18, after the name "Oregon," I move to amend by inserting the name "Washington." I will state that the State of Washington is in the same category as are the States of Oregon and Montana in that regard.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I accept the amendment. It is a reduction of expenses.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator to which district in Washington he refers? There are two districts there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would include both districts—the eastern and the western.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. In connection with the amendment offered by me, in line 22, on page 25, I think the conjunction should be "and" instead of "or." I ask that that change be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be modified in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Montana.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 8, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, God and Father of us all, in whom we live and move and have our being, we rejoice that Thy will is supreme and our destiny is bound up in it.

"Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them Thine."

Teach us Thy ways and help us to bend our wills to Thine. Be with us, we beseech Thee, and bring us safely through this day and all subsequent days in harmony with Thee. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WALKER, for 10 days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. MCKELLAR, for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

WALDO M. POTTER.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, in the title to the bill (H. R. 9622) for the relief of the heirs of Waldo M. Potter, passed last night, the title as printed on the back does not conform to the title in the body of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that the word "providing," in the title on the back of the bill, be stricken out so as to make it conform to the title in the body.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that in the bill H. R. 9622, passed last night, the word "providing," in the title on the back, be stricken out. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HOME EDUCATION.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from the consideration of Senate joint resolution 157, requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Home Education, and that the same be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of Senate joint resolution 157, and that the same be considered in the House, there being a similar resolution reported and on the calendar. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Education.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to invite foreign Governments to appoint delegates and otherwise participate in the Fourth International Congress on Home Education, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., September 22 to 29, 1914, under the auspices of the International Commission on Congresses on Home Education and Parent-Teacher Unions: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted at any time hereafter in connection with said congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether or not the Committee on Foreign Affairs has considered this joint resolution.

Mr. LOGUE. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has considered a House joint resolution of similar tenor that I introduced, and has reported it favorably.

Mr. GARNER. It is the same resolution that came up the other day on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and was objected to?

Mr. LOGUE. Yes; it was objected to by the gentleman from Illinois until he learned what provisions had been made for the entertainment of delegates. I was not then present.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has assured the gentleman from Illinois that the city of Philadelphia was able and had sufficient funds to take charge of the entertainment?

Mr. LOGUE. I have assured the gentleman that the appropriation that has already been made is sufficient to take care of that matter.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I can assure the House, from a recent personal experience, that Philadelphia knows how to, and does most delightfully, entertain her guests.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The similar House resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address delivered in Philadelphia on last Saturday by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered by Dr. FESS in Philadelphia on last Saturday. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's speech be inserted in the RECORD, and that I be permitted to extend my remarks on House bill 11745.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on House bill 11745.

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Is the question of unanimous consent divisible? If so, I ask that the first request be put first.

The SPEAKER. The situation is this: The gentleman from California objects unless he gets in, too. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker. "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute," and I object.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war," approved May 2, 1914.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4441. An act to extend the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 592), authorizing assignment of reclamation homestead entries, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 265), authorizing the issuance of patents on reclamation homestead entries to lands in the Flathead irrigation project, Montana.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. This being Calendar Wednesday, the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8428, with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter pending before the committee is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr GARRETT].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And mail a copy thereof to the secretary of state of the State in which said election is to be or has been held.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is to strike out of line 23, page 8, the following words:

And deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election if such opponents and their addresses are known.

As stated yesterday, this might require even hundreds of duplicates to be sent. The purpose of the amendment is to continue the publicity, but to direct a copy to be sent to the secretary of state of each State in which the election is to be or has been held, where each candidate can readily obtain it without any trouble, whereas the other is so burdensome that it would be almost impossible to comply with it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the secretary of state should refuse to receive this copy, then what would happen? This is a penal offense, so far as the candidate is concerned, if he does not do such a thing. We have no authority to require the secretary of state to receive the copy. Suppose he does not receive it?

Mr. RAKER. I am not so sure; I have not gone into the legal features of it; but I am not so sure but that the secretary of state would, under the law, be required to receive this paper.

Mr. MANN. That official may agree to receive it, but I do not see where we have any authority in Congress to require a State official to do or not to do anything of the sort. We might prohibit them from doing things, but we can not require them to do it.

Mr. RAKER. But there are many instances where Congress passes a law and the various State officials do and must comply with, because Congress has the power to pass the law. As an instance, in a criminal proceeding we direct that a justice of the peace may hold preliminary examination of a man who is arrested and charged with an offense made punishable by Federal statute.

Mr. MANN. May, but we can not require him to do it.

Mr. RAKER. It is done and done repeatedly. Men are bound over from the justice of the peace, and frequently a justice of the peace holds a preliminary examination, and if sufficient evidence appears, he certifies it and sends it up to the Federal district attorney or grand jury.

Mr. MANN. I do not know of any law that a justice of the peace shall hold a preliminary examination for a Federal offense. There may be such authority. We may confer authority on an officer of the State, but how can we require an officer of the State to do something when we do not even offer to pay him for it?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Illinois knows that the act of Congress confers upon a justice of the peace or a committing magistrate the power to hold a preliminary examination for offenses against the Federal statute.

Mr. MANN. If there be such a case—and I do not say there is not—I do not know it. We confer authority on commissioners to hold preliminary examination, because they are Government officials.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say it is the practice, and as district attorney I have participated and had men bound over to the Federal grand jury, and I have not the slightest doubt that if a magistrate refuses the superior court would compel him to hold the examination. This is a provision where the Congress has the power to make the regulations.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I do not understand that the gentleman's amendment proposes to confer any additional powers on the various secretaries of state, but that his amendment relates to the conduct of the candidate for Congress, requiring that he shall file his report at some other place in his State.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; and while I am in favor of the statement being made public, and I think it ought to be, yet I believe the burden is so great under the provisions of the bill, where it may run from 1 to 500, that if the candidate files the statement with the secretary of state, as the law provides, he will be doing everything that ought to be done. We ought not to put too much of the burden upon him, but still have publicity of his expenditures.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, of course the Congress ought not to do a useless thing.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For a question; certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I think that the committee would like to hear the gentleman's amendment read. There are many here who were not here on Wednesday last.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean my amendment?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. I request that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 23, after the word "part," strike out the language down to and including the word "known" in line 25, as follows: "and deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election if such opponents and their addresses are known."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to discuss my amendment. I rose to discuss the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] as a substitute for my amendment. As I was saying, the Congress ought not to do a useless thing. In my judgment, the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California would be a very useless thing. If it is not an impotent thing, Mr. Chairman, then it is a mixing of governmental powers. I do not know whether every State in the Union has an official designated as the secretary of state. I presume each State has, but I have no doubt that the duties of those officials in the various States differ very widely. The duties of the secretary of state in my State may be entirely different from the duties of that official in the State of California; but whatever his duties may be, he is a State official. This is a Federal act. The Federal Government can not add anything to the duties of the State officials. It ought not to be able to add anything to the duties of the State officials; and unless the secretary of state be compelled to receive this, then it is useless to have it filed with that official. This Congress can not compel him to receive it. The amendment makes no provision for paying him any fees for receiving it. It makes no provision for adding to the compensation of the secretary of state of the various States. It does not even make a provision for the furnishing to him of a docket upon which to keep the record of the statements he receives.

If the amendment has potency, it is dangerous, because it brings about a mixing of the powers of the States and of the Federal Government. If it is useless, it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee is probably correct when he says that Congress can not add to the duties of a State official, but Congress can add to the powers of a State official, and often has done so. It confers powers on the clerks of court for the purposes of naturalization. It confers authority on justices of the peace for the purpose of preliminary examination. So far as I know, none of these officials has ever refused to act in the capacity so conferred upon him, and I doubt whether he ever will. It is hardly necessary to discuss for the purposes of the amendment of the gentleman from California whether or not the secretary of state could be compelled to receive this document. I am inclined to think that he could not be so compelled. But whether or not that be a fact, I think there is no question but that he would receive the document and would place it upon file. As I understood the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], it does not say that the candidate may not file the document, but must mail it to the secretary of state. Am I correct?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. He must simply mail it to the secretary of state. I have no doubt the secretary of state in each instance would place it upon file.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let us suppose that in this loose way the statement should be sent to the secretary of state. This provides not only in cases of nomination but in cases of election. The secretary of state has no responsibility in connection with it at all; that is, no official responsibility. It merely goes into his office in a loose way, just like it might be sent to me or to the gentleman from Iowa. There is no requirement that he shall make it public. He might make public that which he chose to make public; he might throw away that which he did not want to preserve. I am sure the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] sees the danger that might lurk in a proposition of this sort.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is a duplicate that will be on file here with the Clerk of this House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then there is no necessity for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Nobody would take chances in changing it, I think, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But there is no penalty attached to any action of the secretary of state in that regard.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think there is any penalty attached to the acts of the Clerk of this House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is one of his duties as Clerk of the House, of course. If he failed in the discharge of that, he would fail in the discharge of his official duty, because that is a part of his official duty. But it is not the part of the official duty, and would not be made so by the amendment of the gentleman from California, of any secretary of state to pay attention to any statement of the expenditures sought to be reached by the amendment. I can see that in times of great partisan struggle and bitterness, such as very frequently have swept this country and which occur in every State almost every time there is an election, it would be a dangerous thing to put such matters in the hands of a person charged with no responsibility and having no legal liability in connection with their use and treatment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can see no possible danger arising as is supposed by the gentleman from Tennessee. As I have stated before, there will be a copy on file in another place, and nobody will venture to change or alter or mutilate the document to which reference has been made. On the contrary, I am sure the secretary of state would place it on file and offer to anyone access to it or an opportunity to copy it. Now, when these statements are so filed with the secretary of state, in my own State at least, the reporters naturally look to see what is contained in them. They are published and made public in a way that they would not be if they were merely on file here in Washington. The great object to be obtained by this bill is a knowledge by the general public of what the expenses of a candidate are, and I think this knowledge can reach the public much better by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], which, while it does confer some additional powers upon the various secretaries of state, does not undertake to prescribe any of their duties.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly said that I would, as one member of the committee reporting this bill, gladly accept suggestions of any gentleman which would improve the bill. I still adhere to that statement. I believe the language as written in the bill when reported carries the best thought, the best means of giving actual publicity, that has been suggested. I am opposed to the substitute offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I am not in favor of writing into this law any provision which can not be enforced. I believe the measure would merit, to some extent, the criticism which has been recently made against it by an unauthorized man, as I believe, if we should put this language into the bill. Obviously, we have no power to compel secretaries of state to receive and file these papers. And while it may be true, and possibly is true, that a secretary of state here and there, or possibly in most States, would receive them, others might not receive them, and hence we would have a law in force in one State which was not in force in another State. We would be absolutely helpless to enforce compliance with the provision we write into it, and for that reason, and for other reasons so well stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I am opposed to the substitute.

And now while I am on the floor, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. RAKER. If the purpose is accomplished, namely, that the candidate send a copy or a duplicate of his statement to the secretary of state, can it be conceivable that any secretary of state in this Union that is in favor of publicity of campaign expenses and purity of elections would throw into the wastebasket and prohibit the newspapers and the opponents of a candidate from receiving a copy of that statement in order that the public might know the true situation of what has been done in the primary election, both before and after?

Mr. RUCKER. Now, the gentleman can answer that quite as well as I can. It is a mere matter of speculation either way. I have answered it according to my conviction. I have suggested to the gentleman from California and to this House, or, at least, the committee has, a better means of giving publicity where the people are most concerned to have publicity than the thought suggested in the substitute offered by him.

I want to say one word in reference to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] to strike out certain language in the bill. I repeat that I believe the bill as written is better with that language in it than it will be if it is taken out. But I also believe I know when I am whipped, and, strange to say, I believe the majority of the Members here do not like the language in the bill. Some criticize it because they say it gives the opponent an unfair advantage, which I think is not well taken, because the opponent must comply with the same law. Others say it humiliates a candidate for Congress or for the United States Senate to require the exchange of statements of expenditures in a campaign between candidates, and would be irksome and offensive to them. That I do not conceive to be good reasoning; but after all I believe, from expressions we had here last Wednesday, that a majority of this House is opposed to the language which your committee reported, and in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

I want now to say again that I believe the thought expressed in the bill as reported is a correct one. I believe the time will come when this House will write that or similar language into this or a similar bill. But to-day you are not prepared to do it. I do not intend to contend against the judgment of my neighbors and friends here, who are as zealous, no doubt, as I am, and therefore I shall offer no further objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH and Mr. PROUTY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Missouri be given 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to a letter which doubtless he and every other Member of the House received this morning from the National Popular Government League, in which it is said there are four jokers in this bill. If the gentleman has a few moments to spare, I wish he would call attention to those four.

Mr. RUCKER. I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to this matter.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I would be glad if the gentleman would read them and answer them in his own way, if it is not too much trouble.

Mr. RUCKER. I will do so.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Thank you.

Mr. RUCKER. The query propounded by the gentleman at least offers a justification for my noticing an article which at this time I had thought it wise not to notice. The circular referred to did not reach me through the mails, but after coming upon the floor of the House a Member of the House, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] kindly gave me a copy which he had. For the first time I saw the circular on the letter head of "The National Popular Government League" after I entered this Chamber. I notice as officers, executive committees, committees on legislative reform, advisory council, finance committee, and so forth, the names of a great many distinguished citizens of the United States, many of them Senators of the United States and several Members of the House, and other gentleman prominent for the part they have played in American politics and in national affairs. I happen to know that very many of these gentlemen were consulted, indeed that they helped to frame the law as it now stands on the statute book, of which this is an amendment and codification, and I believe that those gentlemen are still heartily in favor of the pending legislation.

The executive secretary, one Mr. Judson King, I believe, sent this circular out broadcast without, as I believe, discussing it with the distinguished gentlemen who constitute that National Popular Government League. I believe that elsewhere than in this House this very document will be referred to, possibly to-day. In deference to the distinguished gentlemen whose names are mentioned here, I feel that I ought at least to suspend until they have had an opportunity to exonerate themselves from connection with this infamous paper.

One gentleman, who is a member of this league, told me to-day that he would resign from the league. He is a Member of the House. He said he would resign from membership in the league because of the unauthorized use of his name by the secretary. The secretary has betrayed his ignorance as well as his venom in this communication.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I received one of the circulars that the gentleman refers to, and I was very much surprised at the contents. I notice that the president of this National Popular Government League is a Member of the Senate of the United States. I can not believe that any Senator expected to have that sort of a statement sent out in regard to the legislation pending before the House of Representatives. The gentleman from Missouri, I suppose, has no information on the subject?

Mr. RUCKER. I have no information whatever, but I have just remarked that I believe gentlemen will elsewhere than in this Chamber answer this circular to-day. I shall have something further to say about it, but I believe for the present I shall wait until I can see what is said in another body.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Senator named there is now in Europe, and not in this country at all?

Mr. RUCKER. I understand so. I believe that Senators and Members are heartily in favor of this legislation. I know that they have voted for the legislation as it passed, and have advocated it everywhere. With the indulgence of the House, I shall perhaps take occasion to say something with reference to this matter in the near future.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. To interrupt the gentleman a moment, do I understand that the gentleman will make some answer to these four statements that are called jokers before the bill passes the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given two minutes more. I just want to get this information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] be given two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. I did not want to discuss it now, but it first criticizes that phrase "in two or more States." It is well known why that phrase is used, and some of the very gentlemen whose names appear on this circular, I am sure, favor that language in this bill. The second proposition is that primary elections are exempt. This warrants me in repeating that the gentleman who wrote the circular betrays his ignorance and stupidity, because the fact that the bill does involve primary elections has been the fruitful source of most of the controversy that has arisen on the floor of the House. Third, it says a candidate is limited in the amount he can expend, but "interests" may back up his campaign by expending a large amount of money. I have not read it all. That is not true. Every candidate is required under oath to state every contribution made to him and from whom it is received.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I would like to have the opinion of the author of the bill as to how much influence a Member of Congress ought to allow a propaganda that circularizes Members of Congress to have upon his vote. I know the gentleman who wrote the letter very well, and he is a nice fellow; but that does not mean anything to me.

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio says that he is a nice fellow, because I have had my serious doubts about it.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, now pending. I have been amused at the discussion that has arisen on this amendment as to the grave constitutional questions involved in the power of Congress to prescribe duties and fix responsibilities for State officers. If the gentlemen that have raised that question had taken the pains to read the amendment, they would have seen how far they are from the question involved. The amendment provides, "and mail a copy thereof to the secretary of state in which said election is to be or has been held."

This is a duty that is fixed upon the man that is a candidate. Is there any Member of Congress who doubts the power of Congress to prescribe what the candidate shall do? Now, the purpose of this amendment and the thing to be reached by it is very wholesome. All of you that have had experience in these matters know that the report filed with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate is not available to a man who wants to use it. If a controversy arises in my district as to whether I have made improper expenditures or unreasonable expenditures, before the party can really go and investigate that question he must send to Washington and get a copy of the report here, and he is not really entitled to a copy of it unless he pays for it. It may be a long time before he can get a copy back, and then the circumstances and facts that he wishes to investigate have been covered up. Now, all that this amendment prescribes is that the candidate himself shall put into the hands of a public official, which is the secretary of state, the report, which may then be seen by everybody in the State interested in it.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not entirely within the power of every State, by legislation, to require the candidate to file a statement with the secretary of state or with the county official or with anyone else?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes; I concede that the States have power to pass laws as stringent and more stringent than the one passed by Congress. But the Congress of the United States is undertaking to legislate on this subject, and why should it shirk a part of the duties and responsibilities by saying that we will leave that for the State to take care of?

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the law of the gentleman's State require the candidate to file a statement similar to this?

Mr. PROUTY. It requires the filing of a statement after election but not before.

Mr. MILLER. I thought that the State of Iowa was one of the vanguard States in matters of this kind.

Mr. PROUTY. Oh, I have no time to yield to that kind of an insinuation. That is not what I am discussing. I am discussing the constitutional question involved here that has been raised so seriously by some gentlemen, for what purpose I do not know. There is no constitutional question here involved. It requires a man who is a candidate to send a copy of his report to the secretary of state of the State in which the election is held.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Suppose a contumacious or partisan secretary of state should lock up the reports in his safe and not give them out.

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose he did, you would be no worse off than if you did not have the law provided in this amendment. You are not doing any harm if you send it to him.

Mr. RUCKER. Might you not do harm in this way: That the States would be slow to pass a law to compel the very thing which I think they ought and will do if we enact this law.

Mr. PROUTY. I can not conceive of the idea that a State legislature would be slow in passing a law simply because Congress had undertaken to pass some act on the same subject.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kansas put a supposititious question, and I will follow. Suppose the secretary of state should lock up some of the reports and give others out?

Mr. PROUTY. That has nothing to do with this amendment at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Could not the gentleman see where an officer having no responsibility by law might do that thing?

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose he locked up all of them. It would be no worse than if you had never sent them at all.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FLOOD of Virginia). The gentleman from Iowa has the floor, and he has yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee for a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor and the gentleman from Tennessee has no parliamentary right to ask a question, because he did not address the Chair. They all do that way, and it is not parliamentary procedure. The gentleman from Iowa is treating the subject intelligently, and we want to hear him, and this is a violation of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is out of order.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. All that I rose to say in substance was that the gentlemen who raised the constitutional question certainly have not read the amendment, and if they say that they have read it and insist on it as a great constitutional question, they are interposing that objection not because they feel that it is unconstitutional but because they have some other reason for opposing it. Now, I confess that I can see no possible harm that can result from requiring the candidate to put into some public repository within his own State his campaign expenses and the things that he has done instead of sending them to Washington, where they are not accessible to men who want to ascertain the facts about them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PROUTY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would not the refusal of the secretary of state, if he did refuse, simply insure the document being made public by its being sent down here to Washington?

Mr. PROUTY. I am not attempting to discuss that question. We can not know what everybody would do in every State. My guess on that would be of no assistance, but I do know that Congress has the power to require a candidate for the House of Representatives and a candidate for the Senate of the United States to mail a copy of his report to the secretary of state, and I believe it would be a wholesome thing.

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman from Indiana begins I would like to see if I can not come to some agreement on the time for debate on this amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and the substitute for the amendment close in 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that would be enough.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, pending that, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if an amendment is in order to the Raker amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending and a substitute to that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. MANN. An amendment to the substitute is in order, Mr. Chairman, under the rules. The rules specifically state that there may be one amendment to a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and the substitute thereto and the amendment to the substitute close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment and the substitute and any amendment to the substitute close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. If it fails, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I am in favor of publicity. I would have enjoyed seeing this great committee bring a bill to this House that had teeth in it, that had some real genuine vitality in it. I would like to have seen it contain a section or a provision which would have prevented a Member from being sworn in as a Member of this House or as a Member of the other body who has failed to comply with the provisions of this law; and in my judgment we will never get publicity, we will never get candidates for the House of Representatives and candidates for the Senate to live up to the law, until a provision of that kind is written into a bill. When a candidate for the House of Representatives knows that there is hanging over his head a doubt, even if he is elected, as to whether or not he is finally going to be sworn in and receive his seat, he will then adhere and adhere religiously to the law. But I believe that the proposed bill is a vast improvement over the old publicity law. I am not criticizing the old law. I recognize that when this principle started it was new and untried, dealing with a dual system of Government, the Federal Government on the one hand and the various State governments on the other. For one I am in favor of publicity. What possible harm can come to us because of giving to our opponents an itemized statement of our expenses? I have listened and listened intently to every argument that has been advanced, and no man has yet advanced to my mind a logical argument against it. I believed in the first instance that it would have been better if the committee had required the candidate at home to have published these expenses in a local paper, but on reflection I doubt that. In my judgment what the people want is publicity and when we are required to give to our opponents an itemized sworn statement of our expenses 15 days before the election, I take it that our opponents will discuss those expenses from every stump on which they speak. Articles appearing in newspapers are read with not very much interest and are rather quickly forgotten, but when the candidate for the House or the Senate of the United States is being challenged before his constituents every day and every night and their attention is called to the fact that this or that candidate has exceeded the law or failed to comply with its provisions you will then get publicity, and you will never get it until you get it in that way.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question.

Mr. TAGGART. Would it not be better if it was made the duty of the clerk of the United States court to receive these statements?

Mr. RUCKER. Which court?

Mr. TAGGART. The clerk of the court of the district in which the candidate is running, and then have him file the statement?

Mr. COX. I do not. After giving this subject as much thought as I can, I am firmly in favor of the doctrine of publicity. And you will never get it in any other way, that has been yet proposed, equal to the provision contained in this bill. We have been trying for, lo, these many years to throw the limelight on these matters, and have we been sincere and conscientious about it? For one, I am not a brave man at all, but I am not at all afraid to give to my opponent 15 days before the election an itemized sworn account of every penny I have put into the campaign. I am perfectly willing that he should go on the stump day and night and challenge me upon that proposition; and in return, I will be challenging his expense account.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, having been unalterably opposed to the enactment of any national law regulating the primaries which are governed by the State laws, I wish now to make a hasty résumé of the statutes as we find them and of these amendments, and endeavor in a few minutes to explain the effect of these amendments on the general law, on the primary-election law. The bill now being presented is a codification of the various laws relating to publicity of campaign contributions. When this proposition was first submitted to the House of Representatives it did not contemplate the regulation of the primary elections in the various States of the Union, because there is no national primary-election law. The various States in the Union have State laws regulating primary elections. When the proposition was first submitted and before the law was enacted regulating the publicity of campaign contributions, when the amendment was offered to include primaries, the gentleman who now has charge of the bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], opposed it to the extent of defeating it by a majority of the votes of the Democratic Members of the House, coincided in by some of the Republicans, and the primary-election feature was eliminated at that time. It went to the Senate, and the Senate then sought to incorporate primary elections——

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I do.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman will recall even at the time that I was seeking to prevent that on the floor of the House I declared myself then heartily in favor of it at all times.

Mr. WATKINS. Well, let us see.

Mr. RUCKER. I had other reasons for opposing the amendment at that particular time.

Mr. WATKINS. I am not criticizing or finding fault with the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand that.

Mr. WATKINS. Because the views he expressed at the time exactly coincide with my idea in reference to the matter, and I was quoting the gentleman as authority for the position which I have taken——

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman correctly quotes what I did; I make no point on that, but I had reasons for it at the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Louisiana further yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I simply want to quote the language to show why I made the statement which I did; and if I was in error as his being opposed to it, I want to show his language as the reason why I made the statement, because I believed I was making a correct statement. The gentleman from Missouri said:

> We on this side—

Meaning the Democratic side—

> will not dodge the issue. We earnestly favor the publicity of campaign contributions, but we are unalterably opposed to force bills and Federal supervision of elections.

And that is the amendment which he was antagonizing at the time. Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, the Senator from Mississippi, made a similar statement opposing this measure in the Senate. We fought over the question for almost an entire session of Congress, being opposed all the time by the leading Democratic Members, and the opposition was based upon amendment numbered 10 to the Constitution of the United States:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes in the codification of the law on the subject matter to require that the candidates serve notice upon their opponents, with duplicate statements, showing the amount, the items, and dates of contributions and their expenditures. I am opposed to that, because I believe it is interfering, as it applies both to primary and general elections, with the rights of the States, and interfering by giving authority to the United States courts to interpret the State laws regulating primary elections.

The amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee offers has for its object the striking out of that language and I am, for the same reasons stated, in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. However, the gentleman from California has moved as a substitute that the notice in lieu of being given to the opponent shall be given through the instrumentality of the secretary's office—through the secretary of state—and for him to make the publication. Now, Mr. Chairman, if that is done it is in compliance with many of the State laws on this same subject matter, the State of Louisiana being one of them, and if we can not get the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee in striking out this language requiring notice to be served upon the opponents, then I would be in favor of the amendment offered as a substitute by the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I desire to offer to the Raker substitute is simply to insert, after the word "mail," the words "or registered mail."

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do.

Mr. RAKER. The next section provides that mail or delivery means registered mail.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I withdraw the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RUCKER. That proposition is fully covered.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I withdraw the amendment. To my mind, the question of desirability and the certainty of securing of reforms by means of publicity is a matter upon which we must all agree. The only question in the mind of any of us is whether a so-called publicity statute will actually secure the publicity. If it secures publicity, it is bound to secure the reforms we desire and which are needed. The only question, to my mind, in reference to the Raker substitute was not as to what any secretary of state would do with the statement after he shall have received it, but whether or not the candidate would file the statement. If it should be simply sent by mail, there might be a question as to proof whether he sent it or not; but if he sends it by registered mail, as I am now informed the statute later provides, then there is mighty little question but what the secretary of state will secure it, and if the secretary of state receives it I do not believe there is any real question in the mind of any of us as to what the secretary of state will do with it. If the secretary of state receives it, files it, and holds it open to the public, then we are going to secure a greater amount of publicity, we must all agree, than would be the case if it were simply placed on file in some office in Washington, 1,000 miles away from the scene of the contest. Inasmuch as it is securing a greater amount of publicity and is not subject to the criticism which must arise from the provision proposed in the bill which makes each candidate a sort of spy and watchdog over his opponent, but leaves it open to the public, who want this wider publicity, I am in favor of the Raker amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear all of the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri about the Popular Government League. I understand, however, that he takes exception to the tone of a communication from the secretary of that organization.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I take no exception. I think the secretary did an unauthorized act. I think the league should repudiate his action.

Mr. KEATING. I am a member of the Popular Government League. I have not had an opportunity to read this communication, and I do not desire to read it until after I have made this statement. I take it for granted that the secretary of the league when he addressed Congress addressed it in a proper fashion. If he has not done so he should be criticized, and I am sure I will not object to any such criticism which may be offered by the gentleman from Missouri or anyone else.

But so long as the secretary proceeds in a proper manner he is carrying out the objects of the league. The league was formed for the purpose of advancing the cause of direct legislation, the initiative and referendum, publicity in the matter of campaign contributions, and kindred objects. We held a convention here something like a year ago, and Mr. King was elected executive secretary. Now, it stands to reason that it is impossible for an executive secretary to consult with every member of the league. We are compelled from the very nature of things to place a great deal of power in Mr. King's hands, and we placed that power in his hands because we had confidence in him. Mr. King had been interested in this kind of work for a number of years. He had gained some reputation as the result of that work, and we felt that in intrusting him with the duty of watching measures of this kind which might be pending in Congress and before the various State legislatures we were selecting the right kind of a man for a most important job.

Now, his duty was to look for "jokers" in legislation of this kind. That is the reason we placed him where he is, and he was well within his rights as secretary, to my mind, when he undertook to state to this Congress on behalf of the organization that he felt that certain amendments should be offered to this bill.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. KEATING. If you will pardon me just a moment until I finish my statement. If I have time I will yield.

But, as I have said before, those suggestions should be offered in a proper fashion. Of course when Senator OWEN, who I believe is the president of the organization, is in Washington Mr. King, as I understand it, is constantly in touch with him. There are other gentlemen here whose names escape me at the moment who constitute an executive committee. I believe a majority of that committee are residents of the city of Washington. It is to be taken for granted that Mr. King will keep in touch with those gentlemen and ascertain their views.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman express the belief that he did do it?

Mr. KEATING. I can not do that in the absence of definite information.

Mr. RUCKER. In the absence of any information?

Mr. KEATING. I will not say that I have no information. The only thing I know is that Mr. King told me he was going to offer certain suggestions looking to amendments, and he specifically mentioned the striking out of the words "in two or more States." And I told Mr. King that so far as that amendment was concerned I heartily approved it, and I hoped it would be adopted by this House.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman believe that if Mr. King was acting in good faith he might, even if Senator OWEN is across the water, have consulted with Senator NORRIS, of the executive committee? Does he not think he might have been courteous enough to have suggested it to some member of the committee that has this bill in charge? Does he not think it better to have told the truth than to have lied about it?

Mr. KEATING. I am not taking it for granted that Mr. King lied about it.

Mr. RUCKER. I am taking it for granted that he did.

Mr. KEATING. That is a question between the gentleman and Mr. King.

Mr. RUCKER. I have not the honor of the gentleman's acquaintance, but I would be glad to have him call on me.

Mr. KEATING. This thing of calling a man a liar on the floor of this House and then suggesting that he call on you does not impress me.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not care whether the gentleman is impressed or not. No man can impugn my motives.

Mr. KEATING. I did not impugn your motives.

Mr. RUCKER. But you are indorsing Mr. King.

Mr. KEATING. I do not indorse Mr. King. I am not "indorsing" or "defending" anyone. The RECORD will show whom I indorse. I have tried to make a clear statement.

Mr. RUCKER. I hope I have not said anything offensive to the gentleman.

Mr. KEATING. You have not. I trust I have not said anything offensive to the gentleman from Missouri, for nothing was further from my thoughts. I want this House simply to understand that Mr. King had well-defined duties in connection with this bill. It was his duty as executive secretary of the Popular Government League to scrutinize this bill, and if he felt amendments should be offered he was authorized to present such amendments as to him seemed proper to Congress.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption now?

Mr. KEATING. My time has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am very strongly opposed to the substitute as offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. The object of this bill is to secure publicity where publicity will be of value to insure purity in elections. It certainly is not to entangle elections and candidacies with a lot of unnecessary and valueless requirements. If it be required of the candidate that he file or mail a copy of his campaign expenditures to the secretary of state, that requirement will result in one of two things. In a State where there is a State law requiring such statements to be filed with the secretary of state—and I assume that a majority of the States now have such a law, and that all will soon have such a law—it will result simply in repetition and confusion, and absolutely no useful purpose can be served.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this kind of a situation has arisen in a State. The attorney general of that State has ruled that Members of Congress and Senators are not subject to the State act; that the Federal Government alone can say when and where they shall file their statements. Upon that ruling I understand one secretary of state declined to file an expense account of a Member of Congress.

Mr. MILLER. I would not care to enter into a legal controversy with the legal adviser cited by the gentleman from Arkansas, but unless there is something unusual and extraordinary in the statute it certainly does apply, and any State can require a candidate for Congress to file with the secretary of state an expense account.

Mr. WINGO. I did not express any opinion concerning the secretary of state's opinion. I simply called attention to the confusion that would arise if his contention is well founded.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; if it is short.

Mr. RAKER. Is there any doubt in the gentleman's mind that Congress has the power to direct a candidate to deliver a duplicate to his opponent, either before or after the election?

Mr. MILLER. Not at all.

Mr. RAKER. If that is true, can there be any doubt of the right of Congress to compel a Member to mail a copy to the secretary of state?

Mr. MILLER. Without question Congress can compel a candidate to mail a copy to every Tom, Dick, and Harry in the United States; to the coroner, if you like, and to the sheriff, if you like, and to the justice of the peace, if you like. But Congress can not make the secretary of state receive it or put it on file or keep it or show it to anybody.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOUSTON). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I will not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MILLER. It is not a fact that Congress lacks the power to require the candidate to mail the statement, but that when mailed what good purpose will be served?

The second contention that I desire to call to the attention of the House is this very one that the secretary of state may or may not receive it. Very likely he will not keep it on file for any extended period of time; may not keep it where it will be public; can not be compelled to have a repository in his office for it. No person could compel him to show it to him if he went there to see it.

While we have power, therefore, to compel the candidate to mail the statement, we have no authority, and we should not have any, to compel any useful purpose to be subserved by it after it gets into the office of the secretary of state. So that it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is wholly inadvisable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, we are all after publicity of campaign contributions. That is the aim of this legislation, of course—publicity. Whether or not these lines in this provision which require the giving of a duplicate to your opponents for the nomination will produce the kind of publicity that we want is certainly a material question. I suppose that this refers, of course, to the candidates within one's own party who are against one for the nomination.

Now, I suggest that in a Democratic district, we will say, how much publicity will be produced in a campaign for the nomination for a Democratic position in this House by a candidate giving to his associate Democrats a copy of his expense account? How much publicity will be produced in a Republican district among delegates, for instance, to the last Chicago national convention, giving to each of those opponents a copy of the expense account? After the primary is over the fight is over, and the opponent that does not get up and support his opponent's nomination is at once blackballed out of the party. He is at once an outcast, a traitor, and it is not the place where the publicity or where the expense account ought to be deposited in order to promote publicity.

I would like to see it filed in some place publicly. I do not care whether it is filed with the secretary of state or with the clerk of the Federal court; but this provision, in my opinion, is not effective.

Now, under our laws, for instance, a man becomes your opponent. If some voter scratches the name of a printed candidate off of the ballot and writes the name of John Jones there as a candidate, if he gets only one vote or two votes in the district, every one who gets such a vote in that way is your opponent. Now, on whom have you to serve it? I say it is ineffective, and not the kind of a provision that we want.

So far as the constitutional provisions here are concerned, I do not think there is any more use in going wild here about constitutional provisions as to State laws than there is about going wild over this letter that has been received from the secretary of the National Popular Government League. I have absolute faith in the sincerity of the chairman of this committee, and I do not approve of the word "fake" used in this letter, so far as it may tend to question his sincerity. I believe in the chairman's sincerity. But I want to say on the floor of this House that I have absolute faith in the sincerity and in the honesty and integrity of the gentleman whose name was signed to that letter, Mr. Judson King. He is a personal friend of mine and one whom I honor.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman think he ever read this bill?

Mr. BRYAN. I think he did.

Mr. RUCKER. If he did, he is either an ignoramus or a fool, because he expressly says primaries are exempted.

Mr. BRYAN. He is right. Primaries are excluded for this reason, that the law says that the party which conducts the one-State primary does not make a report. Take the contest in the Dyer district, for instance, in Missouri, and let a primary campaign of that kind be conducted by a Missouri campaign committee, and they make no report whatever. The committee is especially exempted from report, and thus this bill does not apply.

Mr. RUCKER. They do make a report under the State law.

Mr. BRYAN. I am talking about this law, and so was Mr. King.

Mr. RUCKER. This law never was designed to require any committees in a State to make a report.

Mr. BRYAN. With all due credit to the gentleman for his sincerity, I repeat that is one of the vital criticisms of this bill, that the State committee managing a Congressman's campaign in a State does not have to make any report whatever, and that lets out all these primaries. I am not going to have a national campaign committee manage my campaign. My campaign committee is out in Seattle, and therefore your bill lets primaries out; it only concerns national committees and individual candidates.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman would be in favor of having all congressional committees and county and township committees make a report?

Mr. BRYAN. I am in favor of having all congressional and senatorial committees handling the campaign of a candidate for Congress or of a candidate for the Senate report, the same as the Congressman or the Senator himself, whether a one-State committee or a two or more States committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have my amendment reported and considered as pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] asks unanimous consent to have his amendment reported and considered as pending. Is it pending?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes; I think the House will agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this an amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. It is one that I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I think the House will agree to it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment to what?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Let the Clerk read it. Then the gentleman will see what it is.

Mr. RUCKER. There is already an amendment, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute pending.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I obtained unanimous consent to have the Clerk read it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending to the substitute.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought there was.

The CHAIRMAN. That was withdrawn.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand it, this is simply read for information.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma:

"Page 8, line 25, at the end of the line add 'and he shall list and itemize all the falsehoods, prevarications, and lies he has invented, started, uttered, told, or printed against, about, or concerning his opponents, or either of them.'"

[Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment, because it would require too much of detail, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. MANN. On this side of the House we have no objection to it. Let the other side of the House vote on it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] in the nature of a substitute.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 30, noes 42.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 50, noes 20.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the action of the committee in adopting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], I move to amend, on page 9, line 21, by striking out all of line 21 after the word "part" down to the end of line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr RUCKER:
"Page 9, lines 21 and 22, after the word 'part,' in line 21, strike out the words 'and deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election if known.'"

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I present the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER:
"Page 12, line 26, after the word 'newspapers,' strike out the words 'and distributing letters, circulars, and posters.'"

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words on this amendment. As the law now stands, any amount of money may be expended for distributing letters, circulars, or posters without any accounting for it. The former part of the bill, in lines 24 and 25, permits the candidate to expend all that may be necessary to make himself known over the district, and to every voter in the district, for stationery and postage, writing and printing; but I believe this provision ought to be eliminated from the bill. Under these words there is no limit to the amount that a man can expend in a campaign. A candidate may have a hundred cards printed. He may employ a hundred men to circulate them, giving a man one card and paying his traveling expenses and a four-in-hand to take that card to some one in the adjoining town, and under this bill that is a legitimate expense and does not have to be accounted for. He may have a thousand posters, and he may employ a hundred men to travel over that district at $5 a day and found, with an automobile or four-in-hand, to deliver those posters or circulars, and no accounting is necessary. Now, if you are going to have a campaign-publicity bill, if you are going to put men on an equal footing, and say that a man shall not buy his election, why should you put into the bill provisions that legalize those things that have been done in the past in the most vicious manner for the purpose of corrupting the electorate?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. If your amendment is agreed to, will that prevent a candidate for Congress sending letters through the mail?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no. The provisions in lines 22 to 24 permit him to send through the mails all the letters, circulars, and printed matter that he desires; but this provision that I move to strike out says that he may distribute letters, circulars, and posters. Now, that distribution may be made in any way. You may put a man on a railroad train and send him all over the district, and pay him five or ten dollars a day, and no limitation on it. As I stated a moment ago, it legalizes a method that has been deplored and frowned upon for years—that of hiring men to go over a district to hand out cards, circulars, and posters to individuals, and, as a matter of fact, practically to buy the vote of the man you employ to deliver these things. Now, I am in favor of a bill with some teeth in it. If you compel a candidate to publish in his statement the number of men employed and the amount of money paid to them for distributing his letters, cards, and posters, that will be all right. Then he has to come within the limit of the bill, $5,000, or the amount provided by the statute of the State.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I believe the language sought to be stricken out by his amendment might allow a candidate to do what this bill seeks to prevent. Therefore, I have no objection at all to the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. All right. Vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, on page 13, line 4, I move to strike out all of the paragraph after the word "expense."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 4, after the word "expense," strike out the words "and need not be shown in the statement herein required to be filed."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if my amendment is adopted, it will strike out the words that have been read. The paragraph of which the words are a part provides that in making up his statement it is not necessary for the candidate to include certain things, and it goes further and says that they may not be shown and entered in his expense account. Now, let us see. If you let the present language of the bill stand it would mean that he could spend several thousand dollars for postage, several thousand dollars for telegraph and telephone, if he wanted to, several thousand dollars for printing, thousands of dollars for workers, and yet he would not have to make any statement showing that he had made the expenditure of that sum. I take it that the language used is for the purpose of fixing the limitation and not for suppressing anything.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. I think I catch the thought of the gentleman, and I want to make this suggestion: Would not the idea of the gentleman be better presented if instead of striking this language out you make it read that it must be shown in the statement filed here?

Mr. WINGO. I think that is better.

Mr. RUCKER. I would have no objection to that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to modify my amendment by striking out the words "and need not," in line 4, and inserting the words "but shall."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Arkansas modifies his amendment to read as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 4, strike out the words "and need not" and insert the words "but shall."

Mr. BOOHER and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. BOOHER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has the floor.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Arkansas has had five minutes and is not entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would be perfectly willing, except for the inconvenience, to strike out the entire provision, and would much rather strike it out than to insert the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas. The only purpose of the proviso is to except certain expenses from the limitation fixed—first, the question as to the constitutional authority possibly, which I do not pay much attention to, in reference to the payment of assessments required by the State; and the other is the matter of convenience.

No man living can keep a truthful account of the postage paid for campaign expenses. No man living can keep a truthful account of the stationery that he buys and uses for campaign expenses. No man living can keep a truthful account of his personal expenses during a campaign that are chargeable to campaign expenses. It was necessary either to exempt these things from the amount required or to legally require a man to lie about it. Now, you can take your choice. It is not possible to keep an account of each 2-cent stamp used for campaign purposes. It is not possible to distinguish in the purchase of stationery between each sheet that is used by us, for instance, for official purposes or private purposes and that for campaign purposes. It is not possible to distinguish between the personal expenses of a candidate which are caused by his being a candidate as apart from his ordinary living expenses. That is the reason for making these exemptions in the first place.

Now, having stricken out all the provision in regard to the distribution of letters and circulars and posters which were not required to be accounted for and which were not required to be in the limit, they are now included in the limit of cost and hence are required to be accounted for and they are easy to keep track of. There is nothing left to the proviso except that. We may pass a law requiring every candidate for Congress to lie about his expenses, but he can not comply with the provisions truthfully; it is not within the capacity of the human mind.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas. I can not understand why, if the proviso is to stand in this bill, the amendment should be adopted. We exempt the travel expense, subsistence, stationery, postage, writing or printing, other than in newspapers, the assessment levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, telegraph and telephone service, and say that they shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this section.

If they are not to be regarded as expenditures, and we are not to be charged with them, then why insert in the law a provision that you must make a statement of them? It seems to me the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is right when he says that amendment will simply provide for something with which it is utterly impossible to comply. The section is well enough as it stands, without the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and I sincerely hope that it will not be adopted.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], and I ask unanimous consent that I may read sections 29 and 30 of the direct-primary law of the State of California.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to put a concrete proposition to the gentleman. This exempts from the limit, and will provide for a report, if the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas be adopted, of expenses of a candidate while engaged in his campaign, his ordinary traveling expenses. It will be possible, perhaps, but it will be a great deal of trouble for a man to keep up with his actual railroad fares. Let me ask the gentleman this question. Let us say that the gentleman is off on a campaign away from home for perhaps a month, and he takes his meals at a hotel. Those meals are more costly than they would be if taken at home. How is he going to get in any truthful, accurate way the difference between what his actual food expenses would be and his food expenses while he is out traveling? That is a practical question. How is he going to charge his account?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that I will state that it has always been customary and it is the law for a public official, a man who is away from his business, to be allowed his traveling expenses or subsistence, and he pays whatever it is. It would be the same thing in this. When a man is away from his home, if he goes 10 or 15 miles and gets his meals, and pays perhaps 50 cents each for them, that is an expense for that campaign, and he does not draw any distinction between what it would be at home and what he has to pay outside.

I want to read now the law of California, sections 29 and 30 of the direct-primary law, approved June 16, 1913:

CAMPAIGN EXPENSES.

SEC. 29. No candidate for nomination to any elective office, including that of United States Senator in Congress, shall directly or indirectly pay, expend, or contribute any money or other valuable thing, or promise so to do, except for lawful expenses. Lawful expenses as used in this section are limited to expenses for the following purposes only:

1. For the candidate's official filing fee.
2. For the preparing, printing, circulating, and verifying of nomination papers.
3. For the candidate's personal traveling expenses.
4. For rent and necessary furnishing of halls or rooms, during such candidacy, for public meetings, or for committee headquarters.
5. For payment of speakers and musicians at public meetings and their necessary traveling expenses.
6. For printing and distribution of pamphlets, circulars, newspapers, cards, handbills, posters, and announcements relative to candidates or political issues or principles.
7. For his share of the reasonable compensation of challengers at the polls.
8. For making canvasses of voters.
9. For clerk hire.
10. For conveying infirm or disabled voters to and from the polls.
11. For postage, expressage, telegraphing, and telephoning relative to candidacy.

Can gentlemen conceive of any other expense than those named in that law, if the law be complied with, to provide for publicity? Ought anyone to go any further? Certainly not.

Section 30 provides, as follows:

STATEMENT OF EXPENSES.

SEC. 30. Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination to any elective office, including that of United States Senator in Congress, shall make in duplicate, within 15 days after the primary election, a verified statement, setting forth each and every sum of money contributed, disbursed, expended, or promised by him, and, to the best of his knowledge and belief, by any and every other person or association of persons in his behalf wholly or partly in endeavoring to secure his nomination. This statement must show in detail all moneys paid, loaned, contributed, or otherwise furnished to him directly or indirectly in aid of his election, together with the name of the person or persons from whom such moneys were received; and must also show in detail, under each of the subdivisions of section 29 of this act, all moneys contributed, loaned, or expended by him directly or indirectly, by himself or through any other person, in aid of his election, together with the name of the person or persons to whom such moneys were paid or disbursed. Such statement must set forth that the affiant has used all reasonable diligence in its preparation, and that the same is true and is as full and explicit as he is able to make it. Within the time aforesaid the candidate shall file one copy of said statement with the officer with whom his nomination papers were filed, and the other with the recorder of the county or city and county in which he resides, who shall record the same in a book to be kept for that purpose, and to be open to public inspection. No officer shall issue any certificate of nomination to any person until such statement as herein provided has been filed, and no other statement of expenses shall be required except that provided herein, and no fee or charge whatsoever shall be made or collected by any officer herein specified for the filing of such statements or a copy thereof.

The laws of the State of California have proven very wholesome and they have brought about good results.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 11, noes 24. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer another amendment of the same character, on page 12, line 16, to strike out "$5,000" and substitute "$2,500," and in line 19 to strike out "$10,000" and substitute "$5,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 16, strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500," and in line 19 strike out the figures "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$5,000."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not as drastic as one would think at first blush. It would be all right to limit it to $5,000 and $10,000 if it were not for the proviso, and with the proviso it simply means that the limit of $5,000 and $10,000 is on newspaper advertising and such things as that. A candidate does not have to include in the $5,000 any money that he expends in the way of an assessment fee. He does not have to include his personal expenses. He does not have to include stationery and postage and hired workers under guise of circular distributors.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. In making his report to Congress under the present law, which is about the same as this provision in the bill, is it necessary to report his expenses in the way of stamps, stationery, posters, telephone and telegraph expenses?

Mr. WINGO. I included all of that. I do not think that the present law requires you to do anything of the kind.

Mr. GARNER. Let me get the gentleman's construction of it. I know a great many Members of Congress are not reporting expenses for stamps, stationery, telegraph, and telephone—the exceptions made there. Some contend that they ought to be included in the report under the present law, while others say not. The blanks sent out by the Clerk's office would indicate that one should not include anything except what the law requires you to report, such as newspaper advertisements, clerk hire, and so forth.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the present law requires you to report all of those things mentioned. But here is a proposition: Under the present law and under this provision most or the greater part of your expenses are absolutely exempted, and you do not have to account for them. I know one man who expended $19,000, and under the law as it is written—and he is a good lawyer and he did not think he had to account but for $5,000, and I examined it pretty closely and I did not think he transgressed the law—he did not account for the additional $14,000 expended for the things he did not have to account for. He sent a man around the country representing him, distributing circulars, and that man was nothing but a worker for him, but he was all of the time distributing circulars. He had other men to represent him at the polls, and those men were distributing circulars at the polls. If you are going to exclude from the limit the greater part of the expenses, and those things which really are the things that you ought to stop, then why have such a large limit of $10,000 and $5,000? In other words, I think $2,500 is enough for a Member of Congress to expend in advertising that he has to account for.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Some gentlemen in some districts incur more or less expenditures in renting halls for public meetings.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; you do not exempt that.

Mr. RUCKER. That would be part of the $5,000.

Mr. WINGO. Yes

Mr. RUCKER. If they take a party of friends from one town to another and pay their hotel and railroad bills they would have to account for that.

Mr. WINGO. That is the reason why I can not understand why the gentleman does not include the renting of halls in his exemption here, for the rent of halls, public meeting places where everything would be public, is a proper exemption. Why should not that be excluded in preference to circulars and such as that?

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will permit me, this language was framed in the Senate and not in the House.

Mr. WINGO. Framed in the Senate?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; the bulk of it; and some of us were so uneasy for fear there might be a change of heart in some other legislative hall that we were content to leave this as the Senate has written it.

Mr. WINGO. I am not interested in that; I am interested in what we do, and I will let them do what they wish to do.

Mr. RUCKER. But the gentleman will bear in mind—I do not want to consume his time, but I want to suggest—there are Members on the floor of this House, probably here to-day, who insist earnestly that $5,000 is too small a sum to conduct campaigns in their districts in that way for perfectly legitimate expenses.

Mr. WINGO. Under this bill as it is written any man in this House can expend $100,000——

Mr. RUCKER. He might for some purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the House wants to defeat this bill, and I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 22.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers on this.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Fifteen gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in line 15 it says, "regular post offices." What does the gentleman mean by that? I move to strike out the word "regular."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 15, strike out the word "regular."

Mr. RAKER. Would the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the committee, give me his attention for a moment? What is the purpose of putting in the word "regular"? What distinction does that have?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know any more than the ordinary meaning of the word "regular." I believe the gentleman could take it out. It would not hurt the bill now. You can take it out. It will not hurt the bill any.

Mr. WINGO. We have not reached that paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. It is the same paragraph.

Mr. RUCKER. No; it is not the same paragraph.

Mr. RAKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the pending paragraph, to strike out the entire proviso, beginning with line 20, page 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 20, strike out the entire proviso, beginning with line 20, down to and including line 5, page 13.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to just say one more word to the committee and then I am not going to annoy the membership any longer. I hope that nobody who is friendly to this legislation will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, although I do not mean to assail his attitude at all. If this amendment should prevail, there is just one of two alternatives, either we have got to let the Senate write the bill for us, or the friends of publicity murder this bill, one of the two. There is no possibility on earth, we might as well know it, of passing the bill through this Congress which requires candidates for the United States Senate in going over the great areas like the great States of Pennsylvania, New York, Missouri, Arkansas, and all the other States, to keep an itemized account of every expenditure which he makes. The public would lose faith when we proclaim ourselves to be friends of publicity, and men would then have some warrant in denouncing this as fake legislation.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not true one or more of the States the gentleman has named now have State laws requiring candidates for the governor of the State to do that thing which the gentleman has said is impossible, and do not they do it, and is not California one of them?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not believe that any State requires them to keep account of their personal expenditures, and, if there is, I am not responsible for State legislation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania is such a State that requires an itemized expenditure.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not care how many States have it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will yield.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have any gentleman from any State where they have that law say whether it requires them to keep track of the 2-cent stamps they use and the amount of stationery they use.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. For the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that I for one keep an account of 2-cent stamps.

Mr. MANN. And stationery?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. And the stationery, mileage, and money expended in every way.

Mr. MANN. And made a return? It seems——

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say I do not care how rigid this law may be. I believe I have already imposed upon the indulgence of the House to say heretofore that it does not affect me in any way. In the State of Missouri if I expend for nomination and election exceeding $625, I am unworthy of a seat here, because I would be a criminal under that law. But our statute does not require me, when I go from town to town and stop at a lunch counter and hotels, to note down and keep an account of each lunch and each cup of coffee. I believe we are going to a dangerous extent when we ask that it be done.

I do not mean to question the wisdom of the gentleman who offered the amendment, but I tell you we can not possibly pass this bill, and I warn the gentleman now.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. RUCKER. We will be responsible for deliberately killing it by loading it down.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the statute of California I have just read requires all these things as to United States Senators, governors, and everybody.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask a question of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. MANN. Do the returns of the gentleman from California include all the space used in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in publishing his stuff for campaign purposes?

Mr. RAKER. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. MANN. Everybody else does.

Mr. RAKER. I thank the gentleman for the courteous answer.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, just a moment before we vote. The object of the amendment that I have offered is to provide for publicity in fact and not simply in name. The cry is for publicity, and when you offer them publicity they say it is impossible. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says it is impossible for a man to keep a correct expense account. He says that the State laws have not been complied with. It is easy to keep an itemized account of what has been done. I usually buy stamps in $10 blocks. That is the way I did in my personal campaign, and if I wish to carry the stamps with me, I buy them in $1 blocks. I have a book in my pocket like the traveling men carry, and when I buy a ticket I charge it up, and I can take two little books that I have in my desk and tell you to a dime everything I spent when I was a candidate for Congress.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is now a candidate for Congress, is he not?

Mr. WINGO. I will surely be a candidate.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman have his clerk keep an account of his stamps now and the stationery which he uses in writing to his constituents in reference to his candidacy apart from public business?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly. That is a very simple thing to do.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would bring us in a statement of how much he has used in the way of stationery and postage during the last month for political purposes and how much for congressional purposes.

Mr. WINGO. I have not used any for political purposes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not be a candidate for a month without using it.

Mr. WINGO. I shall be a candidate in the fall. I have not written a letter this month in the interest of my candidacy.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has written many. That is what the gentleman carries on a correspondence for.

Mr. WINGO. No; it is not for what I carry on my correspondence. I do not have to run two years at a stretch to get elected in my district. When I got the Democratic nomination last March I was elected, and the only expense I shall have this fall will be in stumping the district with some promising young Republican who wants a little publicity, and I will give it to him.

Mr. MANN. Of course where a man does not have any campaign to carry on it is easy to keep an expense account.

Mr. RUCKER. The House has also fixed the maximum campaign account at $2,500 for Representative and $5,000 for Senator. If we pass this they would have to take care of all the expenses.

Mr. WINGO. I do not believe the Senate should dictate the provisions of this bill. I am not afraid of the United States Senate, as some gentlemen seem to be. I think this House has enough power to write in a bill what it really thinks should be in a bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman believe it is possible to pass the bill if his amendment carries in that form?

Mr. WINGO. I think it is—through the House.

Mr. RUCKER. You think it is possible to make it the law?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know how the Senate or the President feels about it. I have not consulted with either one of them, and shall not.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman know how to vote, then?

Mr. WINGO. I generally vote as I please. But, Mr. Chairman, I think if you really want publicity, if you are in earnest, here is a good chance for you to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. RUCKER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 31.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 25, after the word "subsistence," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLINE). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri what is the object of exempting from the limitation the assessment fee or charge levied by the laws of the State? That is a matter easily ascertained. Why should that be exempted from the report?

Mr. RUCKER. I will state to the gentleman why it was done. I suppose I am not violating any rule of propriety when I state the exact facts. In the State of Maryland Senators are required to be nominated by a primary election, and the law requires the candidates to pay the expenses of holding the primary election. Now, I am reliably informed, and was informed at the time this language was put in this bill, that the late Senator Rayner, the last time he was nominated, had no opposition; but under the law of his State he had to be nominated at a primary election, and, as he was the only candidate, he had to pay the entire expense of the primary, and it cost him about $17,000.

Mr. MANN. Would not that be a very good reason for striking this out and making the State of Maryland have a civilized law on the subject?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know that we can do that.

Mr. MANN. Of course, we can do it.

Mr. RUCKER. If the State of Maryland repeals that law and enacts a reasonable law in its stead, as many States do, and requires an entrance or announcement fee of $100 or $200 fixed by law, it can not corrupt anybody. Therefore we left it exempted.

Mr. MANN. Why was not that included in the limitation? In the case where there was a contest recently in the House, a controversy concerning the seating of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WHALEY], he stated, without knowing that it was a violation of the law that was committed, that he had expended so much money—I think between $4,500 and $5,000—and in addition had paid an assessment to the campaign committee, which the campaign committee had required him to pay, but which was not required under State law, and which raised the amount that he had expended over the $5,000 limit. I did not call the attention of the House to it. I do not know whether anybody on the Committee on Elections had noticed it or not. It was evidently done in good faith; and yet he had violated the law because he had read this provision and assumed that the action of a voluntary political committee requiring him to make an assessment was the action of the committee under the authority of the State, which, of course, it was not.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that, of course, it is within the power of each State to fix an entrance or nomination fee within its own discretion. One State may fix it at $50, or another at $100 or at $500. All candidates must comply with that requirement.

Mr. MANN. The $2,500 limit is a fair limit, and most of the States requiring that give something in return, which candidates do not receive where the requirement——

Mr. RUCKER. The public knows that every candidate must pay that fee when he declares himself a candidate. Therefore there is publicity.

Mr. MANN. It is not a question of publicity, but of limitation.

Mr. RUCKER. That money goes to the State and can not possibly be used for any purpose that anybody will complain of.

Mr. MANN. That does not make any difference. People do not complain of what we use our funds for now.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think it should be charged.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I do.

Mr. GARNER. Is it the gentleman's construction of the present law that such expenditures as those for postage stamps, stationery, posters, telegraph and telephone charges, and such charges as are required under the State statute to be accounted for, are not required to be reported under this law?

Mr. MANN. The law provides that an assessment fee or charge made or levied upon candidates by the State law is not required to be reported, and the stationery account is not required to be reported.

Mr. GARNER. To illustrate, I myself have to make a report within the next 10 days of my campaign expenditures. In our State the law requires a district candidate to pay $1 to each county to get his name on the ticket, provided the executive committee assesses him the $1. Now, various committees have each assessed me $1 to get my name on the ticket. That is done by virtue of a law passed by my State. As I understand it, under the Federal statute that is not necessary to be reported.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not necessary to be reported, although if I am making a report I would report it, as I usually report all expenses, regardless of what the law requires.

Mr. GARNER. The Clerk of the House tells me that some Members follow one policy and some another. I wanted to get the gentleman's construction.

Mr. MANN. A good many Members, I think, report expenses that they are not required to report.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say that in my report of campaign expenses I necessarily include my stationery account and stamps, and all expenses of that sort, because the report I file here must be a duplicate of the one I file with the secretary of state in my State.

Mr. GARNER. But it is not necessary?

Mr. RUCKER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That every statement required by this act shall be verified by oath or affirmation, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths; and the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or to the Secretary of the Senate, or to opposing candidates at their home address, if known, as the case may be, duly stamped and registered, within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing or delivery of any such statement or duplicate thereof under the provisions of this act.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 17, by striking out, after the word "Senate," the words "or to opposing candidates at their home address, if known."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "or to opposing candidates at their home address, if known."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on line 20, by striking out the words "or delivery."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 20, strike out the words "or delivery."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, at the end of line 20, and line 21, I move to strike out the words "or duplicate thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 13, lines 20 and 21, by striking out, after the word "statement" in line 20, the words "or duplicate thereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out the word "regular," in line 15, page 13.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CLINE). The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 15, strike out the word "regular."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the word "regular" ought not to go out. There are branch post offices and other places for mailing which would not come under this definition, and I think the word "regular" should remain in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. What can there be in the "regular"? Is there any distinction in post offices where they receive and register mail, so that a man ought not to be permitted to register his letter containing this statement at any post office where letters are registered? I can not understand what difference there is.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. On that question of regular or irregular I am not quite sure of the meaning of the word "regular" as used in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Are there any irregular post offices?

Mr. MANN. There is one at the House post office. That is not a regular post office.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. There are a great many post offices that do not come under the title "regular" as used here. There are branch post offices and doubtless others that do not handle registered mail.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: This statement must be registered. Can there be any distinction between post offices where letters may be registered?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am not sure that the gentleman's discription would fit. If the word "regular" included every post office where registered mail was handled, there could be no objection to that; but the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge informs me that he is willing that the gentleman's motion shall prevail, and I do not care to oppose his view of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BUTLER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands a division.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The demand for a division came after the Chair had announced the result, and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from California has not been recognized at all. The Chair was attempting to recognize the gentleman from New York, but at that moment there was a division called for.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, is this on the amendment to strike out the word "regular"?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the Chair have the amendment stated from the desk?

Mr. BUTLER. It is on the gentleman's amendment to strike out the word "regular."

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to strike out the word "regular," in line 15, page 13.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. That motion carried——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the motion did not carry. I ask for the regular order. We do not want to strike out the word "regular" here.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The vote has not been taken——

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee is dividing. The Chair announced that the ayes had it, and a division has been asked for We do not want to strike out the word "regular."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and on that a division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 22.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. While this corrupt-practices act is under discussion I should like to present to the House my opinion regarding some recent elections in the Republic of Mexico, and I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman mean by "revising" his remarks?

Mr. BROWN of New York. Under the five-minute rule it is impossible to make an extended address, and I desire to discuss the Mexican elections.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman referred to "revising" his remarks.

Mr. BROWN of New York. I shall be very glad to adopt any suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRYAN. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am in favor of a definite limitation of campaign expenditures. The greater the limitation the better. I am in favor of the widest publicity of such expenditures as are made, and the law should be clear, definite, explicit, and strictly enforced. We all realize, however, that the best protection against improper influences in elections is to be found in a virtuous and intelligent electorate. Therefore I have for many years been in favor of inviting into participation in the affairs of government all intelligent and honest people, without regard to sex. The State which I have the honor to represent upon the floor of this House has for many years granted the right of suffrage to all of its citizens, without regard to sex. We have so prospered politically under that policy that our people are universally favorable to its extension throughout the Nation. I desire to extend my remarks by placing in the RECORD some resolutions adopted by the citizens of Laramie, Wyo., in favor of the adoption of an amendment to the Federal Constitution for woman suffrage.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing a petition in favor of woman suffrage. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The petition is as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of Laramie, Wyo., have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women, as citizens of the United States, be accorded the full right of such citizenship. We congratulate the 4,000,000 women voters who have won their right to the ballot in 10 States, and confidently expect to see 5 more States under the franchise banner after the November elections.

We hereby declare that suffrage for women has become a national as well as a local issue, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to enact Federal legislation which will insure to women political equal rights with men.

We therefore ask the Congress of the United States to proceed without delay in the most feasible and practical manner to remove the barriers which prevent American women from the exercise of full franchise, and to make our country not a Government in which half the people are denied the right of participation, but in truth and reality a democracy.

The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Laramie, Wyo., this 2d day of May, 1914.

MRS. E. H. KNIGHT, Presiding Officer.

Attest:

EVA J. PATCHELL, Secretary.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the statements required by section 9 of this act to be made before nomination and before election shall include the full name and post-office address, if known, of each opponent for nomination or election, as the case may be, together with the name or number of the Federal judicial district in which such opponent resides. And if any person thus named as a candidate for nomination or election to any office referred to in said section 9 shall fail, neglect, or refuse to file any statement therein required, it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, within 30 days after such statement or statements should have been filed, to certify that fact to the district attorney of the United States for the Federal judicial district in which said candidate resides.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for the last line on page 13, which reads:

That the statements required by section 9 of this act to be made before nomination and before election shall include the full name and post-office address, if known, of each opponent for nomination or election, as the case may be, together with the name or number of the Federal judicial district in which such opponent resides.

Mr. RUCKER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that further on in the bill, in the next section, it imposes a certain duty on the Clerk of the House and the Clerk of the Senate to notify the district attorney in whose district the candidate resides, and this is in order to give the clerk that information.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to say that that puts upon the candidate who does not know the law a great many restrictions and requirements and a whole lot of trouble, which will cause, probably, many violations of law, just in order to give information to the Clerk of the House and the Clerk of the Senate. It seems to me that it would be better to let the clerks get the information in some other way.

Mr. RUCKER. What does the gentleman mean by saying that it causes a violation of law?

Mr. BRYAN. It makes a violation of the law more likely.

Mr. RUCKER. There is no probability of this bill becoming a law before the next election this fall. When it does become a law—if it ever does, and I think it will—I think plans have already been devised by which every candidate of every political party will be thoroughly advised of all the provisions of law and furnished with the proper blank.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, the blanks will help some.

Mr. RUCKER. And the law itself will be furnished with them.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Would it be permissible to offer an amendment in the way of a new section following section 11?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as a new section to follow section 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To follow section 11 as a new section:

"That no political committee, under the provisions of this act, shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised in procuring the nomination and election any sum in the aggregate in excess of the amount which it may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise, under the laws of the State in which the election is held, for such Representative in Congress or United States Senator: Provided, That no political committee, for a candidate or candidates for Representative in Congress, shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $5,000 for each such candidate for Representative in Congress, in any campaign for his or their nomination and election; and no political committee, for a candidate or candidates for Senator of the United States, shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $10,000 in any campaign for each such candidate for Senator of the United States in any campaign for his or their nomination and election."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is intended to correspond to a like provision for the campaign alone. It fixes the limit for each Representative at $5,000 and for a Senator at $10,000, and the committee can not expend more than that now provided in each State where there is a limit placed on it, and when there is no limit, then the amount is expressed in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood that the committee had adopted an amendment making the expenditure $2,500 and $5,000. Was the gentleman here when it was adopted?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I voted for it.

Mr. MADDEN. Now the gentleman wants to increase that.

Mr. RAKER. I offered this because there were a good many votes in favor of this when the amendment was adopted. This is a limitation upon the committee. The way it stands now the committee may spend $100,000 for one candidate and a half a million for a candidate for Senator.

This puts a limit on the committee for each candidate in Congress of $5,000 and each United States Senator of $10,000. There is no law on the subject at all, and noticing the temper of the House I thought they would be more apt to take a $10,000 and $5,000 limit than a $5,000 and $2,500 limit.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Is it not a fact that political committees conducting campaigns are spending money for all candidates upon the State ticket as well as the candidate for Congress? How are you going to differentiate and limit the committee in the expenditure of their money? They have a certain amount of money to spend, and that money is expended for all the candidates on the ticket.

Mr. RAKER. Where they can not differentiate, I would not care so much about it—let it go as a general limit. I would not care for that, but where there is no limit at all on a committee, the man may go to a particular committee and contribute $100,000 for his campaign expenses, and that ought to be prohibited. Five thousand dollars is enough for any committee per each candidate for the House and $10,000 per candidate for the Senate. The candidate himself has $2,500 and the Senator $5,000, and under this limitation for a committee, $10,000 and $5,000 is enough for any man to present his claims legitimately before the constituencies of this country.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Does the gentleman understand from the law as we now have it that the candidate for Congress can contribute to a committee in addition to the $2,500 that he can spend for himself, or does the $2,500 conclude the sum total of his expenses?

Mr. RAKER. That is not the question that was asked before, and it is not what I assume to answer. A man may expend $2,500, if the bill should become a law, under this bill. Under the law as it now stands it is $5,000. There is no limitation to a man's friends or anybody else contributing to a campaign committee any sum from $10,000 to $100,000 for his campaign, and that money will be used and no account made of it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. I yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. When the limitation is on the candidate himself, it is easy to require a detailed account of it, but when you put a limitation on a campaign committee, the gentleman must not forget that the committee not only represents the candidates for Congress, but a great many other candidates. How will that committee differentiate as to whether the money is expended for the candidate for Congress or for the candidate for a State or local office on the same ticket with him?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, ought it not to be sufficient, ought it not to be enough expenditure for a man's friends to contribute $5,000 to a campaign committee to expend in behalf of his nomination and election, when they give their best attention and assistance to electing him? Ought his friends or enemies or anyone for any particular interest be able to put $50,000 or $100,000 in the committee's hands for the purpose of electing a particular United States Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to answer that question, but the gentleman does not reach my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from California will be voted down. It is attempting to do what the House has refused to do, namely, to go into the States and seek to control the minor committees of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate shall, on or before the 15th day of January next after any general or special election for Representatives in Congress or Senator of the United States, report to the House and Senate, respectively, the name of each candidate for nomination or election to such office who has filed statements as required by this act, giving his place of residence and the congressional district or State, as the case may be, in which he was such candidate, and the total amount of campaign expenses paid or promised by him or by anyone for him, as shown by such statements; also the name of each candidate for such nomination or election, as shown by the files of his office or otherwise ascertained, whether nominated or elected or not, who has failed, neglected, or refused to file any or all of the statements required by this act, giving his place of residence and the congressional district or State, as the case may be, in which he was such candidate, as shown by said files or otherwise ascertained. The report required by this section shall be printed as a public document.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I understand section 12, it makes it the duty of the Clerk of the House to ascertain every man who has violated the law; that is, who has not filed a statement. What does this mean:

Also the name of each candidate for such nomination or election, as shown by the files of his office or otherwise ascertained, whether nominated or elected or not, who has failed, neglected, or refused to file any or all of the statements required by this act.

Suppose a man does not file a statement at all. Is it the duty of the Clerk of the House to find out who was a candidate in the State of Missouri or in the State of Illinois, whether he was nominated or elected?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will answer that in this way: If the gentleman will read the entire section and the one preceding it he will find that the bill would amend existing law in this way: When we file our statements before nomination, and then before election we are required to state in those statements the name or names of our opponents, and this section requires the Clerk of the House to take notice of the names of those opponents, and then if anybody whose name is thus mentioned fails to comply with the law, he certifies that fact.

Mr. FOSTER. It is done in that way?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes. There is no question about it; it is very clear.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice the report required by this section shall be printed as a public document. Do all of these statements have to be printed as a public document?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, no. This section requires the Clerk, on or before the 15th of January, I believe it is, to make a report to the House. That date was fixed in this way: The law as it now stands gives 30 days after the election within which the last statement may be filed, which would run it up to about the 1st or the 5th of December. At that time the organization of the House is going on, and there is confusion, and then comes very shortly the recess for the Christmas holidays. Therefore, this date was arbitrarily fixed as on or before the 15th day of January when the Clerk must file a statement in the House showing the names of gentlemen who have filed statements and the aggregate amount expended as shown by the statements, and then another page showing those who are candidates who have not filed statements, and I should think three or four pages would be the length of it.

Mr. FOSTER. I should think not in the case of two or three thousand names.

Mr. RUCKER. I might possibly be wrong about that.

Mr. FOSTER. There are 435 Members.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 3, after the word "ascertained," strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "Also the complete report of political committees as defined by this act."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this measure has to do with certain political committees which have jurisdiction over two or more States. To my mind, that very seriously cripples a measure for honest elections; but, more than that, there is no requirement for the publication of these committee reports. It is a vital omission and should be corrected. The Senate in 1912 held a hearing at which something like 4,000 pages of testimony were taken on the elections of 1904 and 1908 which would have been entirely unnecessary and the expense avoided had such a provision as that contemplated in my amendment been in force at that time. When publishing the total expenditures of candidates, why should not the national committees' statements be included and published in this particular document? If any Member of this House undertakes to go to the national committee reports of 1912 he will find it is a Herculean task to locate and systematize them, and that it is impossible to find vital facts, facts of contributions to campaign funds, unless hours are spent in the labor. I feel that my amendment added to this bill would be of great importance, because it would give the publicity that the people want. The movement back of this bill is a demand for the truth, a movement to disclose the influences and forces back of parties and back of candidates, and that movement is wider than many Members here realize. It has come from public enlightenment; it has come from the multiplication of books and papers; it is a great moral wave of repudiation of corruption in politics. It is the mighty power of the trend toward people's rule, and the only way to secure genuine democracy is to have the people know exactly the influences back of candidates and back of political committees. No halfway measure is justified, for there can be no compromise here without a surrender to corrupt influences in government. I believe great good will come in having the national committees' reports published in public documents, and I hope that this amendment will prevail.

Mr. MADDEN. The supposition is that the people are behind the candidates.

Mr KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is a supposition to that effect, but it is a fact that other interests than the people are back of certain candidates.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman name some of them?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The great interests of crooked big business, the railroad interests, the liquor interests, and others have and are attempting to dictate the election of officials who are "supposed" to serve the whole people.

A number of men, who depended for their support upon those interests have been driven from public life, and there are more to follow. There were exposures, for instance in Ohio, and in other States where men high in office were scourged out of public life because of publicity turned upon their alliance with those interests.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Who are the Ohio people?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I was referring to the formerly distinguished Senator from Ohio, who is also a candidate at the present time for reelection, and whose retirement to private life was due to the exposure of certain influences back of him when he was a public official and was supposed to be representing the people.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wondered what interest the Harvester combine is back of—what candidate it is behind.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman always tries to distort facts by bringing in matters——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Which are entirely extraneous.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Two representatives of the Harvester combine were prominent in politics.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that I think that the Harvester interests in support of any candidate should be shown. I am in favor of showing every influence back of parties and back of national committees; and this Harvester influence to which the gentleman referred is not in any way opposing publicity. That is a mighty good test. Let all others meet it as faithfully, and the people will do the rest.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Which one does the gentleman favor—Pinchot or Perkins?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, the gentleman, as usual, distorts the question and brings in an issue which is entirely apart from the proposition. I am arguing for the publishing of the accounts of political committees, to let the people know exactly who and what are back of candidates; and neither Perkins nor Pinchot are candidates for office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 32, noes 30.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. RUCKER and Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania) reported that there were—ayes 38, noes 32. [Applause.]

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That this act shall not be construed to annul or vitiate the laws of any State, not directly in conflict herewith, relating to the nomination or election of candidates for the offices herein named, or to exempt any such candidate from complying with such State laws.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Misosuri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 16, after the end of line 2, by inserting as a new section the following:

"That the words 'Representatives,' and 'Representatives in the Congress,' whenever they occur in this act, shall be held and construed to include and embrace Delegates to the Congress of the United States, and all the provisions of this act shall apply to candidates for Delegates to the Congress of the United States."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I know the House is restless to get through with this bill, and unless some gentleman desires, I will not discuss it at all.

Mr. COX. Does that apply to Resident Commissioners also?

Mr. RUCKER. No; it only applies to Delegates.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That every person who shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "willfully" in line 3, page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, in line 3, by striking out the word "willfully."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the word will not be stricken out. So far as I am concerned, I am not going to yield to that slanderous circular that came here this morning. There is not a lawyer in this House but knows that, after all, no crime can be committed that is not willfully committed, and "willfully" means, from the time the first law book was written down to this time, "intentionally."

Mr. RAKER. I think the word "willfully" ought to go out. The word "knowingly" ought not to be in there.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the word "willfully" in this case mean "intentionally"?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Can a man violate the law without doing it intentionally

Mr. RAKER. No; and therefore the words "to know" belong in there, because in the commission of these crimes there must be some intent.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he ever read a criminal statute in his life that did not qualify it in this way?

Mr. RAKER. Most of them. And it avoids a whole lot of complication in a trial before a jury. If it is out of the statute, it makes it much plainer. If a man violates this law, make him suffer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FESS and Mr. BRITTEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] is recognized.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 17, page 16, by placing a comma after the word "both," in line 6, and add the following:

"That no person being elected a Senator, Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner, shall after his election or appointment, and either before or after he has qualified and during his continuance in office, deliver any lecture or address for pay other than his actual traveling and hotel expenses during the time that Congress is in session."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. It is not germane to the legislation at all.

Mr. BRITTEN. I hope the distinguished chairman of the committee will not make the point of order on this. I am willing to leave the amendment to the House to decide. I realize it is subject to a point of order, but there is no question about the advisability of incorporating in this act something of this kind.

Mr. RUCKER. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Members of the committee, a remark was made by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] awhile ago that I do not think ought to go unchallenged. I deplore more than I can tell you the cycle of thinking that this Nation is in to-day that leads men to speak as if men who had been defeated in contests heretofore have been defeated largely because of crooked practices or bad character.

I hold not the brief of any man mentioned from the State of Ohio, but when anyone will hint that the distinguished gentleman whose name was mentioned is a man subject to bribe or subject to the sordid influence that would prevent his voting upon matters pertaining to the welfare of the Nation as against his own selfish interests I do not think such a statement ought to go without challenge. I know this man that my good friend from Pennsylvania mentions. I know him intimately; and I want here and now, with all the vigor of my protest, to speak against the habit of Members on this floor and elsewhere taking the name of public men in vain and charging them, either specifically or by innuendo, with being men without character. [Applause.]

I do not believe that my friend here, knowing him as I do, and knowing his high standing and character, would for a moment, if he knew the facts, draw his conclusions from the cheap newspapers and also from the magazine that runs the penny-a-liner, and take from these his judgment and here on this floor declare that one of the ablest men now in the State of Ohio that this Nation has known is subject to bribe and controlled by sordid influences.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. It seems to me that the remark ought to be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. FESS. At least unless some definite information is given to support it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. FESS. I know what the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to, and I believe I can give him information that will satisfy him, because, in my opinion, he is a fair-minded man. The source of information that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has drawn his conclusion from is not a correct source, and the gentleman's conclusion is not warranted by the information. I can tell you what had occurred in regard to the thing that the gentleman was mentioning, and I can not stand here as a citizen of the State of Ohio and listen in silence to a man being slandered on this floor without a chance to reply to the slander. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], with all the fervor of a Crusader, takes up the cause of one whose name I did not mention on the floor, but who was so well known to common report that when I indicated, as I did, that he had been scourged out of public life because of his relations with sinister powers in this Government, the gentleman from Ohio knew exactly whom I meant and rose to his defense.

I am willing to admit the gentleman's statement that there is a school of thought in this country that does not hold public men above criticism, a school of thought which he seems to be very much afraid of in this country. You hear a great outcry coming from reactionaries about the injustice of attacks upon public servants who insist upon the divine right of rulers and the doctrine of lese majesty.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to have a little attention paid to the other side of the question. While tories denounce demagogues and others who criticize those holding office when they prostitute their offices to improper purposes, I would like to have a little notice given those who use their respectability and their morality and their high standing among their fellow men for the purpose of defending everything that is false and everything that is evil in our public life. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] knows better than to do what he is doing. He must address the Chair if he wants to interrupt the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can not yield. The gentleman from Ohio had five minutes in which to defend his friend from Ohio.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, there is another school of thought in this country, a school far more dangerous than that which holds up to censure those who conduct themselves dishonorably in public office. I believe that every public official is a public servant, and when he refuses or neglects to serve the interests of the public he should be driven from the place he has discredited. I am in favor of having critics, not only on the floor of this House to denounce the sinister influences of invisible government, but an army of critics all over the Nation, who will watch public officials who are elected to represent them, and if these fail to represent them honorably will denounce them and scourge them from office.

The gentleman from Ohio defends his friend who is a primary candidate for United States Senator on the Republican ticket in the State of Ohio. The gentleman says he can clear the good name of that candidate. Why did he not clear his name when he withdrew under fire, with the absolute certainty of being proven guilty?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He was then assailed, and it was then the proper time for the gentleman from Ohio to clear his name.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can not at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RUCKER. Then I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is proceeding out of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I will make the point of order that there is no quorum present. What is fair for one is fair for the other. The chairman of the committee violates every rule of procedure.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is absolutely in order.

Mr. RUCKER. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. RUCKER. What did the gentleman say about the chairman of the committee?

Mr. DONOVAN. I say that the chairman of the committee violates every rule and is regardless of the proprieties.

Mr. RUCKER. What rule?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be allowed to continue for 10 minutes more. He is giving us a great deal of interesting history.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object,——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has the floor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask that my request for unanimous consent be put, Mr. Chairman. I do not think we ought to withhold from the RECORD these valuable truths that are being distributed. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, has the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] expired, or is he entitled to proceed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that his time be extended.

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he will not extend that request to 15 minutes, giving me 5 minutes to make some remarks on the subject of——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. RUCKER. I made the point of order, Mr. Chairman, merely to induce the gentleman to stop a moment, so that I could ask him a question, but he refused to stop.

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, since he makes a point of my refusal.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not care now to ask the gentleman any question.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to stand here as a Member of this House and listen to strictures upon those who have criticized men in public life. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] defended one whose name was not mentioned. He says he knew the facts that would clear that gentleman's name of any aspersions that had been made upon him. I said, "Why did you not bring them out at the time?" These are not unsupported magazine assertions and statements from newspapers to which I and the gentleman are referring. These are court records. They are to be found in the hearings of the Senate committee. They are to be found in the actions of the ex-Senator himself out in Ohio, who withdrew under a storm of fire because he knew he was guilty and for no other reason whatever. [Applause.]

The matter is directly in line with my amendment, which caused the outbreak from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]—the right of the people to know about the conduct of their Government, the right of the people to have a flashlight turned upon the facts of the conduct of their representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, now I renew my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] has already addressed the committee on this motion, has he not?

Mr. FESS. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may address the committee for 10 minutes and that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] also have 10 minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to object.

Mr. BUTLER. I have waited here three days to vote on this bill, and I object.

Mr. DONOVAN. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the sections be renumbered to correspond to the amendments to the bill. Now, I call attention to the fact that when we read section 3 of the bill it was passed over to be recurred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the sections of the bill be renumbered to correspond to the amendments that have been made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that we recur to section 3 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 3 was passed over, and the gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to it, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 19, after the word "committee," insert "the actual expenses of maintenance of committee headquarters."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Where does this amendment come in?

Mr. GOOD. At the end of line 21, page 3.

Mr. FOSTER. How does it come that we return to this section?

Mr. RUCKER. When we reached section 3 there was some discussion with reference to one provision of it, and we passed it over with unanimous consent to return to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GOOD:

"At the end of line 21, page 3, insert as a new section the following:

"'Any political advertisement contained in any newspaper shall, when published, contain the name of the committee, person, firm, or corporation who has caused the same to be published, and who has paid or agreed to pay for the publication thereof.'"

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is along the line of many of the provisions of the publicity law and of this bill that we are considering. The amendment which I have offered simply provides that when any newspaper publishes a political advertisement, that advertisement shall contain the name of the person or committee that has paid for it or agreed to pay for it. For example, if any corporation desires to defeat a Member of Congress or a Senator, and inserts an advertisement in a newspaper without putting any name to the advertisement, but simply the words "Democratic committee" or "Republican committee" or "Progressive committee," nobody knows who has inserted that advertisement. The public mind is poisoned, but nobody is liable for the publication. The amendment which I have offered simply provides that the person or political party that inserts it and pays for it or agrees to pay for it shall have the name thereof printed at the bottom of the advertisement.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Without a provision such as the gentleman proposes, it is perfectly possible, is it not, for newspapers to print editorials attacking candidates right and left, but if the gentleman's amendment is agreed to, then the name of the writer must be disclosed.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe my amendment would apply to an editorial.

Mr. COX. It ought to.

Mr. GOOD. The editor of the newspaper is supposed to be the author of an editorial, but under the law now, when a political advertisement is printed in a newspaper, the law compels the newspaper to print at the head of that advertisement the words "Political advertisement." Now it is only to those advertisements that this amendment would refer.

Mr. COX. Suppose I write an editorial assailing my opponent, and the editor prints it as an editorial. The ordinary average reader of that paper understands that the editor of the paper has done it. Does not the gentleman think that my name ought to be attached?

Mr. GOOD. We should be able to reach such conditions, but I doubt if such a provision would be germane to this bill.

Mr. COX. I hope it will be. I know of just such instances as that.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to be courteous to the chairman of this committee, and I am not going to say anything that will embarrass him or any Member of the House. I want to call attention to the statement of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], in which he said——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FESS. I refuse to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DONOVAN. I wish to make the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio is not talking to the matter before the committee, which is the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. We have had enough of that.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said he did not use a name that he did use. It is in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio is not discussing the pending amendment. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed in order.

Mr. RAKER. I move that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may have five minutes——

Mr. FESS. Two minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. That the gentleman from Ohio may have two minutes, in which he may say what he pleases.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may have two minutes to proceed as he desires in this discussion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] says that he did not use any name. He certainly did, and it is in the RECORD, and that is why I rise. I should not have risen for any other reason, except that he mentioned the name of a distinguished man.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I did not use the name of J. B. Foraker at first, but I did at last. To resolve all doubts, I say it now. The man I meant was ex-Senator J. B. Foraker, of Ohio.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I can not yield. I will allow the membership of this House to look upon that statement according to its own sense of honor and judgment. I am not standing here supporting any man in Ohio for Senator. One of the candidates for Senator was a student of mine in the university for four years, and he was not the man named. I am not standing here defending a man for Senatorship, but I believe the fairness of this House on both sides will refuse to allow the name of a distinguished man to be brought in in the connection that it has been brought by my friend from Pennsylvania. The facts will come before the people at the proper time. The people probably will decide. The difference between myself and my friend is that he is living upon the evils that he can find in men and the imaginary ones that he can find in candidates. You never heard me speak against the personality of any candidate. I do not have to. I can build my political theory on the virtues of men and not upon the weaknesses of men. If you feel that your political career must depend upon your looking for the spots on the sun and not the good that is in the people, you can go that way, but I will not go with you. I propose to stand for the honor of men, and I certainly will refuse to stand here and listen to a friend maligned without a hearing. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio asked me the question as to whom I referred in a general statement as one of those scourged out of public office, and I answered him. That was the reason the name was brought into the controversy. Now he takes opportunity to make criticisms on my political theories and my attitude on public questions and on officeholders. He says that he looks for the honor and the bright spots, and that I seem to be looking for dishonor and sun spots. I say to you that the gentleman from Ohio, from his statements and vote to-day on the proposition of political committees, is attempting to cover up dishonor instead of looking for honor. [Applause.]

The gentleman is attempting to skin over the ulcers in the body politic; he is attempting to put sticking plaster over evils that are eating out the heart of the Nation in corruption, and criticizes anyone who dares to probe down and see the evils as they actually are. [Applause.]

I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that I, too, am willing to leave to the House to judge as to my attitude on this matter which is under consideration. The gentleman voted against having national committees put contributions and contributors out in the view of the people, and he did it logically and consistently, because he stands against publicity of the conduct of this Government. He does not believe in the people knowing what their representatives are doing, because they might otherwise lose something of the sacredness which he would have halo public men of any kind. I do not believe in that kind of government. I believe that every public official should stand on his merits as a public servant. When he betrays the people and proves a traitor to their interests, when he puts his hand out for bribes, or when his hands are covered with the stain and grime of political corruption, I believe in making that fact known and letting a little sunlight have a chance to prove its wholesome influence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLINE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How long am I entitled to recognition?

The SPEAKER. On what?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to discuss this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. I addressed the Chair and was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was recognized for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I rose and asked for recognition, was recognized, and then asked the Chair how long I was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman simply rose for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the Chair is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. That is the way the Chair recognized the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of gentlemen around me who will sustain me in my statement.

The SPEAKER. In what?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That I rose and was recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman rose and was recognized to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But the Chair is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not mistaken.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Very well. The Chair, of course, is supreme.

The SPEAKER. There can not be any two opinions about it. The gentleman rose and stated that he wanted to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from South Dakota, because the gentleman rose and was recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. He stated he desired to address the Chair upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. He stated he desired to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker has the right to inquire for what purpose a gentleman addresses the Chair, and if the Chair did not even ask that question, he still has that prerogative.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Would I not be entitled to the floor in getting recognition from the Chair when no other gentleman was claiming the floor? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] remained in his seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know anything about what the gentleman from Missouri was doing.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman from South Dakota does not know that either.

The SPEAKER. When a gentleman rises to make a parliamentary inquiry he is not recognized for debate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I did not rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. That is what the gentleman said he rose for.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; the Chair is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. Then what did the gentleman get up for?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I got up to demand recognition, and was given recognition.

The SPEAKER. Did not the gentleman from South Dakota make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. After he got recognition he did, and asked the Chair for how long he was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is entitled to the floor at all, he is entitled to it for one hour.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the point exactly.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the general procedure here—and it has been so ever since I have been a Member of the House—is for the Chair to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill. Certainly the Speaker would not have recognized the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] to have taken the place of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], he being in charge of the bill, and even if the Speaker did recognize the gentleman without stating for what purpose, in the order of procedure ever since I have been a Member of the House the proper person to recognize is the gentleman in charge of the bill. I do not think the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] ought to complain if the Chair insists that he has the right to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Missouri was not seeking recognition.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, he was seeking recognition, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] came here and spoke to him while the Speaker was stating the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman for a minute.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] was entitled to recognition for debate for one hour, inasmuch as the previous question was not moved. The moment the Chair says "The gentleman from South Dakota," he is entitled to that one hour in debate. It is a question of the minutes, and the minutes as taken down by the reporter will decide whether the Chair did recognize the gentleman from South Dakota. The fact that after that he asked for how long he was entitled to the floor has nothing to do with the fact that he was entitled to the floor after he had been recognized in default of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER], that gentleman having forgotten to move the previous question.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts is entirely gratuitous in his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question. Suppose the gentleman from Massachusetts should rise and say, "Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry," and the Speaker should say, "The gentleman from Massachusetts—the gentleman will state it," does the gentleman claim that he is recognized for any other purpose except the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the Reporter to produce the report of what did occur.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to embarrass the Chair. I know the Chair desires and intends to be absolutely fair. I am quite willing to yield the floor and let the gentleman from Missouri move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose, then, to claim the right to debate?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly not; but the gentleman sat in his seat, and the Speaker said, "Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?"

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to decide this question according to what is right. Here is a report of what occurred:

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But it occurred before that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. This is all that has been handed to the Chair.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the Reporter has not furnished the Chair with all of it. I do not wish to delay the House. I am perfectly willing to let the gentleman make his motion.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to announce that the gentleman from Missouri is now upon his feet, and I hope the gentleman from South Dakota will take cognizance of that fact. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am willing to yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to withhold his motion for a moment, as he desires to decide this question according to the right of it.

Mr. RUCKER. At any rate, I understand the gentleman from South Dakota to yield the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Reporter says this is all there is to it:

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How long am I entitled to recognition?
The SPEAKER. On what?
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to discuss the bill.

And then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] chipped in.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Would I have asked the question, "How long am I entitled to recognition?" as a parliamentary inquiry if I had not already been recognized?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but the Reporter says this is the beginning and end of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Reporter is wrong about it.

The SPEAKER. That may possibly be. The Chair was dead sure that they were wrong here the other day about a statement, and the Chair thinks so yet as far as that is concerned.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I certainly would not rise to make a parliamentary inquiry to ascertain how long I was entitled to the floor before I got the floor. Now, the fact was that the Chair said, "Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?" The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] sat in his seat. No gentleman was seeking recognition. I rose, the Chair recognized me, and when I was recognized I submitted a parliamentary inquiry to know how long I was entitled to recognition in order to determine it beyond any question, and that is for one hour. The previous question had not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the gentleman the benefit of the doubt, and he will recognize the gentleman for an hour.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I thank the Speaker, and now I yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. At what stage of the proceedings is a motion to recommit permissible?

The SPEAKER. After the engrossment and third reading; that is the practice. Of course it can be done before if you want to do so, but the practice is to do it that way.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, with instructions to the committee to strike out, in line 16, page 7, the words "in two or more States," and report it back forthwith to the House.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, is it competent for any Member who is not opposed to the bill to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it goes this way: The minority—of course it does not mean a political minority, but the minority of the opposition—has the first right to recognition. If nobody qualifies absolutely, then the Chair tries to find the man who comes nearest to qualifying. Is the gentleman from California opposed to this bill or not?

Mr. RAKER. I am in favor of the bill, but I am opposed to those words, and I would like to get them stricken out if I can.

Mr. RUCKER. That is a question I suggest on which the gentleman could have had a separate vote. It was voted on in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not speaking about the merits of the matter. Unless some gentleman is absolutely opposed to this bill and wants to make the motion to recommit, the gentleman from California comes as near qualifying as anybody would now——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the gentleman's motion.

The SPEAKER. Well, now, the gentleman has not finished and the Clerk has not reported it yet, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman to move the previous question. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit. Will the gentleman from California send the motion to recommit to the Clerk?

Mr. RAKER. I do not have it in writing.

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAKER moves to recommit the bill with instruction to the committee to amend the bill, on page 7, in line 16, by striking out the words "in two or more States" and to report the same back to the House forthwith.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Is there any way to keep gentlemen from speaking to me just at the time when I ought to move the previous question?

The SPEAKER. No; there is no way of preventing that. The gentleman from Missouri moves the previous question.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. While the gentleman from California has the floor is not the gentleman in a position to be recognized?

The SPEAKER. Recognized for what?

Mr. RAKER. After the motion is made, can not the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. Oh, the gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to prior recognition if he gets up. [Laughter.] The Chair is not a mind reader, and can not tell what gentlemen want to do.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Arkansas having been on his feet demanding recognition while the gentleman from Missouri was in his seat, is not the gentleman from Arkansas entitled to recognition?

The SPEAKER. Why, no; the gentleman from California was entitled to prior recognition over the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; but the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Missouri were both in their seats engaged in earnest conversation with their colleagues.

The SPEAKER. Why, the gentleman from California was up claiming the floor. The universal practice is that if the Chair gets a chance he recognizes the gentleman in charge of the bill to expedite the business of the House, and the gentleman from Missouri has made a motion for the previous question.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The basis of the rule being to expedite the business of the House, if the chairman of the committee is negligent and defeats the object of the rule, would he not lose the floor?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to being reprimanded, and will not submit to being reprimanded by the gentleman from Arkansas. I want that understood. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 2.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that no quorum is present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. On the roll call the vote will be on the motion for the previous question, and those in favor of ordering the previous question will vote "yea" and those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 202, nays 12, answered "present" 7, not voting 212, as follows:

The Clerk called the name of Mr. UNDERWOOD, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The previous question on the motion to recommit is ordered. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The previous question having been ordered on the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], that shuts out the amendment that I had to his amendment, so that I have no right to offer it?

The SPEAKER. It shuts out all amendments and all substitutes. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a division

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks for a division. Those in favor of the motion to recommit will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-three gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. The ayes will be seated, and those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Eighty gentlemen have arisen in the negative.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-three gentlemen have arisen—a sufficient number—and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RUCKER Mr. Speaker, I demand the other side.

The SPEAKER. The other side is demanded. Those opposed to taking this vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Ninety-eight gentlemen have arisen in the negative. Thirty-three is a sufficient number, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, may we have the motion reported again?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion to recommit will again be reported.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. QUIN. Does it not take 219?

The SPEAKER. No; it takes a fifth of those present, and so far as the Chair knows——

Mr. QUIN. The RECORD shows 219.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows; but the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] demanded the other side, and the Chair made a count. It is absolutely conclusive.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the motion is to recommit the bill H. R. 8428, with instructions to report the same back——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand this is not a matter open to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is not debating it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON] asked that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to have it reported from the desk.

The SPEAKER. It has gone down to the Reporter's room, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] was trying to help the House along by reading it himself. The gentleman will send it up to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RAKER. I want the Clerk not to read what I scratch out. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. In the meantime the motion has been returned from the Reporter's room, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RAKER moves to recommit the bill, with instructions to the committee to amend the bill on page 7, in line 16, by striking out the words "in two or more States" and to report the same back to the House forthwith.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 102, answered "present" 6, noted present by the Clerk 8, not voting 214, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. FITZGERALD with Mr. FREAR.

Mr. WALKER with Mr. MACDONALD.

Mr. JONES with Mr. CARY.

Mr. POU with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening, at the time when his name was called?

Mr. HELGESEN. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not qualify. The Clerk will note the gentleman, Mr. HELGESEN, "present."

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to be noted as "present."

Mr. HELGESEN. The bells for the yea-and-nay vote rang only once.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman is here now, and because he is here the Chair has a right to note him as "present."

Mr. HELGESEN. I should like to vote.

The SPEAKER. Strange to say, under the rule, the Chair has no right to permit the gentleman to vote, but he has a perfect right to count the gentleman.

Mr. HELGESEN. Do you count me present and not allow me to vote?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the Chair has a perfect right to count the gentleman——

Mr. HELGESEN. Without giving me the right to vote?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The rule prescribes when the gentleman may vote; that is, if he was in the Hall, listening, when his name should have been called, and did not hear it, he is allowed to vote afterwards; otherwise he may not vote; but, strange to say, under the rule, although the Speaker refuses to allow a Member to vote, he may count him "present." That was done last week.

Mr. HELGESEN. But I understood that under the rule there are two bell calls for a yea-and-nay vote; that the bell rings for each call.

The SPEAKER. That is the practice, but there is no rule about it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In justice to the employee who has charge of the ringing of the bells, I will say that I happened to be in my office, and the bell rang twice, and I looked at the signal card, which showed that it was for the yeas and nays, and I came over. I think the gentleman probably did not hear the bell.

Mr. HELGESEN. I heard the same thing, but only once.

Mr. BUTLER. I heard the bells ring, but I did not come over, because I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]. I can not vote, because I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, who is in the hospital, but I desire to be recorded "present."

The SPEAKER. A Member who is paired has a perfect right to vote "present."

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with the Chair on nearly everything, but voting "present" is nothing.

The SPEAKER. Voting "present" helps to make a quorum.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I desire to do.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the gentleman is going to do, because the Chair is going to count the gentleman.

Mr. BRYAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRYAN. After a roll call, the RECORD shows the yeas so many, nays so many, and answering "present" so many. Now, the other day the Chair noted me as "present." Now, I understand that the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN] will be recorded as answering "present."

The SPEAKER. No; that is not the way the gentleman should be recorded; and while the Speaker was not here on the occasion referred to by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN], he is informed that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rose the next morning to correct the Journal and had it corrected, so that it showed that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BROWN], whom the Speaker pro tempore counted, were noted by the Clerk as "present," and that is precisely what will happen in the case of these gentlemen now.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "present."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening when his name was called?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No; but I desire to be recorded as "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote "present," but the Chair will have him noted as "present." The Clerk will note as present the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. LEWIS, and the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. MURRAY; also the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. MADDEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a violation of the rule for Members to gather about the Clerk's desk before the announcement of the vote is made?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. MADDEN. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDEN. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. Trying to get three more Members. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRYAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a minute. The Clerk will note as "present" the gentleman from North Dakota, Mr. HELGESEN, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUTLER, the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. LEWIS, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. MURRAY, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HAUGEN.

Now, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to adjourn carries, what becomes of this roll call? Must we have it all taken over again?

The SPEAKER. It will begin de novo in the morning.

Mr. BRYAN. If we defeat the motion to adjourn and get a few more Members, the roll call will stand?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on this bill and all amendments thereto, and that makes it in order in the morning after the reading of the Journal, and this roll call will have to be gone over again.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Pending a roll call, is it in order to make any other motion until the roll call is finished?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the vote and then put the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RAKER. But we only lack two or three Members.

The SPEAKER. We lack three.

Mr. GARNER. The regular order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It does not take a quorum to adjourn.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a verification of the roll call. The vote is pretty close, I understand.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARNER. The regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to announce the vote. The request of the gentleman from South Dakota is in order after the Chair has announced the vote, if it is a close vote or anywhere in the neighborhood of close.

Mr. RAKER. Another parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. I want to ask if Members who have just come in can be counted "present"?

The SPEAKER. They not only can be, but they will be.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Maryland, Mr. LINTHICUM, has just come in.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have been present here and voted on the roll call.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 104, the nays are 102, present 5, and noted as present 5, making 216—not a quorum—and the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to adjourn is in order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is wrong. The gentleman from South Dakota demanded a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. GARNER. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. How can he demand a recapitulation of the vote when there is no quorum present and nothing is decided?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes that request to ascertain how they have voted and whether there is a quorum.

Mr. GARNER. The record shows that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A verification of the vote might show that there was a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The roll now shows that there are three lacking of a quorum.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Suppose it does not lack any?

The SPEAKER. On the face of it it lacks three of being a quorum. Suppose the recapitulation develops that three Members are present in the House who have not been recorded; the Speaker can count them and in that way we will get a quorum.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Was it permissible at that time, after the statement made by the Speaker, to ask a recapitulation of the vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked a recapitulation before the Speaker announced the vote.

Mr. RAKER. I kept a record of the vote——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not set up a private record as against the official record. The Chair thinks the gentleman from South Dakota is entirely within his rights.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, it is optional with the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair contended when he was on the floor that if the vote were close or a tie—and he was contending that we ought to have a recapitulation when there was a majority of five one way or the other and there was a row about it—and the Chair contends now, or if a vote is reasonably close, within two or three or four or five or six, any gentleman has the right to demand a recapitulation.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUCKER. Is it not always in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Not always.

Mr. RUCKER. When a roll call is not being had?

The SPEAKER. But a roll call was being had.

Mr. RUCKER. But it had been concluded and the result was announced.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the result had not been announced.

Mr. RUCKER. The Speaker did announce the result.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but that was after the gentleman from Missouri had made his motion to adjourn.

Mr. RUCKER. I made it both before and after, if the Chair will pardon me.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] has requested a recapitulation of this vote. Is it not now in order to move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not move to adjourn while a roll call is in process, and the demand for a recapitulation is a part of the roll call.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in justice to my position, that I see Members in the House whom I do not think are recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to give any explanation whatever. The Chair orders a recapitulation. The Clerk will recapitulate the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the vote.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, in the case of recapitulation, can a Member change his vote?

The SPEAKER. He can not.

Mr. LESHER. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the Clerk call my name on the recapitulation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not marked as voting.

Mr. LESHER. I voted.

The SPEAKER. Which way did the gentleman vote?

Mr. LESHER. I voted "no."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will record the name of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LESHER, and he answered "No."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will note the presence of Mr. COVINGTON, of Maryland, and Mr. FERGUSSON, of New Mexico.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. To submit a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Montana, Mr. EVANS, is in the Hall and did not vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the gentleman from Montana is already recorded. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, and he answered "No."

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it has been decided in case of a tie vote that the Speaker could come in to-morrow and vote on this same roll call.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the vote to be a tie?

The SPEAKER. No; the vote is not a tie. The Chair was simply explaining that it has been decided that the Speaker on a tie vote can come in the next day and vote. The Chair thinks that it is a poor ruling. In any event, the Chair has a right to vote on this, whether it be a tie or not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, has the Speaker any higher right to vote where it is not a tie vote—of course, where it is a tie vote, the Speaker is correct; he has a right to vote—but has the Speaker a higher right to vote than any other Member?

The SPEAKER. No; but the Speaker can count himself present to make a quorum. The Chair saw the gentleman from Tennessee himself do that the other day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Speaker can count himself present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to strike out his vote if there is any question about it, and count him as "present." The Speaker's name had not been called——

Mr. RUCKER. I hope that will not be done. The Speaker voted right, and I hope his vote will stay there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the Speaker could vote under the rule that the Speaker was present, listening, and did not hear his name called, and therefore has a right to vote. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The status of the case is that the Speaker has as much right to vote as any Member of the House, whether it is a tie vote or not. As a matter of fact, the Speaker hardly ever votes except upon a tie vote or upon a political measure. The present Speaker always votes on a political measure, and if there ever happened to be a tie vote, of course he would vote. The effort here this evening is to get a quorum, and, temporarily, the Chair will waive the right to vote, except to be counted as "present."

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] made a motion to adjourn. What became of that?

The SPEAKER. It is pending the result of this roll call.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARDNER. I think the Speaker has announced the result of the roll call. I think all that remained to be done was the recapitulation to see whether that result was correctly stated.

The SPEAKER. That is absolutely true, but the Speaker has the absolute right to count any Member who comes in pending this roll call, and note their presence to make a quorum.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Wait a minute. One Speaker counted men out in the cloakrooms as present, and all these rules are made to expedite business, and none of them are made for the purpose of delaying business. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Does the roll call show a quorum to be present?

The SPEAKER. It will in half a minute. [Laughter and applause.] The clerks will note as present Mr. GILMORE of Massachusetts and Mr. KEY of Ohio. On this vote the yeas are 104, the nays are 102, 6 have voted "present," and 9 have been counted by the Speaker as present, making altogether 221, and the motion to recommit carries.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUCKER. I want to know if I may be permitted now to make a report in obedience to the dictates of Mr. Judson King, as voiced by the action of the House a few minutes ago? Mr. Speaker, I can simplify the request. As I understand the announcement, the House has directed that the bill be recommitted with instructions to the committee to report it back forthwith with certain amendments.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that, if the gentleman will suspend for a moment.

Mr. RUCKER. I injected Mr. King's name into it, although he is not a Member, but he seems to have friends here to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]——

Mr. RUCKER. I will wait until that is done with.

The SPEAKER (continuing). Moves to reconsider the vote, and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I move the adoption of that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to reconsider the vote, and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is recognized.

Mr. GARNER. I make the point of order that that motion is not now in order. The basis of that motion is this, that the House has instructed the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress forthwith to report this bill back to the House for passage with a certain amendment.

Now, to entertain a motion to reconsider that vote and lay that on the table is not to facilitate the business in the House, but to delay business in the House, as it would require two roll calls. And after the House has instructed the committee to forthwith report the bill, if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] would refuse to do it, then the Speaker must, in my judgment, under the rule be compelled to lay the bill before the House with the amendment. Moreover, the previous question has been ordered on this bill and all amendments thereto.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield just for a suggestion?

Mr. GARNER. Just a moment. The House has just instructed the committee to report the bill back forthwith with a certain amendment. Now, it does seem to me that the previous question would go to that amendment also. In going to that amendment it is entirely unnecessary to move to reconsider and lay that motion on the table.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. If the motion to recommit and lay that on the table is withdrawn, does the motion that has now carried authorize, and is it the duty of, the committee to report forthwith to the House without any intervening motion?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RAKER. I withdraw the motion to recommit and lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will report it independent of any direction from California.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose the House directs it?

Mr. RUCKER. I yield to that, but not to the individual.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to make a motion?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, and in pursuance of a mandate issued by one Judson King, which intimidated some gentlemen here to-day, your committee takes great pleasure in reporting back to the House the bill H. R. 8428, with an amendment striking out the words "two or more States," in line 16, on page 7, and prays that this House will immediately adopt the bill as amended. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill with the amendment reported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, let us have the amendment reported.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be again reported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. GARRETT of Texas objected.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The question is on the passage of the bill as amended by the amendment reported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia demands a division. The Chair will count. [During the count.] The ayes are 146.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order now to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GARNER. The House is dividing.

The SPEAKER. You can not do it when the House is dividing.

Those opposed will now rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eleven gentlemen have arisen in the negative.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Wait until the result is announced. On this vote the yeas are 146 and the nays are 11.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will withhold a moment, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] wants to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MADDEN. My parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, was this: The House voted to instruct the Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress to report the bill back with an amendment striking out certain language. The question I wanted to ascertain is whether or not the only thing before the House, instead of the passage of the bill, is the adoption of the amendment, and whether or not we voted for the amendment?

The SPEAKER. You voted for the amendment when you voted to recommit The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I make the point of order that that is dilatory, there having been no business transacted since the roll call disclosed a quorum.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS. For the purpose of suggesting that that point is not well taken, because the vote itself shows that a quorum is not present, and the requirement of a quorum being a constitutional provision, the gentleman can not arraign a specific ascertainment by calling it dilatory.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia please state that again?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The vote having been taken, and the vote itself having shown that there is not a quorum present, he can not make the point against it that it is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the motion is dilatory, although the point is made by the gentleman from Virginia that this vote—a stand-up vote—is decisive as to whether a quorum is present or not.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I say that the vote shows that a quorum is not present, and that repels the suggestion that the motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. Frequently gentlemen do not take the trouble to stand up. The point of no quorum is a constitutional right, and the Chair will count, and overrule the point that it is dilatory. [After counting.] One hundred and seventy-four gentlemen are present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 9, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the negative). I voted in the absence of my pair, but I will allow my vote to stand, because I am perfectly satisfied that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], if present, would vote on the same side of the question.

Mr. JOHNSON. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (after having voted in the negative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], under the terms of which I can vote on questions of this kind. Inasmuch as the Senator who made the motion voted against it, I feel no compunction in allowing my vote to stand under the circumstances.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. He is absent on official business. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inquire whether the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Being paired with that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the negative). I voted notwithstanding my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], because I believed that, if present, he would vote the same way I have voted.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I wish also to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. WARREN. I have a very short resolution, passed at a general meeting of the women of Laramie City, the university city of Wyoming, on the subject of woman suffrage. As the State of Wyoming was the first State to adopt woman suffrage, and as this resolution is very short, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of Laramie, Wyo., have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women, as citizens of the United States, be accorded the full right of such citizenship. We congratulate the 4,000,000 women voters who have won their right to the ballot in 10 States, and confidently expect to see 5 more States under the franchise banner after the November elections.

We hereby declare that suffrage for women has become a national as well as a local issue, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to enact Federal legislation which will insure to women political equal rights with men.

We therefore ask the Congress of the United States to proceed without delay, in the most feasible and practical manner, to remove the barriers which prevent American women from the exercise of full franchise, and to make our country not a Government in which half the people are denied the right of participation, but in truth and reality a democracy.

The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Laramie, Wyo., this 2d day of May, 1914.

MRS. E. H. KNIGHT,
Presiding Officer.

ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have here a petition from John P. Irish, a leading and distinguished Democrat of California, on the subject of antitrust legislation, which he requests me to have read to the Senate. It is brief, and I ask that it may be read.

There being no objection, the petition was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

A petition to the United States Senate.

Your petitioner respectfully represents that he is a native American citizen, and availing himself of the right of petition does respectfully protest and petition your honorable body against the following proposed legislation, to wit:

Against impairing the protection of property by depriving the courts of equity jurisdiction and the right to restrain organized violence by injunction.

Against the proposed exemption of members of labor unions from punishment for conspiracy in restraint of trade, a statutory crime for which all others, except farmers' organizations, are penalized.

Against legalizing by Federal statute the picket and boycott as an invasion of the rights of the States by usurpation of their police powers.

The writ of injunction for protection of the rights of property is of equal dignity with the writ of habeas corpus for protection of the rights of person. The limitation of either is a step backward toward the ages of unrestrained tyranny.

I am a Democrat and voted for the candidates who were nominated on the Baltimore platform, which denounced all forms of special privilege. Will the Senate inform the country of any more appalling form of special privilege than permission to one class of citizens, unpunished, to commit a crime for which all others are punished?

As a farmer I resent for my class its inclusion in this nefarious immunity. There is no possible form of organization or cooperation amongst the farmers of this country that can restrain trade or limit or impair the rights of others. American farmers are moral and high-minded. It is largely from their ranks that juries will be drawn to try the classes which are penalized for crimes which such jurors can themselves commit with impunity if you pass this legislation. Can any Member of your honorable body suggest a situation more offensive to a sense of justice, more destructive to the moral foundations of government, or personally more degrading than calling a juror to convict another for a crime he can himself commit without punishment?

The boycott and picket are devices to prevent the employment of free labor and to deprive the employer of the right to manage his own business. They are used to destroy the right of men to work, which is denial of their right to live. They are used to enforce the arbitrary will of organizations that have used gun, bludgeon, and dynamite to deny bread to the living and peaceful burial to the dead.

Cardinal Gibbons has well defined civil liberty to be that condition in which no man is subject to the arbitrary will of another, but in which all are equally subject to the law. Unless you can impeach this definition this legislation now before you will therefore destroy civil liberty by legalizing the arbitrary will of some over all others, and by exempting some from punishment for crime for which all others are penalized, establishing inequality before the law.

In all civilized countries the right to do business is held to be a property right. Other features of proposed legislation reverse this wholesome and necessary conclusion of law, and will in effect outlaw business in this country, deprive it of judicial protection, take from it every right under the Constitution, and strip it naked for the despoiler.

The history of man discloses no tyrant who dared do at a blow what this legislation will do if the Senate enact it into law.

Therefore I respectfully petition the Senate to stand on the side of civil liberty, of legal equality, and the right of free men to live.

JOHN P. IRISH,
1904 Adeline Street, Oakland, Cal.

IMMIGRATION OF INSANE ALIENS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I present a resolution of the Medical Society of the State of New Hampshire on a very important matter relating to the public health. It is brief, and I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the entry of insane and mentally defective immigrants to this country is a menace to the mental health of the Nation, not only in the present, but in succeeding generations; and

Whereas the present immigration laws, although providing for the exclusion of such immigrants, do not provide means for their examination by trained experts nor for effective measures for the return of insane aliens who become inmates of our institutions; and

Whereas these are primarily matters of public health: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Medical Society of the State of New Hampshire, That Congress be urged to provide for the mental examination of arriving immigrants by physicians in the United States Public Health Service especially trained in the diagnosis of insanity and mental defects; to provide adequate facilities for the detention and careful mental examination of all immigrants at large ports of entry; to provide for the detail of American medical officers on vessels bringing immigrants to this country in order that their welfare may be safeguarded and those with mental diseases or defects discovered; to provide for the assumption by the Federal Government of an equitable share of the burden of caring for dependent aliens which is now borne entirely by the States and to provide for the safe and humane return to their own homes of those immigrants whom it is necessary to exclude and of those aliens in our public institutions who desire to return: And be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, duly attested, be sent to the President and the Vice President of the United States, the Secretary of Labor, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, the Commissioner General of Immigration, the chairmen of the Senate and of the House Committees on Immigration, and to each Member of the New Hampshire State delegation in Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5629) for the relief of certain persons who made entry under the provisions of section 6, act of May 29, 1908, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 652) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2518) granting to the town of Nevadaville, Colo., the right to purchase certain lands for the protection of water supply, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 654) thereon.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably the bill (S. 5325) authorizing the county of St. Louis to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between Minnesota and Wisconsin, and I submit a report (No. 653) thereon. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. If he were present he would ask for its immediate consideration, because he is especially interested in it, and for him I ask that it may be considered at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 6066) for the relief of H. G. Godfrey; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 6067) to amend an act to provide for an enlarged homestead, approved June 17, 1910; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 6068) granting an increase of pension to Anna B. Fay; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 6069) granting a pension to C. C. Arnold; and

A bill (S. 6070) granting a pension to J. Barry Lynch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 6071) granting an increase of pension to Oscar Avery; to the Committee on Pensions.

JUDICIAL PROCEDURE.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CATHARINE A. RILEY.

On motion of Mr. McCUMBER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 2452, Sixty-third Congress) granting a pension to Catharine A. Riley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ARTICLE BY SPEAKER CLARK ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, for some days the Senate has had before it the rivers and harbors bill, the consideration of which has not yet been completed, and as bearing upon that bill and especially on that part of it affecting the Mississippi River, I have an article written by the Speaker of the House of Representatives—a very interesting and able article contributed to the North American Review, of some nine pages in length—which I think would be of value to the Senate and the country to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I inquire—I could not hear all the Senator said—from what magazine the article is taken?

Mr. STONE. The North American Review.

Mr. NORRIS. And who is the author?

Mr. STONE. The Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he will not have the article read, so that we can all hear it?

Mr. STONE. I would have no objection to that, except for the consumption of time. It would answer every useful purpose to have it printed without reading?

Mr. KENYON. I ask to have it read, Mr. President.

Mr. STONE. I have merely asked permission to have the article inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the article being read?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Utah does not object to its being inserted in the RECORD, does he?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not object to its being inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, may I ask what this is—an article on the Mississippi River by the Speaker of the House?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have answered that question already, but I will answer it again, since the Senator did not hear. It is an article on the Mississippi River appearing in the North American Review for July of this year, written by Speaker CLARK, of the House of Representatives, and I have asked that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. BURTON. It is an article of some considerable length, I fancy?

Mr. STONE. It is about nine pages.

Mr. BURTON. The request is that it be printed in the RECORD, and not as a document?

Mr. STONE. I have asked that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BURTON. Does not the Senator from Missouri think it would be better to have this article printed as a document rather than to encumber the RECORD with it?

Mr. STONE. I do not think it would encumber the RECORD. It relates directly to one of the most important questions connected with the rivers and harbors bill. I am surprised that there should be any objection or question about granting my request.

Mr. BURTON. I desire the fullest and freest discussion of this subject, and I am not going to object, except that I deprecate the custom of filling the RECORD with articles from magazines and other outside sources.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion? We are now in the midst of the discussion or consideration of the river and harbor bill, and this is an article by the Speaker of the House, who is as familiar with the subject, I presume, as anybody. If it goes into the RECORD it will scarcely reach very many Senators, as they will not have time to read it, and so I suggest that the article be read to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that suggestion is about equivalent to an objection. The Senator ought not to carry his opposition to the river and harbor bill quite to that extent. Of course, if it is necessary to do so, when the bill is taken up I can have the article read into the RECORD, but that is not the course I intended to take. I think it is valuable because of the general information the article contains, and, as its author is the presiding officer of the House of Representatives, I had supposed that no one would object to the request I made or seek to interfere with it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection to the article being read.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no objection to the article whatever. I simply wanted the article read so that we may know what it is.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, that is simply a method of filibustering, and that is why the Senator wishes it read; he wants it read merely to consume time, not to inform the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I may gratify the Senator by having it read, but I do not think this interference is very nice.

Mr. BORAH. I am rather surprised that the Senator discloses his irritability so early in the day.

Mr. STONE. I do not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. BORAH. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. STONE. I can not hear a word the Senator says. I suppose it is very important, but I did not hear it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I regret very much that the Senator from Missouri does not press his request to print this contribution. We who have had something to do with the policy of the Government toward the Mississippi River are anxious for just such information as is contained in the contribution of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. For one, I have decided long ago that the Mississippi River shall be no longer a piecemeal proposition with me. We have had no policy; we have had no results of commensurate importance with the amount of money expended. I hope that this article will be read and that the friends of that improvement will not relax their vigilance, but will make every endeavor to get this contribution printed and to get that river properly improved.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, the article will be read in due time, but for the present I withdraw my request that it be printed by unanimous consent; I shall not ask unanimous consent to have it printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. SMITH of Michigan addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment, please. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] requested the reading of this paper. There was objection to the reading of the paper. The rule of the Senate is when the reading of a paper is called for and objected to the question shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The objection has been withdrawn, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I withdrew the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The objection has been withdrawn. Is there any further objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I renew the request made by the Senator from Missouri that this article be published in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And be printed as a document.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to tell why I renew the request. I particularly stress some things that have just been said by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. We have spent $500,000,000, or will have spent that amount, upon the Panama Canal before we get through with it, and at the very highest stage of efficiency that is expected of it by anybody anywhere it will never amount in importance to the American people to one-tenth of the importance that the Mississippi River will amount to. I think the day will soon dawn—I hope so, at any rate—when the Mississippi River and the problem of the great valley, which includes its tributaries as well, shall be set aside, as the Panama Canal was, as a great national project, and no longer be used to drag in its wake little things of one description or another, and when money will be taken out of the Treasury as rapidly as it can be used for the purpose of solving this great problem; and when bonds will be issued and somebody like Gen. Goethals will be put in command of the great project to carry it through, and the Secretary of the Treasury will be authorized to sell the bonds from time to time and pay him the proceeds as rapidly as he says it is necessary in order to do the great work.

It is no great engineering problem, like the Panama Canal was. I could do it myself if you would give me the money. Anybody understands it. The sole thing is to go and do it. It is a simple idea of jettying, and of leveeing, and here and there of dredging, and here and there of canalizing; that is all.

I renew the request. While I do not agree with the article in every respect, I have read it, and I think it a very valuable contribution to the literature upon this subject; and a subject soon to be before the Senate is this very identical subject.

I therefore renew the request that the article be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I did not understand that the request had been withdrawn. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] asked that it be printed in the RECORD, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] suggested that it be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Missouri afterwards withdrew his request, because he said they were trying to take up time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will ask the Senator from Missouri if he did withdraw his request.

Mr. STONE. I did withdraw it, and I decline to renew it. I will probably have it read in the course of the debate. Fortunately I am not obliged to depend upon the courtesy or discourtesy of others. I can manage in some way to take care of myself.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. No objection having been raised to the request of the Senator, he withdraws it, and now the Senator from Mississippi renews it. Did the Senator from Mississippi ask that the article be printed as a public document also?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I asked that it be printed in the RECORD for the information of Senators, so that they can read it before they come to deal with this question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, several times I have objected to magazine articles being printed in the RECORD; but the Speaker of the House having thought that this matter was of such great importance as to write a magazine article about it, out of compliment to him and deference to his views I shall not object to this article going in. I want to say, however, that if the Speaker of the House, who has the privileges of the floor of the House and the right to give his views on a pending bill before Congress, thinks they are of sufficient importance to make public, I think he could very well take the floor and say what he has to say to his fellow Members, and then it would be in the RECORD in the regular way. Inasmuch as he has contributed to an outside journal, and it has to be gotten in the RECORD in this irregular way, while I think the Speaker himself would not ask this privilege, I have such a high opinion of him and the subject is of such importance that I shall not object to its being either printed or read, or both.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I hope the matter will not be pressed any further. Let us drop it and go on with the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator can not help it.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator from Missouri will have it read. I believe it ought to be read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to hear it myself, not having read it.

Mr. STONE. It will be read, all right.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator will only get it read by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not asking unanimous consent.

Mr. STONE. I know the Senator is not; and I decline to ask it and shall decline to give it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I have made a request for unanimous consent. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. STONE. I object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That settles that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Regular order!

CLAIMS FOR DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on May 13, 1914, I made some remarks before the Committee on Commerce on the subject of the claims of the riparian landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River from Vicksburg down to Baton Rouge. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate by saying it all over again when the proper time comes; but I ask unanimous consent that it be published in the RECORD, so that those Senators who choose to see what the case is may find it there for reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CLAIMS FOR DESTRUCTION OF PROPERTY, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, A SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Which particular amendment will you address yourself to, Senator?

Senator WILLIAMS. The one introduced by me on March 31. I introduced it first as a separate bill, and then as an amendment, and I urge it now as further amended by the suggestions of Mr. Jenkins and the gentlemen who were here.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is, conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes. You will remember that when Mr. Jenkins and the members of the Riparian Landowners' Association were here they suggested a couple of amendments to my amendment, and they informed you of the fact that I had been consulted about them and was willing to accept them. The first amendment includes all the lands in the parish of West Feliciana in the State of Louisiana. My original amendment included only a part of them. The second amendment is a proviso that in adjudicating the claims the court shall permit any party who in the meanwhile has lost his land by foreclosure to intervene, and that in proportioning the damages the court shall give such proportion as they think right and proper to the present owner and the foreclosed owner, but in no event shall the damages exceed the limit fixed in the bill, which is the value of the lands when they were taken.

Senator RANSDELL. The amendment you are considering is the one that was offered on March 31?

Senator WILLIAMS. March 31; yes.

Mr. Chairman, this matter very naturally divides itself into a logical sequence of discussion: First, the evil complained of; second, the cause of it; third, the several possible means of redress; and, fourth, why this particular means of redress selected by me is preferred. Then a notice of the objections that have been made to it, and then a notice of the legislative precedents for the proposed redress.

It is not necessary for me to dwell at any great length upon the evil. The United States Government has adopted the policy of aiding the local authorities in building a continuous line of levees. Of course, as far as the riparian landowners were concerned, a continuous line of levees was never necessary for the protection of the land. The Mississippi Delta, for example, can be protected just as well without any levees in Louisiana, even on the east bank of the river, and the Louisiana east or west bank could be protected just as well if there were no levees along the banks of the Mississippi Delta. Formerly there were a lot of detached levees. This Federal policy of continuous levees was originally determined upon because the object was to keep the river at high flood within its banks, so that there should not be a gradual filling up of the bed of the river, and while the effect of it would be to increase the height of the flood at high water, the ultimate effect of it would be to increase the capacity of the river itself.

In order to answer this navigation purpose, I thought, and I think still, that, regardless of the riparian owners behind, the levees on the east bank of the Mississippi below Vicksburg and between there and Baton Rouge ought to have been built, in order that there might have been a continuous and uninterrupted line of levees approximately equidistant from levee to levee along the whole course of the river erected. I do not believe now that that continuous line of levees would have been for the benefit of the riparian landowners from Vicksburg to Baton Rouge, because there are so many little streams that run out from the hills there with such a volume of water during freshets that there would have had to have been erected a pumping station in order to get the water off of them after it came down. But as far as the national purpose is concerned, it remains that, without a continuous line, shoaling and sand bars have been caused and will continue to be caused by the fact that just at each place, instead of adopting as the bank of the river for high water a line of levees running down approximately equidistant, they have adopted an irregular line of hills, sometimes jutting into the river and sometimes as far back as 10 miles from the river, causing an eddying in and out of the stream, which at each point where spreading and eddying occur forms a sand bar.

The result to these people has been this: That their land and their homes have been dedicated to the bed of the river. The hills back of them have become the Government levee.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is, they are within the banks of the levee?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; the hills being the levee. They are within the high-water and even annual-water banks, the hills constituting the high-water river bank on the east side, they being between the hills and the river. The river commission has adopted the hills as a levee from Vicksburg down to Baton Rouge. The consequence is that whereas even if there had been the old system of levees, they would have suffered from high water some harm at infrequent times, that later, when the levees were completed on both sides of the river, thereby raising the level of the water at times of high flood, they have been subjected to "annual and permanent overflow." And when I use that language, that is not originally my language, that is the language of the Mississippi River Commission, and of the engineers, as well as of these suffering people.

So that, as I said a moment ago, their lands and property have been dedicated by the levee system, taken as a whole, to the bed of the river at every annual high water, dedicated for the public good.

Now, prior to this this country at rare intervals suffered from high water, as every bit of the Mississippi Valley that is alluvial has at times suffered. All the alluvial lands were built up by the river, and could not have been built up by the river except for the fact that the river at some time was higher than the banks, overflowing them and leaving a deposit of sediment. In 1862, in 1882, and in 1828 these lands went under, but they did not go under once in a quarter of a century. When lands in the Yazoo Delta and upon the west bank of the Mississippi River opposite these lands were under water many times these people were raising magnificent crops, from a half a bale to a bale of cotton to the acre, and there was no more prosperous part of Mississippi, as you know, Mr. Chairman, of your own personal knowledge.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Do you know how many thousands of acres are involved in this particular bill?

Senator WILLIAMS. That all appears in the hearing here and in the report of the engineers, but I do not have it at my tongue's end just now. You will find it in the hearing, when other gentlemen were before you, and in the report.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. I read it, but I have forgotten it.

Senator WILLIAMS. You will also find the number of people that have been run out of this country. You will also find this fact: Somebody asked the question if they could not use those lands now for grazing purposes. I need not tell you, who know the configuration of that country between the Walnut Ridge and the Mississippi River, that this is absolutely impossible. It is impossible to get the cattle out when the water comes, owing to the local topography. They are cut off by sluices, sloughs, bayous, and morasses, and the water is deeper back from the river just before you enter upon the rise of the ridge than it is at the river itself, because there, as all along the Mississippi River, the bank nearest the river is the highest because it received the first and heaviest and deepest deposit of sediment. So that the cattle and stock are isolated in case of high water and it is impossible to get them out except with rafts or other floating things. They can not be driven out once the river-front bank is overflowed.

So that the evil complained of is that by this great course of public improvement, which has inured so much to the benefit of the valley at large and of the commerce of the whole country, these people have incidentally suffered a total loss of their property. Well, not a total loss, either, because they can make something out of the timber upon it. But most of the timber left is the sort that grows in water, of course, and most valuable hardwood timbers are killed by the annual overflow. It will kill hardwood timber of most descriptions that are really valuable. The evil is undenied.

The Mississippi River Commission says it is "a most distressing" condition, and it has not once but several times recommended that Congress "take some steps" to give these people relief. Of course, there are several steps that might be taken, and the commission has suggested each in the alternative. In the first place, you might stop the whole levee system, tear down the levees elsewhere to prevent these people from being hurt. That would be absolutely ridiculous and wicked, because the good of the greatest number must prevail, and where it is absolutely necessary that a minority should be sacrificed in carrying out that principle they should be sacrificed.

But the English-speaking race has always compensated those whose interests have been sacrificed for a public purpose, and this has been uniformly done, both in England and here, not because it was an enforceable legal right, but because the magnificent civilization of the race has been built upon the rock of justice.

Building levees for the localities is naturally the next remedy to suggest itself. It was to me. Then I introduced a bill at one time, as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] will remember, to appropriate $350,000 for building the levees along there.

Senator RANSDELL. I think you have a bill pending like that now, have you not?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; but that I have abandoned.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. You mean so as to protect these people you now speak of and put them behind the levees?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; but pending that bill this committee put on at my request a provision on the rivers and harbors bill for a survey and a report. That survey and report settled the question that that method of redress will do these riparian landowners no good, however much benefit it might be to the navigation of the Mississippi River. So that as a redress for this particular evil I have abandoned that, because when the engineers reported they convinced me, as they doubtless convinced you, that that was impracticable, not only because it would not protect the lands without pumping stations, but because the expense would be a great deal more than the entire property behind the levees, at its present value, at any rate, comes to.

Now, I have outlined the evil, and I have indicated while I was outlining it the cause of it, and suggested remedies which will not answer. There is no dispute about either of those things.

The next redress that suggested itself was a suggestion on the part of Judge Taylor, followed up by the Mississippi River Commission, and by the engineer adopting it in his recommendation after this last survey, that these lands might be taken by the United States Government—condemned and taken—because of the fact that they would be useful in furnishing various materials—gravel, willows—for revetment work, and all that sort of thing. Of course my constituents would be perfectly satisfied with that if the committee chose to do it I hardly dare ask that at one fell swoop. I thought I had better confine myself to a method of redress which had behind it precedents; hence the amendment now urged.

Now, I want to say this before I go any further: I deplored these lawsuits, and advised every man in Mississippi who consulted me not to become a partner to them, that they were no good, and that, so far from helping the cause in view, they would prejudice it. I saw, as I thought every good lawyer ought to have seen, that there was no enforceable legal right for these people. A man goes out to war for his country and loses his arm, and the country gives him a pension, but he would have no right to come in and sue the Government to give him a pension. A man goes up here on the Capitol to do some work, in the employ of the United States Government, and in the course of his employment is seriously injured. We make him an appropriation, but he could not go into any court and sue the Government for that appropriation. Judge White's decision in the Jackson case and in the Hughes case is undoubtedly correct. The United States Government in exercising its power to improve navigation can not be held legally liable for consequential damages. So that I do not plant my case upon any legal basis, and never have planted it upon that. I plant it upon the basis of justice and ethics and right, upon precedents that our race on both sides of the water has always furnished and respected. I say that if you organize an army to go and accomplish a great purpose for the Nation, and in the course of the accomplishment of that purpose a soldier's leg or arm is shot off, that there is just as much an obligation on the part of the Government to see that that man does not suffer because of the consequential or incidental damage which he sustained in doing that great work which the Government had a right to make him do for the benefit of the public at large—that there is just as much a moral obligation as if the man did have a legal right enforceable in a court of law, which, of course, he has not. These people have none, either. I want to make that clear, because I believe that the fact that a suit was brought, and that the suit was decided adversely, has, in the minds of the lawyers—and there are a good many lawyers in the Senate—prejudiced this case.

I suppose that is enough to say upon that point. Of course, each one of you will see how that might be dwelt upon in extenso.

There is one other thing before I go into the remedy and the precedents. There are lands in the same situation as these in Tennessee for which Mr. SHIELDS has introduced an amendment, lands in Louisiana, to which attention was called by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and there may be others. The question was asked, Why should not a provision of law, if made applicable to these people between Vicksburg and Bayou Sara, apply to all people who were similarly situated? There is no rational negative reply to that, of course, provided only they are similarly situated. If you are going to give relief to one, it ought to be given to all that are identically situated. But I have an objection to putting those amendments in the same paragraph with this amendment, but no objection to taking care of them in a succeeding and independent paragraph; and that objection I will now state. The point of order will not lie to my amendment, because there was a survey made by the engineers and a recommendation made by the commission, and a foundation was thus laid for putting my amendment, in compliance with the survey and recommendation, upon the bill. But if, for example, the lands suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] were put in the same paragraph, that would vitiate the entire paragraph and render it all subject to the point of order. If followed by another section, including those lands and including those which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has suggested, then if the point of order should be made to that paragraph containing the portion where no survey had been made and no recommendation had been made, even if it went out it would not carry my provision with it. That will be better for me, and it will be better for the other people whom you mention—I mean better for my people and better for the others, because if my amendment passes, then the precedent for all identically situated is established. Then even, all you will have to do is to put on this bill surveys for your section, Senator RANSDELL, and surveys for yours, Senator SHIELDS, and include them in the next bill.

Senator RANSDELL. Will you not please elucidate what you mean by saying that a survey and recommendation have been made?

Senator WILLIAMS. On the last rivers and harbors bill, I obtained an appropriation—this committee gave it to me—for a survey and a report to determine whether it was feasible to levee, and if not, what was the feasible thing to be done, as well as to ascertain the actual situation.

Senator RANSDELL. You refer to the reports made by the Mississippi River Commission under that provision of the act?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; and of the engineer who did the surveying.

Senator RANSDELL. Did that provide any recommendation for damages, or simply a suggestion as to how the levees might be built?

Senator WILLIAMS. Their report, you mean?

Senator RANSDELL. Yes.

Senator WILLIAMS. Or my survey proposition?

Senator RANSDELL. The report made in accordance with your request.

Senator WILLIAMS. The report of the engineer is to the effect that he advises against erecting levees; first, because of the number of watercourses coming out which will require pumping stations to complete the drainage, and secondly, because the value of land protected by levees is less than what the levees would cost, and the river commission makes the recommendation to send to a commission or to the Court of Claims the whole subject matter for the ascertainment of the damage in forwarding the result of that survey. In the first place, the engineer called attention to the previous recommendations of the commission, and the previous recommendations of the commission were either to let these people go into some court—in one of their reports they suggest that there might be a special tribunal created to determine it—a commission—or else that the people be sent into some court, which it thinks could more adequately ascertain and determine what the actual damages were than the Mississippi River Commission itself could.

I at one time introduced a bill here organizing a special commission, but upon second thought it seemed to me that the Court of Claims was already organized with its officials of every description, and that there was no use putting the country to the expense of organizing new and untried special machinery to do that which the existing machinery was perhaps even better adapted to accomplish. Therefore the amendment as I offer it now sends the matter to the Court of Claims for investigation and a finding, conferring jurisdiction for the purpose——

Senator RANSDELL. Senator, perhaps I am a little confused, and I wish you would help me out. Do you refer now to the report made by the Mississippi River Commission in 1910, the one which Mr. Jenkins embodied in his report, or a subsequent one?

Senator WILLIAMS. No; to the last one, chiefly. That of 1910 was made before this, but I had to refer to that of 1910 in a certain sense, because in their last recommendation the Mississippi River Commission refer back to that, and say that they repeat what they had to say then, and reenforced it by the repetition now. I am referring to the last report, which was made subsequent to the report of the engineers upon the last survey, for which $30,000 was appropriated in the last river and harbor bill. I think from about 1888—I am not sure of the year—down to now this commission has been constantly recommending to Congress that something be done for the relief of these people, and referring, to use their own language, to the "distressful" condition in which they have been left, and admitting and asserting that the cause of that distressful condition was the raising of the flood level by the erection of a continuous line of levees, restraining the river within its banks at flood times, and they in their last report and in the previous one, and the engineer, too, in his last report, acquaint you with the fact that these people are "permanently inundated." That is, they have an overflow every year, and must have it, and that the height of the flood will continue to increase as the levees are perfected, and that consequently, so far from expecting any relief from present ills, they may expect to have a worse time.

I want to dwell upon one other thing a moment. It has been alleged as one of the objections to the redress sought that the United States Government is expected to pay these damages, whereas the cause of the damage, to wit, the erection of the levees, was not only the act of the United States but was the act of the State of Louisiana and of the various levee districts along the river; and that therefore there ought to be an apportionment of the damages between all the contributing parties. My answer to that, in the first place, is that apportionment is absolutely impracticable, and there is no way of making it. There is no such thing as a suit jointly against a State and a levee board and the United States Government. And in the second place—and this I want to impress upon you—by the very nature of the case the levee districts must pay a part of these damages if the damages are assessed and paid by the United States. Now, follow me. Already the levee districts have gotten the advantage of the nonerection of levees on this front. These levees, if they had been built from Vicksburg down to Baton Rouge, would have cost a half a million dollars, in round numbers; about that at the very lowest. What would have been the result? Either that half million dollars would have been subtracted from the work which has been done elsewhere, and the levees elsewhere could not have been carried to their present height, or else, if they had been carried to their present height, the amount appropriated by Congress would have had to be increased a half a million dollars, and if the amount appropriated by Congress had been increased a half a million dollars, then the contributions of the levee districts, which must maintain a certain proportion to the national appropriation, would have been increased share and share alike. If the Government continues to avoid the expense of building the levees down there, the people on other parts of the river in levee districts will continue to enjoy the benefit of this saving of half a million dollars, and even when we make an appropriation for damages to these people of mine the others will all continue to enjoy the difference between the sum which ought to be assessed and paid to my constituents as damages and the half million dollars needful for first construction on levees, besides the largest amount for annual upkeep and some revetment work, while paying, as levee districts, in taxes their share of the increased levee expenditure. If those levees from Vicksburg to Baton Rouge were built to-morrow, and were added to the appropriation in this bill, or if, without increasing the amount of the appropriation, the amount of their cost of construction were taken from the amount appropriated for levees elsewhere, you see at once that these people elsewhere—I, in the Yazoo Delta, others in Arkansas, and you in lower Louisiana—would have to do one of two things—either increase our proportionate contributions to the common levee construction fund or else suffer by not having the work done which we expected to be done. If you pay these damages, which would be less than the cost of levees, then the Yazoo levee district, the Mississippi levee districts, the Louisiana levee districts, and the Arkansas levee districts will have to pay their share of it, because the United States Government, in pursuing the policy of helping those who help themselves and helping them in proportion as they help themselves, requires their appropriations to increase with its own. And if this amount is increased to a given amount ultimately through the judgments of the Court of Claims—say, a quarter of a million dollars—those people must pay their share of that quarter of a million dollars, practically and consequentially.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. This bill does not provide for a proportionate contribution by the levee districts.

Senator WILLIAMS. I know that; but the Mississippi River Commission insists upon it, and it has been the uniform course and will, I assume, continue to be the practice. So far as I know, the Federal Government never built a levee for anybody where there was nobody helping. Where the people never would tax themselves, the Government has refused uniformly to build for them, and I understand that to be the hitherto fixed policy of the Mississippi River Commission.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Do you understand that that has been the policy of the Government in reference to damages for lands destroyed or injured?

Senator WILLIAMS. No; I do not, not in the way of requiring a direct contributing appropriation for damages; but if those appropriations were carried upon an appropriation bill, and through the Court of Claims the Government had to pay it, finally Congress would have to make the appropriation to meet the judgment of the Court of Claims, and that would be done as a part of a river and harbor appropriation, to which all levee districts contribute proportionately with the Government.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Would that follow unless the bill you are now arguing for provided for a contribution on the part of the several levee districts toward the payment of any judgment of the Court of Claims?

Senator WILLIAMS. It would follow with practical necessity, and as a necessary practical consequence, as I see it and have tried to demonstrate, because the appropriations to pay the amount for which the Court of Claims found judgment would be made upon the rivers and harbors appropriation bill.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Yes; but would we not be confronted then by the suggestion that this bill authorizes a suit for the ascertainment of damages against the United States, and that therefore the Court of Claims having found against the Government, the Government itself ought to appropriate all the money?

Senator WILLIAMS. There is no doubt about that; but when the Government had appropriated the money, it would have appropriated it as a part of the rivers and harbors expenses, and it would thereby have added that much to the bill of that year, and that practically and necessarily would force these levee districts to raise their proportionate share of the addition that had been made. As a matter of law, of course, it does not hold any levee district responsible. I am speaking of the practical and even necessary consequences of the increased appropriations.

So much for that. Another answer to the objection that there is a double construction of the levees is that, while that is true, there is a single ownership, management, and control, and that is in the United States Government now. If the Mississippi levee district, for example, Mr. Chairman, chose to cut the levees on its front—were to come to the absurd conclusion that it was better for the people there not to have a levee—of course the United States Government would not permit it to do so. The United States Government would say, "You may conclude that doing away with these levees from Greenville to Vicksburg is for your benefit as landowners, but we are improving the navigation of the Mississippi River. What we are doing is done with two purposes: First, to improve the navigation, and, secondly, to unhamper, unshackle, and free the commerce of the valley and the commerce crossing the valley from the destructive interruptions by floods," which, by the way, is a very much greater reason for what they are doing with regard to the levees, and what the Government has been doing, than the mere improvement of navigation itself by the deepening of the channel. I say this because when these great destructive overflows come they go over the railroads; they go over the dirt roads; they go over the towns and factories and freight yards and everything else; and they just put a stop to all interstate commerce within and across the Valley of the Mississippi, within the area of the flood, that is.

So much for that. The control, the ownership, and management of the levees is now single and is the control and management of the Federal Government. Something has been said, and a suggestion has been made, that perhaps this committee might report out a separate bill instead of making this a provision upon the rivers and harbors bill.

Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against that course for a very patent reason that any man who ever served in the House of Representatives understands, and I want especially to call your attention, Senator RANSDELL, because you have served there, to this: If this is reported as a separate bill, it goes in the House upon the Union Calendar and there is practically no way of ever getting it off except by unanimous consent. The Union Calendar in the House is just like Rule IX in the Senate. When a bill goes on the calendar under Rule IX in the Senate you might just as well bid farewell to it, as a usual thing. This sort of a separate bill will go on the Union Calendar in the House as a mere claim and could not come up there except at certain periods, and then by unanimous consent. So much for my objection to a separate bill.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Let me ask you, Senator, if it will not interrupt you: Was this matter submitted at length to the committee of the House?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; I know it was. It was submitted at the last session—the last time they had a rivers and harbors bill up.

Representative QUIN. Not at this time. It was at a previous conference.

Senator WILLIAMS. My colleague in the other House, Mr. QUIN, tells me it was not at this session. I know it was submitted once, because I was there.

My colleague, Senator VARDAMAN, the other day regretted my absence upon the occasion when these riparian landowners were here and were addressing you. I had no idea of addressing you on that occasion, because, of course, I am well enough acquainted with the practical course of things legislative to know that the presentation of a case which follows five or six other presentations of it goes with very little force, and I preferred to wait until I had their presentation before me for such aid as it might give me and then to sum the whole matter up separately.

Now, gentlemen, I come to the amendment itself. I shall take the trouble to read it, although it will take a little time. I read it now as amended. Leaving out the title, it reads:

"The claims of the landowners for the destruction of private property located along the Mississippi River, in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and the parish of West Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, and damage thereto by flowage or otherwise, as a result of the construction of levees along and other improvements of said river, are hereby referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment: Provided, That the landowner files a petition in said court within one year from the date of the approval of this act, and said suits, on motion of either party, may be advanced for hearing in either the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court.

"In adjudicating said claims the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take into consideration the evidence already taken in behalf of either the landowner or the Government in cases heretofore instituted in said court, where the claimant and the United States have been represented by counsel present at the taking of such evidence, and the said Court of Claims shall ascertain and find to what extent and amount any property has been damaged or injured as a result of such river improvement, and to enter judgment therefor: Provided, however, That if said Court of Claims finds that such damage or injury amounts to a destruction of such property, said court, before payment of its judgment, shall require the proper party to execute a deed of conveyance for the title to said property to the United States, and such judgments, if any, shall be paid as other judgments of said court are now paid under existing law."

The reason for putting that clause in, Mr. Chairman, was the suggestion made at the last session to this committee by Judge Taylor, the president of the Mississippi River Commission, with which the engineer in his recent report agrees, that this land would furnish a good deal of useful material for the improvement of the river. Nearly every little stream that comes down there from the hills is loaded with gravel, and that whole country has a good deal of willow, and a good deal of cottonwood, the willow especially being very highly useful in revetment work. Willow for revetment work is growing scarce and costly. This would check, even reverse the course of that misfortune. If it is left in the present condition, the land will run still more to willow and gravel, and it was the opinion of Judge Taylor that it would pay the United States Government to own it; certainly it would pay it better than to levee it; and certainly it would pay it better than to give us any other redress which has been suggested, which would be more expensive to the United States Government and without any return to it.

Then follows in my amendment this proviso:

"Provided further, however That in adjudicating said claims the Court of Claims shall permit any party who, at any time since 1890, owned or held title to said lands, or any part thereof, or interest therein, involved in the respective cases, or who, since 1890, has parted with title thereto, or become dispossessed of said lands or any part thereof, or interest therein, by reason of foreclosure proceedings for the enforcement of mortgages, tax delinquencies, or otherwise compelled to sacrifice title thereto, as a result of said injuries, to appear as a party claimant by filing an intervening petition herein, or may be made a party or parties claimant by either the original claimant or the defendant within six months after the approval of this act, setting up their right, title, or interest in and to said land, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties, but in no case shall the total of said judgment or judgments exceed the value of the land involved in the respective cases before being so injured or destroyed, and the payment of said judgment or judgments shall thereafter forever release the United States from further liability or responsibility for any damage to said lands as a result of constructing improvements along or adjacent to said river for any purpose whatever."

Then there follows the proviso that in no event, however, shall the total damages assessed as between the present holder and the parties formerly holding, and foreclosed, amount to more than the damage of a total destruction, which would be the value of the land.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Will you kindly place that amendment in the hands of the stenographer so he can set it out in the record?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. That is exactly as you propose it?

Senator WILLIAMS. That is precisely as I now propose it. The proposed amendment reads as follows:

"The claims of the landowners for the destruction of private property located along the Mississippi River, in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and the parish of West Feliciana, in the State of Louisiana, and damage thereto by flowage or otherwise, as a result of the construction of levees along and other improvements of said river, are hereby referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment: Provided, That the landowner files a petition in said court within one year from the date of the approval of this act, and said suits, on motion of either party, may be advanced for hearing in either the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court.

"In adjudicating said claims the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to take into consideration the evidence already taken in behalf of either the landowner or the Government in cases heretofore instituted in said court, where the claimant and the United States have been represented by counsel present at the taking of such evidence, and the said Court of Claims shall ascertain and find to what extent and amount any property has been damaged or injured as a result of such river improvement, and to enter judgment therefor: Provided, however, That if said Court of Claims finds that such damage or injury amounts to a destruction of such property, said court, before payment of its judgment, shall require the proper party to execute a deed of conveyance for the title to said property to the United States, and such judgments, if any, shall be paid as other judgments of said court are now paid under existing law: Provided further, however, That in adjudicating said claims the Court of Claims shall permit any party who, at any time since 1890, owned or held title to said lands, or any part thereof, or interest therein, involved in the respective cases, or who, since 1890, has parted with title thereto, or become dispossessed of, said lands, or any part thereof, or interest therein, by reason of foreclosure proceedings for the enforcement of mortgages, tax delinquencies, or otherwise compelled to sacrifice title thereto, as a result of said injuries, to appear as a party claimant by filing an intervening petition therein, or may be made a party or parties claimant by either the original claimant or the defendant within six months after the approval of this act, setting up their right, title, or interest in and to said land, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties, but in no case shall the total of said judgment or judgments exceed the value of the land involved in the respective cases before being so injured or destroyed, and the payment of said judgment or judgments shall thereafter forever release the United States from further liability or responsibility for any damage to said lands as a result of constructing improvements along or adjacent to said river for any purpose whatever."

Senator SHIELDS. What will be the probable amount of damages covered by your bill?

Senator WILLIAMS. I should dislike to be held responsible for the absolute accuracy of the statement, but I think that $180,000 or $200,000 would cover present values. That is my notion. There have been some estimates of it, and some of them will appear in the evidence of some people who were here before. I do not recall them.

Senator RANSDELL. Was not $500,000 claimed in the Jackson case?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; but that Jackson case claimed everything in sight, and not only that, but the Jackson case as first filed, Senator, contemplated not only all the claims for the land but for the mules drowned, personal property and crops washed away, and the crops the man might have made, everything lost during the year when the land was overflowed, and I do not know what all.

Now, let us see about the precedents in the case.

Senator RANSDELL. Senator, before you pass away from that, would it be satisfactory for us to limit the amount of damages that could be claimed under your amendment to $200,000?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; but——

Senator RANSDELL. You say it would probably amount to $180,000 or $200,000. Would it be satisfactory if in passing the bill we should limit the damages to that amount, to be apportioned among the different owners?

Senator WILLIAMS. It would be satisfactory to me, Senator, if that is the right amount, except this, that I do not see how you would practically do it, because landowner A comes in and makes his claim, and B, C, D, and E do, and so on down the alphabet, and if it should turn out that the claims amounted to more than the $200,000, A, B, C, and D might get paid and E might be left with nothing. That is the trouble. But certainly the United States Government can well afford to leave to its own courts, where it is represented by the Department of Justice, the determination of what the actual damage has been. I would not object to some limitation if it were practically possible to make it, but I am satisfied that the real damages properly adjudicated would not go above a proper amount; but that is merely my opinion. A limitation might be made of so much per acre—say $30 for improved and $5 for unimproved land. That is about what land was worth there when "permanent inundation" took effect; maybe something else.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Mr. Jenkins estimated that the number of acres of cultivatable land destroyed or devastated by flood was something over 100,000 acres, while the uncultivated land amounted to 390,000 acres. He estimated in one place that it would produce $50 gross of cotton every year.

* * * * * * *

Senator WILLIAMS. The chairman and you are right about that. The damages would amount to more than I was thinking—more than I stated.

Senator RANSDELL. Many times that, I would think, Senator.

Senator WILLIAMS. I will come to that again later. This matter may not be of importance to the people of the United States at large, but to the people of this district it is a matter of life and death, because they have been simply bankrupted. Many of them have been foreclosed—lost all. Their sole hope for restoration in part is here. As to the precedents for this action, Mr. Chairman, the river and harbor act of 1907 (34 Stat. L., p. 1073, and vol. 2, Laws of the U. S., Imp. R. and H., p. 1255), contained legislation similar to that set out in these amendments, and also carried an appropriation of $1,200,000, out of which any judgment rendered thereunder could be paid.

That is not only a precedent for this legislation, but is a precedent for your suggestion. In that case they appropriated a certain amount of money, and then gave authority to the Court of Claims to hear these cases, and provided that the claims should be satisfied out of this amount appropriated beforehand. The further provision then made I will read, as follows:

"Any person or corporation having any estate or interest in the premises, who shall for any reason not have been tendered payment therefor as above provided, or shall decline to accept the amount tendered therefor, may, at any time within one year from the publication of notice by the Attorney General as above provided, file a petition in the Court of Claims of the United States setting forth his right or title and the amount claimed by him as damages for the property taken; and the court shall hear and adjudicate such claims in the same manner as other claims against the United States are now by law directed to be heard and adjudicated therein: Provided, That the court shall make such special rules in respect to such cases as shall secure their hearing and adjudication with the least possible delay."

Senator RANSDELL. When was this act that you are reading from passed—that first one?

Senator WILLIAMS. 1907.

Senator RANSDELL. Was that a river and harbor act or a special act?

Senator WILLIAMS. It was a river and harbor act. Then the river and harbor act of 1881 (21 Stat. L., p. 468, and p. 33, vol. 1, U. S. Laws Improvement of Rivers and Harbors), also contains legislation similar to that set out in these amendments. This legislation had reference to the construction of a dam at Lake Winnibigoshish, on the headwaters of the Mississippi River, and is as follows:

"And it is provided, That compensation for any private property taken or appropriated for any of said improvements, and of damages to private property caused by the construction of any of said dams, by flowage or otherwise, shall be ascertained and determined under and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such private property is situated."

That, the chairman and members will notice, went further than the others, and left the damages to be adjudicated by the State courts, the United States pledging themselves to pay their judgments.

By the way, here is the language to which I referred which the river commission used in connection with the utility of these lands, from Vicksburg to Baron, if we took them over—the language I sought a moment ago and did not find:

"The land embraced in these basins is in places covered with willow, a material that would be valuable for use in the work of river improvement, and in such cases it is desirable that the ownership should be in the United States. In fact, the earlier reports of the commission recommend that such lands be acquired for that purpose."

They go on to say:

"The lands are capable of growing many kinds of valuable timber. They could be made to produce much material for revetment and other works of improvement in the river. If the fields were abandoned to natural growth, the land would be gradually built up by deposit and they might become highly valuable for cultivation."

That is, in the course of time. All this incidentally.

Now, I want to call your attention to another precedent. This was the legislation giving relief to the landowners along the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers which was enacted in March, 1897, and is to be found at Eighteenth Statutes at Large, page 506. This was the subject of a House bill, No. 4573, of the Forty-third Congress, second session, which passed the House by a unanimous vote on February 24, 1875, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that date. This bill was reported to the Senate the following day, February 25, and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The bill came from the Committee on Commerce with a favorable report and passed the Senate by a unanimous vote on March 3, 1875.

The Fox and Wisconsin Rivers are farther up north. They received a unanimous report. When the bill was being considered by the Senate Mr. Howe—Senator Howe at that time—said:

"The precedent for this bill is one under which damages were adjusted for the Des Moines River improvement."

This precedent referred to by Mr. Howe, the Des Moines River precedent, will be found in Fifteenth Statutes at Large, page 124, and became a law on July 20, 1868.

So there are these precedents of 1868, 1875, 1881, and 1887.

The legislation giving relief to the landowners along the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers remained in force from March 3, 1875, to February 1, 1888, when it was repealed (25 Stat. L., p. 4; U. S. Laws, Imp. R. & H., vol. 1, p. 476), and as a result of the enactment of this legislation approximately 400 landowners along the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers were compensated for damage to or destruction of their lands as a result of improving the rivers. The names of these landowners will be found in the various acts of Congress making appropriations to compensate them after judgment was rendered. For instance, by the act of February 1, 1888, 127 of such cases were settled (25 Stat. L., p. 4; U. S. R. & H. Laws, vol. 1, pp. 472–476).

These people, like my people, Mr. Chairman, had no right enforceable in any court of law. That is clearly admitted. Congress gave them one. They had and we have only a permissible right in the forum of justice and fair dealing and ethics and common honesty, and yet this is the way Congress dealt with them, and there is no reason why simply because they were a few degrees latitude farther north that a different course should be pursued toward my people. I repeat, the names of these landowners will be found in the various acts of Congress making appropriations to compensate them after judgment was rendered. For instance, by the act of February 1, 1888, 127 of these cases were settled. That is to be found in Twenty-fifth Statutes at Large.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Can you say whether in any of those cases where appropriations were made that the Government imposed upon the districts a proportionate part of the damages assessed?

Senator WILLIAMS. None.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. The Government paid them all?

Senator WILLIAMS. The Government paid them.

In addition to the above precedents it should be noted that the Government has in other cases compensated landowners for damage done to their land by flowage resulting from works constructed by the Government.

Of course that is on a slightly different footing, but by analogy it is persuasive at any rate. Of course a dam is not quite the same thing as a dike along the banks—a dam for the purpose of bringing slack-water navigation—but in those cases the Government has compensated the landowners. And I for my part can see no difference in principle between a case where the Government in giving slack-water navigation to a river puts in 10 or 12 dams, causing a great deal of property up above the dams to be constantly overflowed, and paying for the destruction because it was virtually an actual taking, although "consequential," and the Government building a dike along the bank of the river resulting necessarily in annual inundation, as it was anticipated to result, and known beforehand to result, so that the result was a deliberate act of the Government when it raised the flood level from 3 to 4 feet.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. I think you will find a precedent, Senator, in the case of the dam constructed by the Government at the headwaters of the Yellowstone, where they backed the water up and covered 6 acres of land.

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; I do not know how many precedents there are for that; but it has been contended that erecting a dam for slack-water navigation and permanently overflowing land in that way was somehow a different proposition from permanent overflowing from the erection of a continuous course of levees, which are mere parallel dikes or dams, resulting in the same practical damage to the landowner.

Senator SHIELDS. Are they not both in the exercise of the governmental power to improve these rivers for navigation?

Senator WILLIAMS. Both of them. When the Kanawha River was given slack-water navigation by Government constructions it was expressly for the purpose of improving navigation and also increasing facilities for interstate commerce, just precisely the reasons that underlie this continuous levee work, and I can see no difference in principle between the two things. One is a perpendicular dike or dam against water and the other is a parallel dike, and both dammings of the water result in flooding, and in this particular case of mine has resulted in permanent and annual inundation. I do not mean that the water is on all the lands all the year; but it is on them every year and goes off too late to make a crop. And so the result has been, by accepting the hills as a levee and as the practical bank of the river in high water, we have condemned the lands to public use, consequentially, it is true, and not directly, but none the less really. It was because it was done consequentially that there was no enforceable legal right in a court, but the result to the landowner and the public both is the same as if you had directly condemned the property and had bodily taken it for public use. It was practically a condemning for public use, for a public purpose beneficial to the country as a whole.

In addition to the above precedents it should also be noted that the Government has compensated landowners for damage done to their lands by flowage resulting from other works constructed by the Government. For instance, in building what is known as the Illinois & Mississippi Canal, which connects the Illinois River with the Mississippi River at or above the mouth of Rock River, the Government not only paid the landowner for the land occupied by the canal right of way but compensated him for flowage damage to that part of his land not taken for the canal right of way, and the act of Congress provided, most astonishingly, that such compensation would be assessed and determined as provided by the laws of the State of Illinois. (26 Stat. L., 449; Ill. Const. 1870, art. 2, sec. 13; 2 Star and Curtis Annotated Ill. Stat., pp. 1763, 1770, 1790, 1793; 3 Star and Curtis Annotated Ill. Stat., pp. 3965, 3967.)

The act of Congress authorizing the construction of the Illinois & Mississippi Canal authorized the Secretary of War to institute condemnation proceedings in the Circuit or District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, sitting at Chicago. Condemnation proceedings were instituted and the decree of the court showed that the landowners along the canal right of way were paid for the land actually taken and also for damage by flowage to the land not taken. A copy of said condemnation proceedings is on file in the office of the Judge Advocate General, War Department, Washington, D. C.

Here is the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Jackson and Hughes cases. I think you have already had it published in your hearings, but if not, it ought to appear somewhere—not, however, as a part of my testimony.

Senator RANSDELL. Is that the Jackson case?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; the Jackson and Hughes cases.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. I think it is printed in these hearings. I think Mr. Scott put it in the hearings.

Senator RANSDELL. I suggest it be printed as an appendix to Senator WILLIAMS's statement. (See Appendix A.)

Senator WILLIAMS. The House Committee on Claims has reported a bill to give us relief, but it has undertaken to give us the relief by a separate bill, and I have told you why I do not want any separate bill. There is a report here from the House Committee on Claims, a favorable report accompanying the bill H. R. 13581, and if my memory be not at fault, it was a unanimous report of the House committee. Am I correct about that or not?

Representative QUIN. Yes, sir; that is true.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Is that on the calendar of the House?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; but under the rules of the House bills of this sort go to the Union Calendar, and it is worse than Rule IX in the Senate. Practically one can not get it up except by unanimous consent, and of course in a matter of this sort there would be somebody to object, I suppose.

This House committee uses some language which I desire to read and insert:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13851) for the relief of the landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and in the Parish of West Feliciana, State of Louisiana, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

"The bill under consideration carries no appropriation, but as recommended by the river commission and officers of the War Department refers the claims of the landowners in these counties to a court for adjudication.

"The relief sought by this bill is the legislation prayed for by joint resolution No 14, which passed the Legislature of the State of Mississippi and was approved by Gov. Noel on February 15, 1910 (see Laws of Mississippi, 1910, p. 109, ch. 363), and by another joint resolution which passed the legislature of that State by a unanimous vote last June. Both of these resolutions memorialized Congress, and especially the Representatives in Congress from Mississippi, to enact legislation similar to that set out in the bill under consideration.

"In the first session of the Sixty-first Congress a similar bill (H. R. 6467) was referred to this committee, and by the committee referred to the War Department, and by that department to the Mississippi River Commission for report. That commission, on April 1, 1910, in returning said bill to the War Department, reported as follows:

"'There is no doubt that the lands and other property referred to in the bill have been more or less damaged by the construction of the levees along the lower Mississippi River which have been built in recent years under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission. * * * At the same time the United States has been benefited by the general improvement of the river for navigation.'"

That reminds me that some time last session Senator GALLINGER, of New Hampshire, said that we people coming here for largess from the Government to get appropriations to build levees wanted to come back and get damages after having built them. That is the old logical fallacy, Mr. Chairman, of a double or ambiguous middle. The people getting the benefit from the levee system are one set of people, and the people who are receiving the damage from the levee, for whom I am pleading, are another set of people. The people who are being benefited by the levees are not coming here to solicit compensation for damages, but the people who have been damaged by the construction are the ones who are coming. They are not even on the same part of the river.

Prior to this continuous levee system these lands on these banks between Vicksburg and Baton Rouge have been from 4 to 10 feet higher—in some cases as much as 10 feet higher—than the lands on the opposite bank of the river and were never damaged except in epochal overflows, like 1828 and 1882, and that of 1862, probably. So that the fact that the balance of the United States is benefited by the general improvement of the river is regarded by the Mississippi River Commission, differing from Senator GALLINGER, or from what seems to be his opinion, not as a reason why these people should not be paid for the damages, but as a reason why they should be paid, and the Mississippi River Commission is right in that, and not he. I continue to read the report:

"And after further stating the facts as to the damage to the east bank lands in these counties, on the question of the relief provided in said bill for the landowners, said:

"'It would be desirable to have some court or special commission do this, if possible, as a matter of justice to everybody; and if such court is to act at all, it seems just and equitable that it should consider the cases of all landowners affected, without reference to any time limitation.'

"The recommendation made by the Mississippi River Commission to the Chief of Engineers, and by the Chief of Engineers to the Secretary of War, as above referred to, is in all respects similar to the recommendations made by the river commission in its annual reports whenever reporting on the subject of the damage done to these lands. Particular attention is called to the commission's report for 1910, pages 2937-2939, and to House Document 1010, Sixty second Congress, third session, and especially to paragraph 84, page 12, where it is stated that it was desirable that the title to these east-bank lands should be in the Government, and that the early reports of the commission recommended that said lands be purchased by the Government for use in its work for river improvement. Said House Document 1010 is a report made by the Mississippi River Commission in accordance with a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, which appropriated $30,000 for the purpose of investigating the claims of these landowners and to survey said lands.

"The relief provided for in this bill is, in all respects, similar to the relief granted to the citizens along the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L., pt. 3, p. 506, chap. 166, and 25 Stat. L., p. 24)."

Skipping a part of this report, I now read from page 3, as follows:

"From Delta Point, opposite Vicksburg, to West Baton Rouge the flow of the high waters is obstructed by that part of the levee system on the west side of the river, and they are now compelled to flow over the space between that part of the levee system west of the river and the foothills east of the river in Mississippi, and which space does not have an average width of over 3 miles. This stretch of territory on the east side of the river from Vicksburg to Baton Rouge is very irregular in its width, for the foothills at several places abut on the river, as at Vicksburg, Grand Gulf, Rodney, Natchez, Ellis Cliff, Fort Adams, Tunica, and Bayou Sara or St. Francisville, making six small V or U shaped basins.

"From Baton Rouge south, instead of flowing over a territory 60 or 70 miles wide to the Gulf as formerly, the high waters of the river are now compelled to flow over the space between that part of the levee system constructed east and north of the river and that part of the said levee system constructed west and south of the river, which does not have a width of more than 2 or 3 miles at any point, and in this way the free flow of the high waters in their course to the Gulf is obstructed on both sides of the river. The Mississippi River Commission has established a grade and height for levee construction along the river which is from 3 to 5 feet above the highest known water, and the levee system as now constructed is, in the opinion of Col. Townsend, president of the Mississippi River Commission, sufficient to withstand all ordinary high waters. (P. 96, Hearings on H. R. 1749, before House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, Dec. 3 and 4, 1913.)

"In addition to these obstructions to the free flow of the high waters of the river south of Vicksburg, the high waters are brought from Cairo, south, diverted from their natural course, and confined between two lines of levees, as before stated, to the mouth of the Yazoo River, over a territory only about one-twelfth as wide as that over which the high waters flowed before levee construction, and at Brunswick, just north of the mouth of the Yazoo River, these diverted and confined waters are turned loose in volume much greater and with a current more forceful and destructive than before levee construction, on the land in these counties lying between the foothills east of the river and the line of levees west of the river, with the result that said lands on the east bank of the river between the foothills——"

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. As far back as 10 miles from the river sometimes, did you not say?

Senator WILLIAMS. Yes; in some places, and generally varies from 2 to 6 miles, but in some places it is as much as 10. They have connected the levees with the foothills at Memphis and connected them with the foothills at Vicksburg.

I call this to your attention because some gentlemen have said that while this was admitted to be a consequential damage that it was also an unintentional damage. Every man and every government is presumed to intend the natural and necessary consequences of his or its own acts. You gentlemen upon this committee knew—you were too well informed not to know—that while it was contended that confining a great river could not increase its average level or its low water level, that it must necessarily always increase its high-water level.

In the Mississippi River Commission's annual report for 1894 the river commission states very fully the injuries done the east-bank lands, and gives as a reason therefor the following:

"The subject has been thus fully presented in order that Congress, with the facts before it, will take such action in respect thereto as shall in its wisdom seem best and with a request that it may receive the early attention which its importance merits."

Then in the report for 1895 the commission renews that recommendation. This is its language. It says:

"Renews the recommendation there made that some provision be made by Congress for the adjustment of the equitable claims in such cases."

Third. In the annual report of 1896 reference is made to the same subject again, and the recommendation again repeated. Then, for the fourth time, in their annual report for 1910 they call attention to it and reenforce the previous representation. The river commission's report for 1910 states that the east-bank lands in these counties are "permanently inundated"—mark you, Mr. Chairman, this is the language of the commission—"permanently inundated" as a result of the construction of the levee system.

Here is one thing that is brought out splendidly in this House report, and I want to call it to your attention, because it is such a graphic statement of the actual situation of things. It reads:

"The area of this basin is 1,240,050 square miles, or about 41 per cent of the entire area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska and outlying possessions. That this is also a national question is further shown by the fact that the accumulated waters which the Government's levee system brings down the improved channel of the river and turns loose and diverts upon the lands of the east-bank citizens of these counties comes from 31 States of the Union, which makes the Mississippi River confined within the Government's levee system the drainage ditch of said 31 States, comprising, as heretofore stated, almost half of the territory of continental United States.

"It is a fact admitted in reports by the officers and agents of the United States charged by acts of Congress with the construction of the Government's levee system that the confinement and diverting of the waters from these 31 States has resulted in the destruction of the east-bank lands in these counties, and has driven the landowners from their homes and caused the abandonment of said lands for cultivation, and said lands before the inauguration and construction of the levee system by the Government had been successfully and profitably cultivated by the owners thereof for generations; i. e., ever since the settlement of the State of Mississippi along that section of the river, and the city of Natchez (Fort Rosalie), in Adams County, is one of the oldest settlements in the State.

"The east-bank lands in these counties were, before the construction of the Government's levee system, in their natural location, much higher than the lands along and on the west side of the river in the State of Louisiana and of considerable value, while the lands in the State of Louisiana on the west side of the river were not so valuable as agricultural lands, and since the inauguration and construction of the Government's levee system the lands protected by and behind the levee system have become much more valuable and are to-day being successfully and profitably cultivated and are valuable sugar and cotton plantations, while the east-bank lands in these counties have been destroyed and abandoned and have no agricultural value."

Gentlemen, this is a right serious thing. I need not tell you, Mr. Chairman, because you spent your early days in that neighborhood, that perhaps the very flower of the wealth, culture, and civilization of the State of Mississippi was in and around the town of Natchez, and was illustrated by the planters who lived in this very section. They had the handsomest homes, they had the best cultivated lands, and they had the best system of agriculture of any people in all that country, and that has been totally destroyed for the public benefit, and the public which is benefited by the destruction ought to pay for it.

I do not know how I could make that situation appear in language as strong and as distressful as it is in actual fact.

I understand that the land from Bayou Sara to Baton Rouge was surveyed by the engineer while he was surveying down to Bayou Sara from Vicksburg, and that his report refers to it, and that therefore it can come in here, and I have therefore included it in the amendment to the amendment. It takes in the land in the parish of West Feliciana, but I did not include the land that Senator Shields referred to or the lands in Kentucky or elsewhere. There are some lands up at Paducah, I think, not many acres, that might be put in the bill, but I want it fixed so that if anyone makes the point of order to another stretch not surveyed nor recommended it will not affect mine.

Here is also a little language in this House report that I recommend to you. It reads:

"Notwithstanding the fact that Congress made appropriations to improve the river and to 'prevent destructive floods' the work done in accordance with the plans of the river commission to improve the river caused the east-bank lands in these counties to be subject to 'destructive floods,' and as foretold by the river commission in its annual reports."

I will not read all of this report, which, however, I recommend to the perusal of the Members of the Senate, and I shall ask the stenographer to have such parts of it as I have lead penciled on the side put in the hearing as having been referred to by me immediately after what I have read.

The matter desired to be inserted is as follows:

"For the last several years the acts of Congress making appropriations for the improvement of the river each year provided for the construction of levees forming the levee system in accordance with the plans of the river commission which was to construct a connected and continuous levee system, the first act of Congress providing for the construction of levees being that of September 19, 1890. Later acts of Congress, however made appropriations not only for the construction of levees and to improve and give safety and ease to the navigation of the river, but also provided for the improvement of the river in accordance with the plans of the Mississippi River Commission as approved by the Secretary of War, to prevent destructive floods and promote and facilitate trade, commerce, and the Postal Service (see river commission's report, 1905, p. 3). Notwithstanding the fact that the Congress made appropriations to improve the river and to 'prevent destructive floods' the work done in accordance with the plans of the river commission to improve the river caused the east-bank lands in these counties to be subject to 'destructive floods,' and as foretold by the river commission in its annual reports.

"The flood of 1912, the bulk of which came from north of Cairo, Ill., being confined between the levees on both sides of the river composing the levee system, was too large to be contained within this limited space and overtopped the levees in places, causing great damage and suffering to the landowners and their tenants behind and protected by said levees and owning and living on land which the construction of the levee system had made very valuable. The Congress came to the relief of these flood sufferers of 1912 and appropriated $1,500,000 to care for and protect them and their property. Not one foot of land in these counties along this section of the river on the east bank has in any way been benefited by the construction of the levee system, but, on the other hand, has been destroyed. The appropriation of $1,500,000 for the relief of the flood sufferers of 1912 was not for the benefit of those east-bank citizens but was for the benefit and relief of citizens owning and living on land behind the levees. Maj. Normoyle, of the United States Army, in his report of the disbursement of this relief fund appropriated by Congress refers to these east-bank lands as 'abandoned lands.' Maj. Normoyle's report is published as House Document No. 1453, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and the map accompanying it shows the overflowed territory in the locality of the east-bank lands in which he operated for the relief of the 1912 flood sufferers to be west of the river and behind the levees on that side of the river, and this notwithstanding the fact that all east-bank lands west of the foothills were overflowed. The reason for this is easily explained. The landowners and the tenants of the east-bank lands had been theretofore driven from their lands and homes and said lands abandoned by them as a result of the construction of the levee system.

"Another view of this matter and the change effected by the construction of the levee system can be obtained by referring to the fact that before the construction of the levee system the high waters of the river periodically flowed over 29,790 square miles and had a free flow from Cairo without continuous obstruction on either side of the river to the Gulf of Mexico. Since the construction of the levee system 26,569 square miles are protected by the levees composing said levee system. In other words, before the construction of the levee system the high waters flowed over 29,790 square miles of territory, and since the construction of said levee system the high waters are obstructed and compelled to flow over a territory of only 3,221 square miles, showing that the high waters are now compelled to flow over a territory approximately one-tenth as large as that over which it flowed before being obstructed and diverted by levee construction. Instead of flowing, as formerly, over this large territory in a thin sheet, the high waters are now compelled to flow over a smaller territory in a much thicker sheet, or to a greater depth, and the space being only one-tenth as large, the lands lying adjacent to the river, where no levees have been constructed, are flooded much more frequently than before levee construction, for the reason that it requires less water to overflow them, and the construction of levees on both sides of the river, north of their lands, and on the west side of the river, in front of their lands, brings more water down the main channel than flowed there formerly.

"In order to secure relief at the hands of Congress numerous citizens in these counties owning east-bank lands organized the 'Association for relief to riparian owners of eastern bank of Mississippi River,' of which J. D. Frazier, of Rodney, is president, John F. Jenkins, of Natchez, Miss., secretary, and A. B. Learned, of Natchez, Miss., treasurer. The executive committee of said association consists of two members from each of the five counties, and is as follows: Dr. C. S. Highland and H. C. McCabe for the county of Warren, R. L. Hamilton and J. C. McMartin for the county of Claiborne, Hon. Jeff Truly, a former president of the Supreme Court of the State of Mississippi, and J. D. Frazier for the county of Jefferson, A. B. Learned and J. S. Chambliss for the county of Adams, and John F. Jenkins and C. Striker for the county of Wilkinson. Said association prepared a 'memorial and petition to the President and Congress of the United States,' which was presented to Congress on the 11th day of January, 1912, and published at page 803 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day.

"As far back as 1894 the Mississippi River Commission in its annual report for that year reported to Congress the damage done to the east-bank lands in these counties by the then partial construction of the levee system, and also informed Congress that 'it is not to be doubted that an immediate effect of the confinement of the flood discharge of the Mississippi River by levees is to raise the high-water plane' and that it 'will have the effect in increasing degree as the system approaches completion'; and in the same report further stated that 'it must be recognized that the result will be to inflict some, and perhaps great, hardships upon the owners of lands in the unprotected areas described'—that is, on the east bank in these counties—and said commission in the same report for 1894, after submitting the facts fully to Congress, made 'request that it may receive the early attention which its importance merits' at the hands of Congress, all of which is set out in the commission's report for that year, pages 2713–2715, and printed on page 9 of said House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

"As stated by the Mississippi River Commission in its report for 1910, 'the situation (of these east-bank citizens) is pathetic and distressing in the highest degree. That these people should be condemned to perpetual inundation without possibility of relief or redress for the sake of an improvement from which their fellow citizens are enjoying great benefits is intolerable to any man's sense of justice,' and 'the lives of the landowners are passing away and hope deferred is making their hearts sick.'

"The Mississippi River Commission has recommended that the Government take title to said east-bank lands in these counties, and if the relief which these east-bank citizens seek is given to them by Congress as set forth in said bill, the Government, under recent court decisions, becomes the riparian owner of the east-bank lands when the east-bank citizens are compensated for them. These east-bank citizens are not seeking a gratuity at the hands of Congress, but the Government will, when compensating said landowners for their property destroyed, receive in return the title to said lands, and, in fact, has had the use of said lands for several years. The construction of the levee system, as said by Senator WILLIAMS on the floor of the Senate February 21, 1913, 'virtually made their lands a part of the channel of the Mississippi River,' and 'virtually condemned for public purpose, without compensation, some of the fairest plantations which ever existed in that country.'

"The claims of the landowners in these counties are those referred to by Senator GALLINGER on the floor of the Senate January 16, 1914, when he said, 'I am inclined to think those people have a pretty good claim.' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day, p. 1859.)

"The lands in these counties are the same lands referred to by Senator CHAMBERLAIN on the floor of the Senate, January 22, 1914, when he said:

"'Ruined, Mr. President, if you please, because Congress had appropriated money to improve the navigation of the Mississippi River, and these improvements resulted in changing the channel of the river and washing out the lands on the opposite side.

* * * * * * *

"'I happen to know something about it. I was born in Mississippi. * * * I have walked along the levees, if you please, and seen that those levees have changed the channel of the Mississippi River and washed out the lands on the other side.' (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day, p. 2176.)

"The United States Court of Claims was created and given certain general jurisdiction for the relief of citizens, and 'to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' and ever since it was created Congress has, from time to time, frequently given it additional jurisdiction in special cases to further relief Congress or an executive department and at the same time give relief to citizens who had grievances against the Government, and who, under the first amendment to the Constitution, are guaranteed the right to petition the Congress for the redress of their grievances.

"Precedents for giving the Court of Claims additional jurisdiction in special cases are numerous, and some of them will be found in the Statutes at Large, as follows: Eighteenth Statutes at Large, pages 506, 507; Twenty-fifth Statutes at Large, page 1010."

I notice that my colleague, Senator VARDAMAN, said that the "question before the committee is an amendment to this bill introduced by Mr. WILLIAMS, which provides that the Federal Government shall reimburse, take over, pay to the people owning land on the east bank of the Mississippi River from Brunswick, Miss., to Bayou Sara, La." That is not quite an accurate statement of it. It provides only for taking over and paying the value of the land where the entire tract has been totally destroyed and subjected to annual overflow and where the court shall determine that there has been such a total destruction. It is only in that case that it is taken over, and then the title is given to the Government by way of partial reimbursement. In cases where there has been partial damage, of course the court will find only partial damage and there will be only partial payment.

I want to call to your attention, to refresh your memories, what Capt. Jenkins told you—that most of these lands were lands that came to these people by inheritance. They were not sold and bought recently with the idea of speculating upon the Government. There is nothing of that sort in this. These lands are inherited lands. When that part of Mississippi was first settled it was settled by people coming up the river from Louisiana, from New Orleans, and by people coming down the river from French settlements near St. Louis, and then some people trekking across the wilderness about the time of the Revolution. Some of these lands that have been thus destroyed, Mr. Chairman, have been in the ownership of families and in constant cultivation 100 years and more, some of them in the ownership of the present families since before the Spanish cloud upon the title of the lands in that Natchez district was dissipated, and before it became indisputably United States territory. These people, their lares and penates, and all that, have been sacrificed for the public good, and the public has received benefits, I have received benefits, you, Mr. RANSDELL, have received the benefits of that sacrifice—not only your and my constituents, but in our two cases we ourselves personally—and yet we are to be told that merely because those who have been sacrificed have no enforceable legal right in a court, because of the technical point of its being "consequential damages" against the Government, exercising its sovereign power of improvement of navigation, that therefore they are to receive no redress at all.

What would a man say about an argument of that sort used in connection with a man who had been damaged in the public service, crippled by machinery belonging to the Government, if it had been used about that woman down here in the Census Office who had her scalp torn off? She had no enforceable legal right. Nobody was absurd enough to suppose she had, and yet Congress very properly took the position that, being engaged in work for the benefit of the public and being injured as a consequence of that performance of work, she was entitled to damages in the court of justice and ethics and fair play held by the National Congress. Now, of course, nobody is permitted to sue the Government except upon conditions set forth and prescribed by the Government itself upon an express grant by the Government of right to sue. There is no statute of the United States which gives my left-bank people in this condition a right to sue the Government. I myself was astonished all the time that the suits were being instituted, and so far as the people of Mississippi consulted me about it I told them that, in my opinion, there was nothing in a lawsuit except to prejudice the case in the minds of lawyers, who are all too apt, if my fellow members of the bar at the table will pardon me for saying it, to confuse legalities with right and legal obligations with duties. Do not let that bother you. If you will read the decision of Judge White, you will see it goes off merely upon the point that there was no enforceable right in a court of justice. There could not be any except by a statute. That is all that these cases decide, and they ought not to prejudice this case in the slightest degree. The relief ought to go as a provision upon the rivers and harbors bill, so that the same bill which metes out the benefit to the inhabitants of the valley in the shape of improvement and protection of their lands shall be charged with the payments to those who incidentally were damaged by the benefits thus conferred upon all.

That is about all I wanted to say, and if there are any questions that Senators want to ask me, I shall try to answer them if I know how. If there is any difficulty in any of your minds further than those I have mentioned, which I have tried to obviate, I shall be glad to address myself to that.

THE WILSON DOCTRINE.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, while I am loath to ask for the printing of outside matters, I have in my hand a document designated as the "Wilson Doctrine," by Policarpo Bonilla, on how the speech of President Wilson at Mobile, Ala., has been interpreted by the Latin-American countries. I have received requests for this article from libraries in the country, and I find there are only two copies available, one belonging in the Pan-American Union and the other in the Library. I desire that it may be printed as a Senate document, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to its publication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HENRY F. HOLLIS (S. DOC. NO. 536).

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be published in the RECORD, and also as a public document, an address delivered by Senator HENRY F. HOLLIS at the Harvard Union at Cambridge, Mass., March 23, 1914. It is only seven pages in length, and is full of matter which will be of interest to the public.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed as a document and also to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS DELIVERED AT HARVARD UNION, CAMBRIDGE, MASS., MARCH 23, 1914.

[By Senator HENRY F. HOLLIS, of New Hampshire.]

"FROM ONE SENATOR'S VIEWPOINT.

"I was graduated at Harvard in 1892. I believe I am the first Harvard man of radical views to occupy a seat in the Senate.

"I do not fairly represent Harvard College in the Senate of the United States. I am quite sure that Harvard College is not representative of the United States, nor of New England. She is too conservative, too hidebound. She lags behind the times. She does not lead; she follows.

"In the Middle West the bond between some States and their leading universities is very close. The State legislatures submit questions of public policy to the college faculties, and receive opinions which largely control their action. This is particularly the case in Wisconsin. Imagine, if you please, the Legislature of Massachusetts requesting an opinion from the faculty of Harvard College! Imagine the reception it would get on Beacon Hill, if it should find its way there.

"It is a great pity that the political arm of our State and National Governments should not receive support from our colleges. Our leading college professors look on politics as low pursuit, a nasty business. Our leading legislators regard college opinion as a joke. Both these attitudes are very real; they are equally mistaken.

"There are many brave, patriotic men among the hosts of brainy, upright professors on our college faculties. There are many brave, patriotic men among the Senators of the United States. But the college men regard most politicians as corrupt and insincere, while the politicians regard college professors as impractical theorists. Worse than this, they believe that all college views are tainted by the great sums of money which have been bestowed on our colleges by men of great wealth.

"College professors are notoriously ill paid. They must live respectably; they must associate with people of culture and refinement; they must educate their children at expensive schools and colleges. They can not save enough to become independent; they are dependent for their very living on the governing board of the college; and the governing board must satisfy the rich men who make princely donations to the college. The belief is prevalent among public men in Washington that every eastern college is eating from the hand that has robbed the pockets of the people. Until this belief is dissipated Congress will have little faith in our colleges or in college men.

"There is a firm belief among public men that the President of the United States was forced from the presidency of a leading eastern college because he tried to stem the tide of snobbery and make that college democratic in the social, not the political, sense. In Stover at Yale we read the brave attempt of Owen Johnson to reveal the true weakness of our dearest rival.

"In New England our colleges still have a wide influence. A member of the faculty who makes addresses on public questions is listened to with considerable respect, but when it is learned that a college professor has been talking in favor of certain railroad policies from a supposed interest in public affairs, while he has been secretly receiving pay from the railroad whose policies he advocates, our confidence is sadly shaken.

"A college at best will act the part of an old man, a conservative old man, in politics. Worse than that, it will act the part of an old society man in politics; it is likely to be snobbish, supercilious, and overnice.

"We know that the young man is the progressive spirit, the radical in politics. As he gets older he becomes conservative, his political arteries harden, he slows down. Not until he becomes too old for radical action does he become important enough to enter the faculty. The dominant note, then, in college circles is the note of the old man, the man of influence, the conservative.

"And among the students, where youth is, we find the chill of convention, the rule of the social lion. A few leading spirits attain prominence on their merits, but in a large college the leaders, as a rule, are men of rich and influential families. The man in the baggy suit, with the country hair cut, stays in the background during his college course. He feels that he has nothing in common with the rich young blade who cuts a dash with his automobile or riding horse. He sticks to his books, gets what good he can from his college course, leaves no impress on the college constitution, and does not return for commencement. If he does drift back, he finds the same society men in charge, the same recognition of social caste, and he doesn't come back again.

"The result is that our colleges represent a very thin upper crust of our great American life. They are always respectable, always conservative, always reactionary. That is why rich men, who find things rigged about right for their money-making operations, are glad to contribute to the colleges. The colleges are the greatest dead-weight the capitalists can fasten upon the necks of the American people. The standpatter is conservative, wealth is conservative, the college is conservative. They are all in the same boat.

"My best friends will point out to me to-morrow that there is no help for this; that it has always been so and it always will be so. I admit that it has always been so; I admit that the great colleges in this country have never led in a great reform; that the great colleges in England have never led in a great reform. But I refuse to admit that colleges are incorrigible; I refuse to admit that they are beyond salvation.

"I would begin by declining gifts from men of great wealth. If new buildings are needed, I would call on the alumni for contributions, limiting the amount to be subscribed by a single donor. I would increase the income by increasing the tuition fees. An education achieved at some sacrifice is more valuable than one acquired through charity.

"College life should be made less expensive, more simple; it should be standardized. No more elaborate dormitories should be built. The popularity of the oldest dormitories in the yard shows that college men are not afraid of discomfort. New buildings should be severely plain and uniform. Men of the same college class should be quartered in similar buildings. Rooms and meals should be in fact "commons" and "commons" should be compulsory.

"Every man should be compelled to live simply and to take part in military drill once a week. Automobiles and other forms of show should be prohibited. It is not good for a man to have everything in life before he is fairly grown.

"Class elections should be by Australian ballot, preceded by primaries, and only men of high scholarship should be eligible to office. Every effort should be made to promote a democratic spirit and to crush out snobbishness. I should impose a limit on each man's allowance. If this did not suit the very rich man, he could easily find a college where he would be welcome.

"But, most important of all, college men should be taught what is wrong with the world and the way to set it right; what poverty is and where it exists, what makes it and what will prevent it; what injustice is, its causes and its remedies; the reasons for high cost of living and the way to bring it down; the problems of immigration and how to make country life worth living. They should be taught human interests, the brotherhood of man, the glory of self-sacrifice, the passion of service to mankind. They should be taught these things until they are athirst for the battle against the wrongs and evils and injustices of the world.

"When a man is distinguished in public service of any kind, he should be invited to speak to the student the truth as he sees it, so that they may catch the contagion of his spirit and the stimulus of his force and courage.

"The motto of Harvard is 'Veritas,' a Latin word meaning 'truth.' I have availed myself freely of that mute invitation to speak the truth as I see it, and I thank you for the privilege.

"But Harvard's 'Veritas' does not mean the truth of the past alone, the truth that lies buried in the page of geology, that has stood the test of centuries and has received the approval of scholars long since dead. Harvard's 'Veritas' should be the living truth, not the truth of the last century, the last generation, or the last decade, but truth in the making, the truth of the great throbbing, kindly, cruel world that pulses to-day just outside the college yard, the vital truth that makes a man boil at injustice and burn to make the next year better than the last."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have here an editorial from the Engineering News of July 2, 1914, giving a review and a criticism of the pending river and harbor bill. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A SEARCHING CRITICISM OF THE RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Senator BURTON, of Ohio, is probably the best-informed man in Congress on the Government's work for the improvement of rivers and harbors. He served for many years while in the House as chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. He was also chairman of the National Waterways Commission of 1909–10, which reviewed the whole subject of Government expenditure for the improvement of navigation and laid down the policy which the Government should follow to meet economic conditions of the present day.

Notwithstanding the publicity which was given to the report of that commission and the general discussion which has taken place on the subject, river and harbor bills continue to be framed in the same old way. It is therefore refreshing to find a man of Senator BURTON'S ability and experience coming forward with a public criticism of the present pending river and harbor bill, which deserves to attract public attention. (Senator BURTON has submitted a minority report on the river and harbor appropriation bill, printed as S. Doc. No. 522, 63d Cong., 2d sess., Rept. 599, pt. 2.) Certainly it should receive the attention of engineers, for the subjects therein discussed are subjects on which the expert technical knowledge of the engineer is essential to sound reasoning.

And at the outset it may be well to lay down what is the point of view from which river and harbor appropriations should be considered. As a matter of fact, the strong influences at work for river and harbor appropriations are first of all the local interest which judges the efficiency of a Congressman by the extent to which he can draw upon the Federal Treasury for funds to be spent within his district. Second comes the interest of those who wish appropriations made for rivers and harbors, ostensibly to improve navigation, but really for the benefit of lands subject to overflow, erosion, etc. In the third place come the interests which seek large river and harbor appropriation bills because of the opportunities for profitable contracts that may result. Finally comes the comparatively small minority which seeks Federal appropriations for the benefit of water transportation.

There can be no dissent, however, from the proposition that the last consideration is the only one that can in any way justify the use of the Nation's funds, collected from the taxpayers, upon waterways for interstate commerce. Not a few of the Congressmen who join in the scramble to secure their proper share of the distribution from the river and harbor pork barrel frankly deplore the necessity which compels them to join in a riotous waste of the public funds for which no corresponding benefit is received.

The river and harbor appropriation bill as reported by the House carried total appropriations of $43,400,000, which have been increased by the Senate to $53,680,000. Of this amount about $10,350,000 is for beginning work on projects which are to be completed under the "continuing-contract" system. This means that small sums have been appropriated to start works on projects for which much larger amounts must be appropriated in following years or the entire work will be a total loss.

In the present year the amount necessary to be appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation bill on continuing contracts will be between seven and eight million dollars. On this basis, therefore, the entire amount to be spent by the Government on river and harbor improvements during the fiscal year under the pending appropriation bill as reported in the Senate will be, in round numbers, $60,000,000.

Senator BURTON, however, rightly says that it is not the amount of the appropriation, large though it is, but the methods by which the appropriations are made that most deserves public criticism. He declares that many of the appropriations are made for waterways which under present conditions can not be profitably improved. And, further, that the bill contains large appropriations for local benefits which have little to do with navigation.

As our readers know, the idea has been spread abroad by energetic workers for river and harbor appropriations that the United States has neglected its watercourses, and that this is the reason why the traffic upon them has declined and in many cases entirely disappeared. On this subject, certainly, Senator BURTON, by reason of his long service on the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress, can speak with high authority. We quote from his report, as follows:

"An erroneous impression prevails that the Government of the United States has not been liberal in its appropriations for the improvement of rivers and inland waterways. This is altogether incorrect. More money has been expended for these purposes by this country than by any other of equal population or equal area."
